PREFACE BY THE PUBLISHER.

HAVING been enabled, in the kind providence of God, to complete the arrangements connected with the publication of this precious volume, I have now much satisfaction in placing it in the hands of my numerous and very kind friends, who have cherished me with their salutary counsel, aided me with their onerous labours, and encouraged me onwards in the perilous path of duty which was set before me. It would, however, seem ungracious in me thus to bring my labours to a close, without at least, in these few cordial sentences, acknowledging my deep sense of obligation to them. I feel myself indeed bound to do so, that I may have an opportunity of explaining the reasons which have delayed the appearance of the Work so much beyond the time originally contemplated for its completion; otherwise I should much rather avoid (especially in such a book as the Bible) any reference to transactions of so very painful and questionable a character as those which I am now called upon to record.

To many the peculiar circumstances connected with the publication of this Bible are already too well known; but as, I think, it may fairly be concluded that the Work which I have now been the privileged instrument in producing, will continue to be in the constant daily use at Family Worship, when the fingers which now pen these feeble lines shall have become the prey of the worm, and the spirit which prompted them, and originated the scheme, shall have winged its flight to a holier and happier region, it may not be out of place to give here a brief narrative of the facts connected with its history.

In the first place, then, I should premise, that seeing my venerable friend, the Rev. Dr THOMSON of Coldstream, had been by fortuitous circumstances prevented from following out his most Christian and philanthropic scheme for bringing within the reach of the humblest in the land a first-class Family Bible adapted to their means, and suited to their habits and comprehension, I resolved to embrace the first opportunity that should offer for carrying that scheme into effect. With this object mainly in view, I bought, at the sale of the stock of the Scottish Free Bible Press Company, the stereotype plates and property of the book they had been in the habit of supplying as their Family Bible. In order to render it more complete for the purpose I had before me, I determined on adding to the Bible a copious Practical Commentary, taken from the well-known productions of HENRY and SCOTT; and in putting my plan into operation, I was exceedingly gratified at being able to enlist the valuable services of the Rev. PROFESSOR EADIE to prepare and arrange the foot-notes for the Work. I felt satisfied that Dr EADIE'S well-earned fame would prove a sufficient guarantee to the public that the book itself would realise what I had projected and promised in the Prospectus that I issued.

I had barely, however, begun to move forward with my design, when certain parties, who shall here be nameless, and who were present when the purchase was made—provoked, no doubt, at the announcement of so valuable a production being offered for so small a sum—interposed, and advanced the somewhat anomalous doctrine, that although I had bought the stereotype plates without restriction of any kind whatever as to their use, and paid for them accordingly, yet I had no right given me to print from them in the contemplated form, and print I should not, if they could prevent me. The result was an expensive and vexatious action in the Court of Session, which terminated in an adverse decision. Being, however, convinced of the importance of the undertaking, I resolved, in whatever sacrifice it might involve me, to persevere in it, the more especially seeing that my supporters had come forward so warmly in my behalf—three thousand having at that period agreed to take copies of it.

I now found that the only course left me was, to prepare an entirely new set of stereotype plates to print from; and although I knew this would be attended with an enormous amount of additional outlay, I resolved at once to carry it into effect. I had been deprived, by the decision, of the intercolumnar Notes of the late Rev. John Brown Patterson, but I resolved to supply their place with equally numerous, appropriate, and useful Annotations, taken from the writings of standard Expositors and Critics. Here again I was providentially led to one most competent to undertake for me the preparing of this department, in the person of my most excellent and highly-gifted friend, the Rev. Dr M'Gilvray, of Free St Mark's, who, in the handsomest manner, agreed at once to take upon himself this duty, and thus complete anew the arrangement of the centre columns. By this means I was supplied in less than six months with a body of Notes, selected most judiciously, most carefully, and I know I may with safety add, most prayerfully, extending to between six and seven thousand, from the best biblical writers of Europe and America. This portion of the book will therefore be found very superior in every respect to what I contemplated, and far surpassing what I promised to give in my original Prospectus.

At the time when my first arrangements for the publication of this Bible were so strangely and unexpectedly arrested, I felt it necessary to inform the large body of friends and subscribers who were interested in the project, of the circumstances which had interfered with the execution of my design; and the result of this appeal to their patience and sympathy was, that three thousand additional immediately entered their names as Subscribers to the Work. And here I must not omit to mention the deep obligation under which I was brought to the Ministers of our beloved Zion, who so kindly and considerately brought the undertaking under the notice of their flocks, and so strenuously recommended it. This act of generous support they will find, I hope, no reason to regret.

I have only now to express the deep sense of gratitude which I feel to every one who has been useful to me, in helping me to carry out this somewhat arduous scheme. This I do most heartily, and may be permitted to conclude with the earnest desire, that the book now sent forth may, by the blessing of God, prove a service of lasting benefit, not only to the present, but to many succeeding, generations.

PREFACE BY DR EADIE.

THE glory of our land is not only its profusion of Bibles, but its Protestant liberty of studying and diffusing sacred truth without molestation or hindrance. The Word of God is within the reach of every one, and neither the reading nor the circulation of it is by authority proscribed. This sacred privilege, won for us by the toil and blood of our fathers, is a prime element of our national greatness. That illustrious rank which our country occupies has been secured for it as much by its Christian institutions, as by its scientific discoveries, maritime adventure, and mercantile enterprise. Its peace—its liberties—its social progress—its mechanical inventions—its means of mental culture and refinement—its numerous organisations for the relief of want, misery, disease, and old age—its myriads of ploughs, forges, looms, and ships—its vast power and extent of dominion,—have really sprung from that impulse, dignity, industry, and self-respect, which Christianity creates or deepens among a people who receive it in its original purity and integrity. Christian civilisation necessarily leads to genuine and permanent greatness; for liberty, fraternity, and equality, in their highest and widest sense, can only flourish under the shadow of the cross. While the Bible brings salvation to every one who receives it as the Word of God—and this is its great and primary mission—it also soothes and elevates the temporal condition of man. "The life that now is" is not beyond its sphere of salutary influence. The fruits of the "tree of life" refresh and satisfy the saved, but its leaves are, at the same time, "for the healing of the nations." No wonder that our reflecting and pious people hold Scripture in such high veneration, and excel all other countries in their efforts to circulate it. No wonder that our English version, which "hath done great things for us," should be prized so highly, and that in every Christian household there should be a copy—a large and a loved one—familiarly and reverentially named the "FAMILY BIBLE." No wonder that we should abhor and pity infidelity, for it is a wicked as well as a worthless creed, not less the foe of patriotism than the enemy of vital piety. The estimate in which we hold the Bible will always be a criterion of our ecclesiastical and national superiority.

The interests of true religion are at this moment threatened by two antagonists, very opposite in their nature, but ominously united in opposition to a simple and spiritual gospel. We do not allude to undisguised and honest scepticism and Popery, but to peculiar and seductive forms of both those malignant errors to be found within the pale of the Protestant churches. The truth as it is in Jesus is menaced by RITUALISM on the one hand, and RATIONALISM on the other. Alas! how many are there who place their hope of salvation in the observance of mere ceremonial and ecclesiastical routine!—who are deluded by the figment of sacramental efficacy, and the miserable deceit of baptismal regeneration!—who kneel before an altar without a sacrifice, and do homage to a priesthood without Divine right or consecration! This sad fascination has seized upon thousands, who are gradually taught to abhor Protestant truth—to sigh for a revival of the architecture and the sacerdotal forms of the middle ages—to anathematise the labours and heroism of the German, French, and British reformers, and at length to swell the number of those apostates over whose accession Popery is now so jubilant and hopeful. How melancholy is such fanaticism!—as if the life and power of religion depended on the mystic virtue of water and wine, and not upon the imparted influence of the Holy Spirit—as if the acceptance of Christian worship depended on the shape and decorations of the house where it was offered, or on the tones, gestures, and robes of him who prays with and for the people! Were the Bible felt to be the sole and supreme rule of faith and practice, very soon would this silly and superstitious frippery be overthrown. The inspired volume tells us that there is only one great High Priest—Jesus, the Son of God—that no human priesthood can therefore exist in His Church, save that of the universal "royal priesthood"—that every assumption of sacerdotal name and function on the part of the clergy is an unhallowed usurpation of Christ's title and prerogative—and that the "true circumcision," who "worship in the spirit," are accepted everywhere—in the cave as well as the cathedral—on the misty side of the mountain as well as under the fretted roof, majestic dome, and massive pillars of a sanctuary "made with hands." The great sin of ritualism is, that it places the Church in the room of the Saviour, encumbers the way of salvation with a servile and complex system of ceremonies, and so forgets the necessity of a living faith, in order to pardon, purity, and life; while it confounds the means and symbols of devotion with the possession of a devout spirit, identifies the sign with the thing signified, and contravenes Divine legislation by filling the house of God with the fruits and expedients of human authority. To the Bible, then, let us cling, as our only preservative against this fashionable form of error and mysticism. It will teach us that we are saved by the belief of the truth without any priestly intervention—that this belief not only brings us into a state of forgiveness and peace, but, by the aid of the Divine Spirit, quickens the soul, sanctifies the heart, purifies the motives, and regulates the whole life. A believer, under the influence of the grace of God, desires to feel and act as the Bible enjoins—submits in everything to the will of God, and naturally seeks in the Church only what its Divine Head has appointed to be in it—as the company of the Faithful.

Rationalism, on the other hand, makes no pretensions to superior piety. It only boasts of superior reason. It will not bow its stubborn heart to the truth of inspiration—it will not take the Bible to be the Word of God; it casts aside evangelical Christianity as slavery and a lie. Not that it assumes the language of open and unblushing infidelity, or declares Scripture to be a fable; but it takes away from the Bible its Divine authority, and deals with it as with any ancient book of human origin, subjecting it to ruthless and destructive criticism, and confining it within the limits of a narrow and deceptive philosophy. It admits the genius of the various writers of the Bible, but denies their special and Divine commission, and therefore holds itself at liberty to question any statement, deny any conclusion, modify any argument, or resist any opinion which may be found in the writings of prophets and apostles; while, by its shew of higher enlightenment and of boasted emancipation from prevailing prejudice, it seduces the unwary, and makes sad havoc among many of our young men, especially such of them as feel the pride of mental culture, and have had a little exercise in philosophical speculations. How shall we be preserved from these suicidal errors? Plainly, by taking the Bible for what it professes to be—the pure Word of God. There is as much folly in attempting to reduce or modify this claim, as there is in openly denying it. To give the writers of the Bible the credit of genius, but to deny them the gift of inspiration, is a libel on their honesty—is to assign them a place among impostors—for they unanimously maintain that they were under the supernatural control and impulse of the Holy Spirit. Till their plenary inspiration shall be disproved, let us give them that credit to which they are entitled. Let us not, in the pride of intellectual insanity, oppose our ideas to theirs, and reject whatever is not in harmony with our own views and feelings. Surely such perversion is "doing despite to the Spirit of grace." Our safety lies in believing that "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God"—that "holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." Our Bible is to us the collection of God's oracles, telling us what to believe, what to do, and what to hope for. We will not be deprived of it by the "sleight of men"—we will not deify the intellect which God has given us; but will continue to believe that the highest act of reason is the submission of faith to the teaching of the all-wise and all-true Spirit.

Thus, the opposition which evangelical truth encounters only leads us to prize the Scriptures, and to reverence them as the embodiment of the mind and will of God. That religion which is based upon an intelligent faith in the "lively oracles" must be vigorous, healthful, and progressive—nurtured by "the sincere milk of the Word," and strengthened by the promises and consolations of the Book of Life. It is as remote from sickly sentimentalism on the one hand, as it is from mere literary enjoyment and æsthetical susceptibility on the other. Nor will it be a cold and miserable abstraction, without energy and comfort, but a principle whose influence reaches to the deep places of our nature, and is felt over the whole man in its refining and transforming results. Need we say that, especially in these days of "rebuke and blasphemy," the Bible should be studied with profounder care—in these days, not merely of loose theology and sceptical prevalence, but of renewed Popish aggression and virulence? Is it not enough to vindicate our Protestantism to know, that Popery loves not the Scriptures to be among her people, warns against the reading of them by the laity, and that pope after pope condemns and anathematises their circulation? Our Scriptures are the legacy of the Reformation; and we feel a peculiar joy in knowing that, in consequence of Anglo-Saxon Protestantism and enterprise, the sun never sets on the English Bible.

And there is every reason that we should honour the Bible as the Word of God—a full and authentic revelation from heaven. It is fully, tenderly, and wisely adapted to us, as any one may discover by a careful study of the following statements, to which we beg our readers' candid and prayerful attention.

Every man who calmly reflects on his position and destiny is haunted by questions of deep and unutterable moment. Speculation upon his origin and prospects, his relations to the Great Power that made him, and to that dim and awful eternity that stretches out before him, must often fill him with anxious thought and inquiry. Indifference to these subjects is unnatural, and is not found in any unsophisticated bosom. Amidst many floating and mysterious themes, these questions will be found to occupy a palpable and prominent place in the secret and instinctive soliloquy of conscience:—How shall I know the end of my creation, and be prepared to attain it? How shall I be enabled to glorify God on earth, and be qualified to enjoy Him in eternity? These interrogations may be easily and speedily answered by an unfallen being, but they are difficult and complex to an apostate creature; for he has to solve the prior question, Shall my guilt be pardoned? shall the penalty I have incurred be remitted? shall the lost harmony of my spiritual nature be restored, and communion re-established with the Source of life and happiness? And what oracle can answer these questions? The sinner himself dares not pronounce a judgment on them: the condemned culprit may not conjecture as to the probable exercise of the royal prerogative. The universe is myriad-tongued, but it sends no response to the troubled and foreboding soul. It proclaims the "eternal power and Godhead," but it sings not of mercy. The sky in its brightness and beauty teaches not the requisite truth. The verdure and loveliness of the earth are not charged with the important disclosure. God Himself must publish His own purposes toward our lost world, and embody the revelation in a new, definite, intelligible, and popular form. This blessed work He has done in the Holy Scriptures—that book which has come down from heaven, and leads up to heaven; and which, though it has tarried so long on earth in the performance of its errand of mercy, has not lost the light and lustre of its original birthplace.

The Bible comprises the counsels and purposes of God. It deals with loftiest truths and sublimest interests. It contains no information which man may gather for himself. It does not teach science, though it never contradicts it. The exercise of man's own power may bring him to a knowledge of the physical works of God, and therefore such knowledge has not been gathered into the inspired volume; but his spiritual and eternal interests were of immediate moment, and God in mercy gave him a blessed revelation. Astronomy waited till the genius of Newton unfolded its sublimely simple laws. Chemistry rejoices in the names of Davy, Berzelius, and Liebig; but six thousand years had passed ere these philosophers appeared. How miserable would it have been for the world, if, up till the present century, men had worshipped an "unknown God," and Satan had enjoyed undisturbed supremacy over our guilty and distracted species! Therefore, no sooner had man fallen than hope was held out to him, for the promise of a Saviour was annexed to the terrible penalty. This earliest gospel, announcing the advent and victory of the woman's Seed, was the germ of all subsequent lessons.

The method of salvation is proof of the Divine origin of that Book which announces it. Originating in the tender and intense love of God, wrought out by the life and death of His Son, and applied by the influences of His Spirit, what scheme so full of God? God pervades it. The truths it unfolds are the truths of God—the dignity it offers is the image of God—the happiness it presents is the favour of God—the might it imparts is the power of God—and the heaven it prepares for is the presence of God. Could fallen and ungodly man have pictured out such an enterprise? Are not all his dreams and inventions like himself—of the earth, earthy? The very idea of salvation is too big to have originated in a human intellect—the love displayed in it too warm and glowing to have been nursed in a created heart—and the energy put forth too stupendous to have been lodged in a mortal arm. The great doctrine of the Bible proves it to be, not of man, but of God.

The method, moreover, in which this salvation has been secured is equally demonstrative of the Divine origin of the Book which describes it. The character of God is portrayed in all its loveliness and symmetry. No element of perfection is thrown into the shade. Not mercy alone is exhibited to the guilty—nor compassion alone to the wretched; but holiness preserves its untarnished radiance, and the claims of justice are fully satisfied. The government of the universe is not weakened though guilty men are forgiven. Under a human administration, if all offenders are pardoned, the law is virtually repealed; but under the plan of God, His law is confirmed in the pardon and recovery of transgressors, for Jesus has died "to satisfy Divine justice." The majesty of the law has been fully vindicated in His obedience unto death. Such a process—saving the rebel while it glorifies the law he has broken—inflicting the penalty and yet sparing and blessing the actual transgressor—crushing evil and rescuing the evil-doer—blending equity with grace, majesty with love, and severity with goodness—such an abnormal process can alone originate with Him who is "wonderful in counsel and excellent in working." A book revealing salvation through the atonement of Christ proclaims at once its Divine authorship—for it tells that infinite power, guided by boundless wisdom, and prompted by eternal and unchanging love, has been put forth to achieve the deliverance of a fallen and guilty world.

Thus there is in Scripture itself sufficient proof of its Divinity. It transcends human conception. It bears upon it the seal and impress of its authorship. It brings us the best gift of God—a salvation which satisfies all the wants and longings of the human bosom. Its God is worthy of faith and service—its law worthy of homage—its Saviour worthy of imitation in His life and of confidence in His death. Every fear is banished, every wish is anticipated, and every hope is realised. There is peace on earth and glory in heaven—happiness in life and triumph in death. There is pardon from the guilt of sin, and emancipation from its thraldom—elevation of mind above the cares and trials of life—the possession of a serene and lovely temperament—and growing maturity for eternal blessedness. What nobler gift could God present, or man accept? Therefore the charter which confirms such a boon must be as Divine as the precious blessings which it pledges to believers.

It is not our purpose to enter into any account of the other evidences which prove the Bible to be from God. Suffice it to say, that they are numerous and impressive. There are miracles—pure, holy, and Divine—the reality of which infidel sorcery is unable to disprove; and prophecies the fulfilment of which is a matter of notoriety to every candid and observant mind. Then there are the harmony of all the parts of Scripture, the originality of its doctrines, the sublimity of its style, the purity and power of its ethics, and the adaptation of its theology to an apostate race. What a "great cloud of witnesses" surround the Book of God! How many, too, have the "witness of the Spirit" within themselves, and know in their own experience that the Bible is from God!

> "When one who holds communion with the skies
> Has filled his urn where these pure waters rise,
> And once more mingles with us meaner things,
> 'Tis even as if an angel shook his wings—
> Immortal fragrance fills the circuit wide,
> That tells us whence his treasures are supplied."

We therefore take the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible, to be the Word of God. We believe it to be all inspired and all profitable. The ideas are those of God, but its language is that of man. Like the glorious Mediator whom it reveals, it unites Divinity and humanity. It is God's book, for He gave it; and man's book, for it speaks his tongue, and appeals to his heart. Scripture would have no authority unless it were inspired, for the conscience bows to no master but God. Whatever He reveals demands implicit credence. O listen to Jehovah! He speaks not in the tone of the seven thunders, but in the "still small voice." Believe the Scriptures—search the Scriptures. Doubt not. Let your faith be without reserve and without hesitation. Blessed is he that believeth! And what inducements are there not to read the Bible? It proclaims, as we have said, a God worthy of homage, of love, of confidence, and of service. It tells of a salvation, rich, glorious, free, and complete. It promises grace so powerful to help, and points to the "Good Spirit," whose prompting, directing, controlling, and sealing influences are so necessary to our final perfection. It portrays unutterable and eternal felicity, and affirms that heaven is open, not to merit, but to faith—not to works, but to the pardoned and sanctified child of God.

The varieties of style in the Word of God are meant to allure us to it. Oh, it speaks in deep and varying music! Its sublime ideas are clothed in appropriate diction. It contains the simple, natural, and transparent histories of Moses—the succinct and stirring annals of the Hebrew commonwealth—the Book of Job, with its lofty conceptions and imagery—David, the sweet singer, whose harp still dispossesses the evil spirit—the Arcadian muse of Solomon, breathing over the rich landscape, the perfumed atmosphere, of love—Isaiah, in his peerless majesty of song—Jeremiah, with sobbing bosom and weeping eye—Ezekiel, rapt in grandeur and gloom—Daniel, with crowded visions of war, conquest, and empire—Hosea, with his startling rapidity and vehemence—Amos, in rustic vigour and luxuriance—Joel, in the might of original genius—and Habakkuk, with his daring ardour and fire-winged minstrelsy. In the New Testament, we have in the four Evangelists a portraiture of Him who was clothed in the form and spake with the voice of humanity—of Him whose miracles were so numerous and beneficent, whose example was so pure and lovely, and whose death formed the expiation of human guilt. And we have also the boldness and fervour of Peter—the seraphic dignity and elevation of John—the intellectual gifts, noble enthusiasm, and powerful eloquence of the Apostle of the Gentiles. What instruction, what stimulus, what majesty, what pathos, are blended together in Scripture! "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." When God speaks, and so speaks, O, should not man listen with all earnestness and docility of spirit! "Speak, LORD, for thy servant heareth."

The Bible, moreover, is a perfect revelation. It needs no addition or supplement. The Apocrypha is superfluous. There is no saving truth which Scripture does not contain—no moral obligation which it does not unfold and enforce. Rom. x. 6–9—"The righteousness which is of faith speaketh on this wise, Say not in thine heart, Who shall ascend into heaven? (that is, to bring Christ down from above;) or, Who shall descend into the deep? (that is, to bring up Christ again from the dead.) But what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is, the word of faith which we preach; that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." There needs no new revelation of the Spirit—nor are we to expect it. Neither are the traditions of the Church of parallel authority to inspiration. They cannot bind our conscience, and we cannot bow to them, as if they were of Divine origin or sanction. God's words alone we recognise—Christ's merit alone we trust to—the Spirit alone we implore to sanctify us.

Now, if the Bible had unlimited operation, what blessed effects would speedily and necessarily follow! Give the Word of God free course—let it dwell in every heart, and govern every transaction—let it regulate all intercourse, and be the law of all human enactments—and would there not be "days of heaven upon earth"? Were all men but aiming to be what God would have them to be, equity and love would everywhere prevail—slavery and war would cease—poverty and dissipation be unheard of—and civil polity would successfully work out the problem of the greatest happiness to the greatest number. Nations would form one vast brotherhood, without cherishing rival interests, or entering into ruinous projects of self-defence. The Church would be a scene of holy communion—second only to the intercourse and enjoyment of heaven! Then might it be said, "Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them."

That time is coming. The influence of the Bible shall soon be felt in every land. It has now been translated into many languages. Its power grows with its age. "The Word of God liveth and abideth for ever." The Divine promise is, "My word shall not return unto me void." Were every parent who prizes his Family Bible to instruct his children in its principles, and seal his instructions with his tears and prayers, not only would his household after him "keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment," but others around them would be impressed with the spectacle. For not only must we maintain, but we must diffuse, the gospel. What better gift can we offer the nations than the Book of God? The Shasters, the Vedas, ay, and the Koran itself, are doomed to be dethroned before the living and victorious volume of Truth.

"O scenes surpassing fable, and yet true,
Scenes of accomplish'd bliss—which, who can see,
Though but in distant prospect, and not feel
His soul refresh'd with prospect of the joy!
Rivers of gladness water all the earth,
And clothe all climes with beauty. . . . . .
One song employs all nations; and all cry,
'Worthy the Lamb, for he was slain for us!'
The dwellers in the vales and on the rocks
Shout to each other—and the mountain-tops
From distant nations catch the flying joy,
Till, nation after nation taught the strain,
Earth rolls the rapturous hosanna round! . . . .
Come, then, and added to Thy many crowns,
Receive yet one, the crown of all the earth,
Thou who alone art worthy. . . . . .
Come, then, and added to Thy many crowns,
Receive yet one, as radiant as the rest,
Due to Thy last and most effectual work,
Thy WORD fulfilled—the conquest of a world!"

As the Commentary found in this volume has been selected from HENRY and SCOTT, our readers may be gratified by a few sentences taken from their respective Prefaces. As the Old Testament was composed by men who bear the generic name of prophets, we shall first present HENRY's account of these inspired and extraordinary messengers:—

"Concerning the prophets of the Old Testament, observe—

"I. That they were all holy men; we are assured by the apostle, that 'the prophecy came in old time by holy men of God' (and men of God they were commonly called, because they were devoted to Him), who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. They were men 'subject to like passions as we are' (so Elijah, one of the greatest of them, is said to have been (Jam. v. 17), but they were holy men—men that in the temper of their minds, and the tenor of their lives, were examples of serious piety. Though there were many pretenders, that, without warrant, said, 'Thus saith the Lord,' when He sent them not—and some that prophesied in Christ's name, but He never knew them, and they indeed were workers of iniquity (Matt. vii. 22, 23)—and though the cursing, blaspheming lips of Balaam and Caiaphas, even then when they actually designed mischief, were overruled to speak oracles—yet none were employed and commissioned to speak as prophets but those that had received the Spirit of grace and sanctification; for holiness becomes God's house.

"The Jewish doctors universally agree in this rule, That the Spirit of prophecy never rests upon any but a holy and wise man, and one whose passions are allayed;* or, as others express it, an humble man, and a man of fortitude; one that has power to keep his sensual animal part in due subjection to religion and right reason. And some of them† give this rule; That the Spirit of prophecy does not reside where there are either, on the one hand, grief and melancholy, or, on the other hand, laughter and lightness of behaviour, and impertinent, idle talk: and it is commonly observed by them, both from the musical instruments used in the schools of the prophets in Samuel's time, and from the instance of Elisha's call for a minstrel (2 Kings iii. 15), that the Divine presence does not reside with sadness, but with cheerfulness; and Elisha, they say, had not yet recovered himself from the sorrow he conceived at parting with Elijah. They have also a tradition (but I know no ground for it), that all the while Jacob mourned for Joseph, the Shechinah, or Holy Spirit, withdrew from him. Yet I believe, when David intimates that by his sin in the matter of Uriah he had lost the right Spirit, and the free Spirit (Ps. li. 10, 12), (which therefore he begs might be renewed in him, and restored to him), it was not because he was under grief, but because he was under guilt. And therefore, in order to the return of that right and free Spirit, he prays that God would create in him a clean heart.

"II. That they had all a full assurance in themselves of their Divine mission; and (though they could not always prevail to satisfy others) they were abundantly satisfied themselves, that what they delivered as from God, and in His name, was indeed from Him; and with the same assurance did the apostles speak of the Word of life, as that which they had heard, and seen, and looked on, and which their hands had handled (1 John i. 1). Nathan spake from himself, when he encouraged David to build the temple, but afterward knew he spake from God, when, in His name, he forbade him to do it.

"God had various ways of making known to His prophets the messages they were to deliver to His people; it should seem, ordinarily, to have been by the ministry of angels. In the Apocalypse, Christ is expressly said to have signified by His angel to His servant John (Rev. i. 1). It was sometimes done in a vision, when the prophet was awake; sometimes in a dream, when the prophet was asleep; and sometimes by a secret but strong impression upon the mind of the prophet. But Maimonides has laid down, as a maxim, That all prophecy makes itself known to the prophet that it is prophecy indeed; that is, says another of the rabbins, By the vigour and liveliness of the perception, whereby he apprehends the thing propounded (which Jeremiah intimates when he says, 'The word of the Lord was a fire in my bones' (Jer. xx. 9); and therefore they always spake with great assurance, knowing they should be justified (Is. l. 7).

"III. That in their prophesying, both in receiving their message from God, and in delivering it to the people, they always kept possession of their own souls (Dan. x. 8). Though sometimes their bodily strength was overpowered by the abundance of the revelations, and their eyes dazzled with the visionary light, as in the instances of Daniel and John (Rev. i. 17), yet still their understanding remained with them, and the free exercise of their reason. This is excellently well expressed by a learned writer of our own;‡ 'The prophetical Spirit seating itself in the rational powers, as well as in the imagination, did never alienate the mind, but inform and enlighten it; and they that were actuated by it always maintained a clearness and consistency of reason, with strength and solidity of judgment. For' (says he, afterwards§) 'God did not make use of idiots or fools to reveal His will by, but such whose intellectuals were entire and perfect; and He imprinted such a clear copy of His truth upon them, as that it became their own sense, being digested fully into their understandings, so that they were able to deliver and represent it to others, as truly as any can point forth his own thoughts.' God's messengers were speaking men, not speaking trumpets.

"The Fathers frequently took notice of this difference between the prophets of the Lord and the false prophets—that the pretenders to prophecy (who either were actuated by an evil spirit, or were under the force of a heated imagination) underwent alienations of mind, and delivered what they had to say in the utmost agitation and disorder, as the Pythian prophetess, who delivered her infernal oracles with many antic gestures, tearing her hair, and foaming at the mouth. And by this rule they condemned the Montanists, who pretended to prophecy, in the second century, that what they said was in a way of ecstasy, not like rational men, but like men in a frenzy. Chrysostom,‖ having described the furious, violent motions of the pretenders to prophecy, adds—'A true prophet does not do so, Sed mente sobriâ, et constanti animi statu, et intelligens quæ profert, omnia pronunciat—He understands what he utters, and utters it soberly and calmly.' And Jerome, in his preface to his Commentaries upon Nahum, observes that it is called 'The Book of the Vision of Nahum; Non enim loquitur ἐν ἐκστάσει, sed est liber intelligentis omnia quæ loquitur—For he speaks not in an ecstasy, but as one who understands everything he says.' And again,¶ 'Non ut amens loquitur propheta, nec in morem insanientium fœminarum dat sine mente sonum—The prophet speaks, not as an insane person, nor, like women wrought into fury, does he utter sound without sense.'

"IV. That they all aimed at one and the same thing, which was, to bring people to repent of their sins, and to return to God, and to do their duty to Him. This was the errand on which all God's messengers were sent, to beat down sin, and to revive and advance serious piety; the burden of every song was, 'Turn ye now every one from his evil way; amend your ways and your doings, and execute judgment between a man and his neighbour' (Jer vii. 3, 5. See Zech. vii. 8, 9; viii. 16). The scope and design of all their prophecies were, to enforce the precepts and sanctions of the law of Moses—the moral law, which is of universal and perpetual obligation. Here is nothing of the ceremonial institutes, of the carnal ordinances, that were imposed only 'till the times of reformation' (Heb. ix. 10). Those were now waxing old, and ready to vanish away; but they make it their business to press the great and weighty matters of the law—judgment, mercy, and truth.

"V. That 'they all bare witness to Jesus Christ,' and had an eye to Him. God's raising up the 'horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David,' was consonant to, and in pursuance of, what 'he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been since the world began' (Luke i. 69, 70). They prophesied of the grace that should come to us; and it was the Spirit of Christ in them, one and the same Spirit, that testified beforehand the 'sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow' (1 Pet. i. 10, 11). Christ was then made known, and yet comparatively hid, in the predictions of the prophets, as before in the types of the ceremonial law. And the learned Huetius* observes it as really admirable, that so many persons, in different ages, should conspire with one consent, as it were, to foretell, some one particular, and others another, concerning Christ, all which had, at length, their full accomplishment in Him—'Ab ipsis mundi incunabulis, per quatuor annorum millia, uno ore venturum Christum prædixerunt viri complures, in ejusque ortu, vitâ, virtutibus, rebus gestis, morte, ac totâ denique Οἰκονομία præmonstranda consenserunt—From the earliest period of time, for four thousand years, a great number of men have predicted the advent of Christ, and presented a harmonious statement of His birth, life, character, actions, and death, and of that economy which He came to establish.'

"VI. That these prophets were generally hated and abused in their several generations by those that lived with them. Stephen challenges his judges to produce an instance to the contrary—'Which of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted?' Yea, and, as it should seem, for this reason, because 'they shewed before of the coming of the Just One' (Acts vii. 52). Some there were that trembled at the word of God in their mouths, but by the most they were ridiculed and despised, and (as ministers are now by profane people) made a jest of (Hos. ix. 7). The prophet was the fool in the play. 'Wherefore came this mad fellow unto thee?' (2 Kings ix. 11) said one of the captains concerning one of the sons of the prophets. The Gentiles never treated their false prophets so ill as the Jews did their true prophets, but, on the contrary, had them always in veneration. The Jews' mocking of the messengers of the Lord, killing of the prophets, and stoning of them that were sent unto them, was as amazing, unaccountable an instance of the enmity that is in the carnal mind against God, as any that can be produced. And this makes their rejection of Christ's gospel the less strange, that the Spirit of prophecy, which, for many ages, was so much the glory of Israel, in every age met with so much opposition, and there were those that 'always resisted the Holy Ghost' in the prophets, and 'turned that glory into shame' (Acts vii. 51). But this was it that was the measure-filling sin of Israel, that brought upon them both their first destruction by the Chaldeans, and their final ruin by the Romans (2 Chron. xxxvi. 16).

"VII. That though men slighted these prophets, God owned them, and put honour upon them. As they were men of God, His immediate servants and His messengers, so He always shewed himself 'the Lord God of the holy prophets' (Rev. xxii. 6), stood by them and strengthened them, and by His Spirit they were full of power; and those that slighted them, when they had lost them, were made to know, to their confusion, that 'a prophet had been among them.' What was said of one of the primitive fathers of the prophets, was true of them all—'The Lord was with them, and did let none of their words fall to the ground' (1 Sam. iii. 19). What they said by way of warning and encouragement, for the enforcing of their calls to repentance and reformation, was to be understood conditionally. When God spake by them, either, on the one hand, to build and to plant, or, on the other hand, to pluck up and pull down, the change of the people's way might produce a change of God's way (Jer. xviii. 7-10); such was Jonah's prophecy of Nineveh's ruin within forty days; or God might sometimes be better than His word in granting a reprieve. But what they said by way of prediction of a particular matter, and as a sign, did always come to pass exactly as it was foretold; yea, and the general predictions, sooner or later, 'took hold' even of those that would fain have got clear of them (Zech. i. 6); for this is that which God glories in, that He 'confirms the word of his servants,' and 'performs the counsel of his messengers' (Is. xliv. 26)."

Concerning the great successors of the prophets—the apostles—from whom proceeded the writings of the New Testament, SCOTT thus speaks:—

"Should it be granted that our Lord's own words demonstrate the whole Old Testament to be 'given by inspiration from God,' as far as men reverence and believe His testimony, yet does it follow that the books of the New Testament admit of the same kind of proof from the words of Christ himself? Let us briefly examine this subject also. It is not, indeed, practicable to adduce so large a body of evidence as hath been brought in the former case; nor is it necessary: yet I apprehend that the argument may, in a short compass, be made very conclusive. When Peter confessed Jesus to be 'the Christ, the Son of the living God,' He answered, 'I will give thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.' Peter had spoken in the name of the other apostles, as well as in his own; and it is generally allowed that the answer included them also. Indeed, this appears by another passage of similar import, in which they were all addressed.

"If it be allowed, that this absolute promise was given exclusively to the apostles, we must next inquire how they could exercise this power of binding or loosing, especially after their decease, except by their doctrine? And where must the Church, or the world, look for that doctrine, if not in their writings? Should we suppose that the exercise of this exclusive authority was confined to the short time of their continuance on earth, then the Church has ever since been left destitute of any rule, either for censures or absolutions, even of a declarative nature; and also of all criteria for the discrimination of true Christians from other men, either for the purpose of self-examination or for the regulation of our conduct towards 'the household of faith,' and the world around us; but if this promise was not exclusively made to the apostles, nor the authority given by it intended to be exercised according to their doctrine, the consequence must be, either that there are, in every age, ministers of religion possessed of this absolute power of binding and loosing, or that the words of Christ have not received their accomplishment. And, as it does not seem to accord with the prevailing sentiments of this age, to invest ministers of any kind or description with such an infallible and final authority, we may, I apprehend, be allowed to conclude, that the promise was made exclusively to the apostles, and was fulfilled when they were inspired by the Holy Spirit, to deliver that doctrine to the Church, according to which the state of all men, in respect of acceptance or condemnation, is and will be finally decided. If this be allowed, it will inevitably follow, that our Lord's express testimony proves that their writings are a Divine revelation; for in them, especially, they delivered to the Church what they received from the Lord, and these have been, and will be to all subsequent generations, exclusively 'the doctrine of Christ.'

"The night before His crucifixion, our blessed Saviour repeatedly promised to send to His apostles 'the Spirit of truth, who should guide them into all truth,' and 'shew them things to come;' who should 'teach them all things, and bring all things to their remembrance, whatsoever he had said unto them;' and who 'should receive of his, and shew it to them.' There is a subordinate sense, in which these promises are, in a measure, accomplished to all true Christians; but the persons who advance doubts respecting the Divine authority of the books contained in the New Testament, will scarcely deny that they are addressed, in a vastly superior sense, to the apostles and those immediately connected with them. Now, the Spirit was given to them, as well as to others, 'to profit withal;' and it is undeniable, that genuine Christianity, without unremitted miracles, could be delivered down to future ages for the profit of mankind, only by writings, in which it should be stated without error or corrupt mixture, and preserved as a sacred deposit in the Church from generation to generation. What, then, could the Holy Spirit, promised in such strong expressions to the apostles, be so rationally supposed to do for them, as to guide their minds, when they dictated those writings, by which it was evidently the design of Providence that the doctrine of Christ should be perpetuated in the Church? Indeed, either they did deliver the doctrine of their Lord and Master, pure and uncorrupted, to mankind, or they did not: if they did not, the revelation, which God made of himself by His well-beloved Son, has answered very little purpose; as no man, without a new revelation properly so called, can, or ever could, distinguish the truths of Christ from the errors of the apostles; but if they did deliver their doctrine pure and uncorrupted to mankind, why should we maintain that they were preserved from error when preaching the gospel, in which one generation of men alone was immediately concerned, and yet left to fall into errors in their writings, in which all future ages and nations were most deeply interested? If, when they were brought before governors for a testimony to them, 'it was not they that spoke, but the Holy Spirit who spake by them;' we may surely conclude, that what they wrote for a testimony to all future ages and nations, was arranged under the same efficacious teaching and superintendency.

"Our Lord, just before His ascension, renewed, as it were, and ratified, His commission to the apostles: 'All power,' says He, 'is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world.' 'Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature: he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned.' But none, those alone excepted to whom the apostles personally preached, can have any concern in this important declaration, unless the doctrine of Christ, delivered to the apostles, may be certainly found in their writings.—Our Lord, just before His crucifixion, intercedes for His whole future Church in these words—'Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word;' and, indeed, all real Christians of every age have believed in Him, not so much through the word of the ministers who preached to them, as through that of the apostles, by which their doctrine must be tried; from which, if sound, it is deduced; and to which it is properly their custom to make an unreserved appeal. In this sense, St Paul says that believers are 'built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief corner-stone:' for the Old Testament written by the prophets, and the New by the apostles, under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, contain that doctrine, which is the foundation of the faith and hope of the whole Church, as resting on Christ, and united in Him into an holy temple, 'an habitation of God through the Spirit.'

"The several books of the New Testament were written by the apostles themselves—excepting the Gospels of Mark and Luke, and the Acts of the Apostles; and these were penned by the attendants of the apostles, and under their immediate inspection, and consequently were equally authenticated by them, as if they had themselves written them. If any should object, that Paul was not one of those apostles to whom Christ gave his express testimony, and yet he wrote a great part of the Epistles; it may be answered, first, that there is no alternative between denying all the facts recorded concerning him, or allowing his apostolical authority in its fullest extent; or that 'he was not a whit behind the very chiefest apostles:' and, secondly, that Peter has attested his epistles to be a part of the Scriptures, calling him 'our beloved brother Paul.' If, therefore, our Lord's own words authenticate the writings of the other apostles as a Divine revelation, Peter, who in some respects might be called the chief of the apostles, authenticates by Divine inspiration the writings of his beloved brother Paul.

"Finally, the only portion of Scripture of which our Lord can in any sense be called the writer, is that which contains the epistles to the seven churches in Asia, which He dictated to the apostle John, as His amanuensis. All His discourses (as well as His miracles, and the events of His life, death, resurrection, and ascension) were written, not by himself, but by the evangelists, two of whom were not apostles. What greater assurance, then, have we that they recorded faithfully His words, than that the apostles faithfully delivered His doctrine to mankind? If the evangelists were not inspired, in recording His words, we are not infallibly sure that He spoke what they ascribe to Him: and why should we allow the Divine inspiration of His historians, in recording His words, and yet doubt the Divine inspiration of His apostles, in communicating His doctrine to the Church and to the world?"

It would greatly exceed our space to go into a minute and detailed analysis of the merits of the two Commentaries from which our selections have been made. Very unlike in many respects, they have still many kindred beauties. Both are characterised by profound reverence for the Word of God—earnest desire to enter into its meaning and spirit—an experimental and prolonged acquaintance with the salvation it reveals—and an intense and prayerful solicitude for the eternal welfare of their readers. Both have been appreciated by the churches, and are often spoken of as if they were twin productions. Matthew Henry began his Commentary in the year 1704, when he was a minister in Chester; and in November 1706 was published the first volume, containing the exposition of the Pentateuch; in 1708, the second volume, comprising the Historical Books; in 1710, the third volume, including the Poetical Books; and the fourth, finishing the Old Testament, appeared in 1712. By this time the author had removed to Hackney; still, by the middle of 1714, the first volume on the New Testament, embracing the Gospels and the Acts, had been prepared and issued. Some progress also had been made in the composition of the last volume of the Work, when death interrupted his labours, and the Expositor passed into that world of light and joy where the presence of the Great Teacher supersedes such labours. He died suddenly, of apoplexy, 22d June 1714, at Nantwich, during a missionary tour. The Exposition was continued by several friends, who had the advantage of his notes, yet we miss the master spirit. The toils of these ten years in preparing such a laborious work must have been great and continuous, but his heart was in it. His prayer was surely answered—"God, by his grace, grant me to fill up time, to be busy while working time lasts." His incessant progress in the work may be gathered from an incidental record in his diary. The reference is to the birth of a daughter—"Between two and three o'clock this morning, while my wife was ill, I retired to my study to seek God for her and my children. Being willing to redeem time, I did a little at my Exposition." The spirit in which the Commentary was written is apparent from many entries in his diary:—July 19—"Through the good hand of my God, I finished Genesis. The Lord still go on with me." May 27—"Studied, preparing to begin Joshua in the help of God." April 10—"Began the fourth volume. Christo auspice pergo. I humbly begged the Divine assistance, and go forth in the strength of the Lord God." April 17—"Finished Acts, and with it the fifth volume. Blessed be God that has helped me and spared me. All the praise be to God." Surely an Exposition so begun and so prosecuted must have been baptized "into the Spirit of Christ." Every page bears witness. His own views and feelings in originating and carrying on his great work are told by himself with unaffected modesty and simplicity:—

"The ministers of Christ are ministers to the Spirit for the good of the Church; their business is to open and apply the Scripture—thence they must fetch their knowledge, thence their doctrines, devotions, directions, and admonitions, and thence their very language and expression. Expounding the Scriptures was the most usual way of preaching in the first and purest ages of the Church. What have the Levites to do but to teach Jacob the law (Deut. xxxiii. 10); not only to read it, but to 'give the sense, and cause them to understand the reading'? (Neh. viii. 8.) 'How shall they do this, except some man guide them?' (Acts viii. 31.) As ministers would hardly be believed without Bibles to back them, so Bibles would hardly be understood without ministers to explain them; but if, having both, we perish in ignorance and unbelief, our blood will be upon our own heads.

"Many helps, I know, we have of this kind in our own language, which we have a great deal of reason to value, and to be very thankful to God for; but the Scripture is a subject that can never be exhausted. 'Semper habet aliquid relegentibus—However frequently we read it, we shall always meet with something new.' When David had amassed a vast treasure for the building of the temple, yet saith he to Solomon, 'Thou mayest add thereto' (1 Chron. xxii. 14). Such a treasure is Scripture-knowledge; it is still capable of increase, till we come all to the perfect man.

"If any desire to know how so mean and obscure a person as I am, who in learning, judgment, felicity of expression, and all advantages for such a service, am less than the least of all my Master's servants, came to venture upon so great a work, I can give no other account of it than this:—It has long been my practice, what little time I had to spare in my study, from the constant preparations for the pulpit, to spend it in drawing up expositions upon some parts of the New Testament, not so much for my own use, as purely for my own entertainment, because I knew not how to employ my thoughts and time more to my satisfaction. 'Trahit sua quemque voluptas—Every man that studies hath some beloved study, which is his delight above any other;' and this is mine. It is that learning which it was my happiness from a child to be trained up in, by my ever-honoured father, whose memory must always be very dear and precious to me: he often reminded me that a good textuary is a good divine; and that I should read other books with this in my eye, that I might be the better able to understand and apply the Scripture.

"But we are concerned not only to understand what we read, but to improve it to some good purpose; and, in order thereunto, to be affected with it, and to receive the impressions of it. The Word of God is designed to be not only a 'light to our eyes,' the entertaining subject of our contemplation, but a 'light to our feet' and a 'lamp to our paths' (Ps. cxix. 106), to direct us in the way of our duty, and to prevent our turning aside into any by-way. We must, therefore, in searching the Scriptures, inquire not only 'What is this?' but 'What is this to us?' What use may we make of it? How may we accommodate it to some of the purposes of that Divine and heavenly life which, by the grace of God, we are resolved to live? Inquiries of this kind I have here aimed to answer.

"When the stone is rolled from the well's mouth by a critical explication of the text, still there are those who would both drink themselves, and water their flocks; but they complain that the 'well is deep,' and 'they have nothing to draw.' How then shall they come by this living water? Some such may, perhaps, find a bucket here, or water drawn to their hands; and pleased enough shall I be with this office of the Gibeonites, to 'draw water for the congregation of the Lord' out of those wells of salvation.

"That which I aim at in the exposition is, to give what I thought the genuine sense, and to make it as plain as I could to ordinary capacities, not troubling my readers with the different sentiments of expositors."

No one who has read Henry's Commentary can doubt the author's success in his work. His own ideal has been, to a marvellous extent, realised. He "served his own generation," and he has left a precious legacy to the churches. The Commentary is marked by many peculiar and blended excellencies. We might refer to its simplicity, spirituality, and pregnancy of meaning—its fulness and variety of illustration—its deep and exquisite pathos—its racy humour—its pungent and powerful appeals—its homely and unaffected imagery—its quaint and striking allusions—its pervading practical applications—its terse and sententious epigrams—its wondrous insight into the working of human motive and passion—its shrewd remarks upon the character and circumstances of society, and its felicitous appropriation of those miscellaneous stores with which long study and experience had enriched the mind of the Expositor. Maxims of prudence, as well as of piety, are to be found in the comment and notes—maxims so happily phrased as to merit the currency of proverbs. Legal terms are often curiously inlaid with the best effect; shewing that his early studies at Gray's Inn had not been without advantage. The book, as a whole, has few parallels among uninspired productions.

Scott's Commentary was produced amidst disadvantages, under which many men would have sunk. His mind was not of the same elastic character as Henry's, but it was endowed with great powers of application. Scott does not sparkle, but he is always judicious. His Exposition is a very equal production. There is scarce a paragraph of which you can say that in it he excels himself. Sobriety of thought distinguishes all his writings. Occasionally much information is condensed into a small compass. His illustrations are compact and weighty; and his treatment of infidel objections is usually powerful and conclusive. He pours forth his strength on such arguments, and wins a decided victory. And he never forgets to reason, and reason well, with Socinian heretics; for his own experience qualified him for the work, as may be seen in his spiritual biography, "The Force of Truth." His aim was to be eminently practical, though many of his criticisms indicate acuteness and erudition. The "Practical Observations" are therefore very carefully composed, and the truths of Scripture are brought to bear with ingenious and pointed fidelity on the maxims and institutions, as well as the men and manners, of modern times. While preceding expositors were carefully studied by him, yet he calmly thought out every point for himself, and delighted in independent investigation. Everywhere there appears an honest desire to find out, not merely a sense which may be plausible, but to find out the sense of Scripture. His strict adherence to evangelical truth was not an official but a passionate attachment with him; and that he was "ready to give an answer to every man that asked a reason of the hope that was in him," was evinced in his manly and comprehensive reply to a dignitary of his own Church—Bishop Tomline.

Few books have commanded so large and so constant a sale as Scott's Commentary. The first edition, which was begun in 1788, and was published in numbers, consisted of five thousand copies; the second edition, in 1805, was one of two thousand; an edition of similar size was published in 1810; a fourth, of three thousand copies, in 1812; and another was stereotyped in 1822, the revision of which was the last and cherished work of the author, and he had four times engaged in a similar service. Many issues have been made since his death, and thousands of copies have also been sold in the United States of America. During the author's lifetime, the sales amounted to nearly £200,000. Scott's Commentary thus continues to "praise him in the gates." The first edition was written to the demands of the press, "in weakness and in fear, and in much trembling," and amidst the external discomfort of a limited income and a growing family. The publication led him, moreover, into pecuniary embarrassment; but the popularity of the work at length relieved him of all such anxiety. Revised and re-revised from time to time by the studious author, it presents us with his best and most matured thoughts, opinions, and criticisms. Of the aim and character of his own labour he thus writes:—

"It is in no degree the design of this publication, to detract from the merit of former commentators, or to intimate that anything will here be added, which has never before been advanced: but the author having for many years made the Bible his daily and principal study, and having bestowed great pains to satisfy his own mind, as to the meaning of most parts of Scripture, and the practical use which should be made of them; and supposing also that his talent chiefly lies, in speaking plainly and intelligibly, to persons of ordinary capacity and information; he adopts this method of communicating his views of Divine truth, in connexion with the Scriptures themselves, from which he has deduced them.

"Some comments are far too learned for common people, and some too voluminous; while others are too compendious, to admit either any adequate explanation or application of the several subjects which fall under consideration. Some are in very few hands, and not likely to be more generally read; and others, however excellent, are to numbers antiquated, through that fastidiousness which disrelishes the style and manner of former, and perhaps better, times. Were the present attempt, therefore, made, almost entirely upon the plan of former expositions, it would not, if duly executed, be found supernumerary. But, in arranging old truths, the author purposes to adopt something of a new method. Not indeed entirely new: for Brown's Self-interpreting Bible suggested the idea; and the improvements in Doddridge's Family Expositor of the New Testament were proposed, as, in some respects, models for imitation. He has often remarked, that some persons so confine their interpretation of Scripture, to its meaning and use, with respect of those who were immediately addressed, as to leave the reader in doubt whether he is at all concerned in it, or can derive any instruction from it; while others so immediately and abruptly apply to the persons whom they address the passages which they undertake to explain and enforce, without inquiring whether they be, in character and situation, similar to those to whom the prophets and apostles spoke or wrote, that their instructions seem rather more like an immediate revelation from God, than the explanation, and practical improvement, of a revelation given many ages ago. As this must be unsatisfactory to men of reflection, and as it is frequently connected with inattention to the primary meaning of the passage (if it be not a fanciful misinterpretation of it), numbers are ready to conclude that the Scriptures have no precise meaning in themselves, but may be modelled almost to anything by men of lively imaginations and superior ingenuity. It therefore occurred to the author, that one remedy of these evils (if not the best remedy) would be, to keep the two parts distinct; and first to explain in the notes the primary meaning, as addressed to the writer's contemporaries, and then, in practical observations, to shew what we may learn from each passage, allowing for all difference in circumstances, and in every other respect. It is, indeed, far more easy to form a plan of this kind than duly to execute it; but this has been the purpose of the present attempt."

It is now the place to say a few words as to the principles on which the Commentary found in this volume has been compiled. Had we blended the two expositions of Henry and Scott, their characteristic excellencies would have disappeared in such an indiscriminate amalgamation; and had we re-written a continuous comment out of their bulky volumes, justice would not have been done to the respective authors, and their special opinions would have lost the zest and flavour of their own idiom and composition. It was therefore judged best that the views of each commentator, so far as given, should be given in his own words, and that his name should be attached to the excerpt. Our space could not contain a large quantity of matter, but we have endeavoured to illustrate the most important and interesting paragraphs of the various chapters. What we deemed of superior excellence in Scott or Henry has been preferred, and verses of more weight or difficulty than others have been usually chosen for formal illustration; so that, with the addition of the very numerous and useful notes printed between the columns, the reader will have a Commentary much fuller by far than he may be disposed to anticipate. And that large and interesting class especially, in reference to whom this publication is designated the WORKING MAN'S FAMILY BIBLE, will find that their advantage has been consulted in the choice of materials. Leisure is denied them for extended reading and study. The original tomes of Henry and Scott may be found by them to be too ponderous for successful and thorough perusal; and may we not say to them that such portions of these authors as are of most interest to them are here collected, and that the selections are of such an extent as to occupy all the time they can ordinarily give to domestic reading of the Word of God? To enable them to perceive what portion of the chapter is illustrated, the verses are usually marked, and a brief title is also given as a heading to the various extracts.

In a word, let those into whose hands this Bible may come, thank God for His oracles. Whatever their position in society, let them delight themselves in the law of God. They will find that obedience to it lightens the cares and lessens the burden of life, that it sweetens the scantiest fare, and confers a species of exalted and glowing happiness, which the gifts of the world are unable to bestow. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee." He who has imbibed the spirit of the Bible will feel himself independent of external circumstances—for "the good man is satisfied from himself." He sleeps on a soft pillow who has a "conscience purged from dead works to serve the living God." He who has God's oracles written on his heart, is wise beyond the teaching of human science, is an enfranchised citizen of no mean commonwealth, and a chartered heir of no vulgar or transient possession. O that all among us were humble and prayerful students of the Divine Word, that every parent made it the grand text-book of his household instructions, and that every one of our youth, "from a child," was acquainted with the Holy Scriptures! Then should many disturbing elements in society be rectified under the equitable and benignant reign of Christianity. "The finest of the wheat," and "honey out of the rock," are the samples of its plenty—the kid slumbering in the bosom of the leopard, is the symbol of its peace—and the labourer reposing under the shade of his "vine and fig-tree," is the image of its security and contentment. O that every family in our nation were thus a nursery for heaven! Then we should be called "Hephzibah, and our land Beulah."

We have no higher reward than that our labours should, in some degree, be instrumental in reviving or increasing the love and practice of domestic tuition and devotion, and that the thousands of families who have expressed their anxious desire to have this copy of Scripture, may feel themselves summoned, by the possession of it, to make their FAMILY BIBLE the daily assistant and companion of their ministrations at the family altar. Such a result is worth labouring for—is worth praying for. "Establish Thou the work of our hands upon us." We cannot despond in so good a cause. Our faith is in "Him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think." And were our anticipations crowned with the blessing, would not a brighter and holier career be entered on by our nation—all its pursuits and enjoyments "sanctified by the Word of God and prayer"—its diadem, a crown of righteousness—its senate enriched with wisdom and patriotism—its tribunals, scenes of cheap and speedy justice—its nobles adorned with the insignia of true nobility—its power armed in the cause of a catholic philanthropy—its wealth neither adored nor abused—its industry blessed with a healthful activity and a genial satisfaction—all its ranks attached by living and reciprocal sympathies—and its churches united, chivalrous, and successful in gaining the spiritual conquest of the world? "Surely his salvation is nigh them that fear him; that glory may dwell in our land. Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other. Truth shall spring out of the earth, and righteousness shall look down from heaven. Yea, the Lord shall give that which is good, and our land shall yield her increase. Righteousness shall go before him, and shall set us in the way of his steps."

THE FIRST BOOK OF MOSES,

CALLED

GENESIS.

THE term Pentateuch, under which title are included the five books usually ascribed to Moses, is derived from the Greek Πενταteυχος, Pentateuchos, a compound of πεντε, pente, five, and τευχος, teuchos, an implement or volume, i. e., the fivefold volume. The Hebrew appellation is חמשי תורה משה, the five-fifths of the law; or abbreviated חמשה חומשים, the five-fifths. Each book by itself was called חומש, a fifth. The more common Hebrew name of the Pentateuch is תורה, hattorah, the law, so called because the books contain the civil and sacred laws of the Hebrew nation. This collective designation of the books of Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy, is of very remote antiquity, though we have no certain information when or by whom it was first introduced. As, however, the names of these books are evidently derived from the Greek, and as the five books of Moses are expressly mentioned by Josephus, who wrote only a few years after Christ, we have every reason to believe that the appellation Pentateuch was prefixed to the version of the Septuagint.

The several books constituting the Pentateuch were probably composed in one continued work, as they form, to this day, but one rolled volume in the Hebrew manuscripts. In that form, however, they were marked by divisions into what were termed parashahs or parshioth (Heb. פרשה, parashah; plural, פרשיות, parshioth),—i.e., separations, sections, divisions; from Chal. פרש, perash, to distinguish, divide, discriminate. Of these, which are plainly indicated in all editions of the Hebrew Bible, either by the letters פפ (p), or סס (s), there were fifty-four, one being read every Sabbath day in the synagogue. Each of these larger sections is further denoted by its first, or first important word, which serves as a title to it. Thus the title of the first parashah in Genesis is בראשית, in the beginning, the word with which it begins; that of the second, Gen. vi. 9, נח, Noah; that of the third, Gen. xii. 1, לך־לך, go for thyself, &c. These titles are generally written as a running caption at the head of the page immediately after the title of the book. Of the parashahs there are twelve in Genesis, eleven in Exodus, ten in Leviticus, ten in Numbers, and eleven in Deuteronomy, making fifty-four in all. It is probable that the Hebrew names of the books of the Pentateuch—viz., בראשית, bereshith, שמות, shemoth, ויקרא, vayikra, במדבר, bemidbar, דברים, haddevarim, &c., were originally the titles of the sections or parashahs with which their commencements coincide. These parashahs were subdivided into smaller sections, termed sederim (Heb. סדרים), i. e., orders or ranks, denoted by the Heb. ס, p, or ס, s.

At what time, or by whose means, the five leading portions of the Pentateuch came to be popularly distinguished as five separate books, bearing each of them a distinct title, we have no means of ascertaining. As they are designated by their present Greek appellations in the version of the Septuagint, it is certain that the distinction is at least as ancient as the era of that work, and how much earlier it may have obtained we know not. As it is a matter of little practical moment, it may safely be left among many other unsolved problems of biblical archæology.

The five books of Moses are written in pure Hebrew, with some diversity of style, such as naturally springs from the diversity of the subjects of which it treats; but throughout with the utmost simplicity, combined with an admirable force and vividness of expression. Of their inspiration and canonical authority no doubt has ever been entertained by the Church. Moses conversed with God "face to face as man speaketh unto his friend" (Ex. xxxiii. 11); he was privileged to address God at all times (Ex. xxv. 22; Num. vii. 89; ix. 8); and was invested with the power of working miracles (Ex. viii. 19), et al. He affirms that what he delivered was by the command and at the suggestion of the Almighty; and the sacred writers of the New Testament uniformly acknowledge the inspired authority and divine legation of Moses. The Pentateuch, immediately after its composition, was deposited by the ark in the tabernacle (Deut. xxxi. 26); it was read every Sabbath day in the synagogues (Luke iv. 16; Acts xiii. 15, 27; xv. 21); and in the most solemn manner every seventh year (Deut. xxxi. 10, et seq.); the supreme ruler in Israel was obliged to copy it (Deut. xvii. 18, 19; xxvii. 3); the people were commanded to teach it diligently to their children (Lev. x. 11; Deut. vi. 6–9); and it was preserved by the Israelites with the most vigilant care, as the divine record of their civil and religious polity. Its being thus guarded as a sacred deposit is the surest guarantee that it has descended to us in a general uncorrupted purity.

We have already adverted to the manner in which the Hebrew titles of the five books of Moses may have originated. Whether this were the fact or not, yet according to the existing arrangement in all printed copies of the Hebrew Bible, these books are named from the first word occurring in each. The original title of the present, therefore, is בראשית, bereshith, in the beginning, from its commencing words. But in the Greek, which is followed in our version, the title is, Γενεσις, genesis, generation, or production, from the account of the origin of the visible creation with which the book opens. The Greek titles of the remaining books of the Pentateuch bear a similar relation to their contents, as will appear when we come to treat of each in its turn.

The claim of Moses to the authorship of this book is of course made out by the same arguments which go to ascertain the entire Pentateuch as his production. As these have been already considered, it will be unnecessary here to repeat them. The general scope of the book is to give an authentic though brief history of the creation, and the early ages of the world to the flood, and thenceforward to trace more particularly the origin and the varied fortunes of that remarkable people who were chosen by God as the depositaries of the true religion, and of the promise of the Messiah. The following synopsis, arranged in historical and chronological order, will give a condensed view of its contents, which cover a period of 2369 years:—

1. The Creation, chap. i., ii.
2. Institution of the Sabbath, and fall of man, chap. ii., iii.
3. History of Adam and his descendants till the deluge, chap. iv.
4. Genealogy of the patriarchs, chap. v.
5. State of the world immediately preceding the deluge, chap. vi., vii. 1-5.
6. The deluge, chap. vii. 5 to end, viii. 1-13.
7. The covenant with Noah, chap. viii. 13 to end; ix. 1-18.
8. Noah prophesies the fate of his sons, chap. ix. 18 to end.
9. The confusion of tongues, and dispersion of mankind, chap. ix. 1-10; x., xi. 10-27.
10. The life of Abraham, chap. xi. 27, to xxv. 11.
11. From the death of Abraham to the selling of Joseph, chap. xxv. 11, to xxxvi.
12. History of Joseph and his family in Egypt, chap. xxxvii. to xlvii. 27.
13. Death of Jacob and of the patriarchs, chap. xlvii. 27, to l.

CHAP. I.

The creation of heaven and earth, 1; of man in the image of God, 26. The appointment of food, 29.

A. M. 1.—B. C. 4004.

IN [a]the beginning [b]God created the heaven and the earth.

2 And the earth was [c]without form, and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep: [d]and the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters.

3 ¶ And [e]God said, [f]Let there be light: and there was light.

4 And God saw the light, that it was good; and God [g]divided the light from the darkness.

5 And God called the light [h]Day, and the darkness he called Night. [i]And the evening and the morning were the first day.

6 ¶ And God said, [j]Let there be a [k]firmament in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters.

7 And God made the firmament, and [l]divided the waters which were under the firmament, from the waters which were [m]above the firmament; [n]and it was so.

8 And [o]God called the firmament Heaven: [p]And the evening and the morning were the second day.

9 ¶ And God said, [q]Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together unto one place, and let the dry land appear: and it was so.

10 And God called the dry land Earth, and the gathering together of the waters called he Seas: [r]and God saw that it was good.

11 And God said, [s]Let the earth bring forth [t]grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit-tree yielding [u]fruit after his kind.

CHAP. I. CREATION.—We may notice the effect produced; the heaven and the earth, that is, the world, including the whole frame and furniture of the universe, the world and all things therein, Acts xvii. 24. The world is a great house, consisting of upper and lower stories, the structure stately and magnificent, uniform, and convenient, and every room well and wisely furnished. It is the visible part of the creation that Moses here designs to account for; therefore, he mentions not the creation of angels: but as the earth has not only its surface adorned with grass and flowers, but also its bowels enriched with metals and precious stones, which partake more of its solid nature, and are more valuable, though the creation of them is not mentioned here; so the heavens are not only beautified to our eye with glorious lamps which garnish its outside, of whose creation we here read, but they are within replenished with glorious beings, out of our sight, more celestial, and more surpassing them in worth and excellency, than the gold or sapphires do the lilies of the field. In the visible world it is easy to observe, (1.) Great variety; several sorts of beings vastly differing in their nature and constitution from each other. Lord, how manifold are thy works, and all good! (2.) Great beauty; the azure sky and verdant earth are charming to the eye of the curious spectator, much more the ornaments of both. How transcendent then must the beauty of the Creator be! (3.) Great exactness and accuracy; to those that, with the help of microscopes, narrowly look into the works of nature, they appear far more fine than any of the works of art. (4.) Great power; it is not a lump of dead and inactive matter, but there is virtue, more or less, in every creature; the earth itself has a magnetic power. (5.) Great order; a mutual dependence of being, an exact harmony of motions, and an admirable chain and connection of causes. (6.) Great mystery; there are phenomena in nature which cannot be solved, secrets which cannot be fathomed or accounted for. But, from what we see of heaven and earth, we may easily enough infer the eternal power and Godhead of the great Creator, and may furnish ourselves with abundant matter for his praises. And let our make and place, as men, remind us of our duty as Christians, which is, always to keep heaven in our eye, and the earth under our feet.

LIGHT.—The first of all visible beings which God created was light; not that by it he himself might see to work, (for the darkness and light are both alike to him,) but that by it we might see his works, and his glory in them, and might work our works while it is day. Light is the great beauty and blessing of the universe: like the first-born, it does, of all visible beings, most resemble its great Parent in purity and power, brightness and beneficence; it is of great affinity with a spirit, and is next to it; though by it we see other things, and are sure that it is, yet we know not its nature, nor can describe what it is, or by what way the light is parted, Job xxxviii. 19, 24. By the light of it, let us be led to, and assisted in, the believing contemplation of Him who is Light, infinite and eternal Light, 1 John i. 5, and the Father of Lights, James i. 17, and who dwells in inaccessible light, 1 Tim. vi. 16.—Henry.

FIRMAMENT.—The word translated firmament, or expansion, is used for the whole space which surrounds the earth, even to the fixed stars, which are "set in the open firmament of heaven;" as "the fowls" are said "to fly in the open firmament of heaven;" and "he called the firmament heaven."—It must therefore be understood according to the context: but it is here, generally, interpreted to mean the atmosphere, or air, in which the clouds are suspended, and from which they water the earth.

OCEAN.—The waters, being separated from the dry ground, which they had hitherto overspread, or been mixed with, were divided into those "under the firmament," which are deposited in the oceans, seas, lakes, rivers, brooks, fountains, and subterraneous receptacles; and those "above the firmament," which are suspended in the air, form the clouds, and descend in rains and dews—instead of attempting a further explanation of the terms here used, I would rather call the reader's attention to the power, wisdom, and goodness of God, displayed in this part of creation. In the vast reservoir of the oceans and seas, the waters are treasured up, being, by their saltness and incessant motion, preserved from putridity. These facilitate commerce and friendly intercourse betwixt distant nations, supply immense quantities of wholesome provisions, and are in many ways serviceable to mankind. From them originally, by various modes of conveyance, the whole earth is supplied with water, rendered fresh and fit for use, and communicated in the gentlest method. Hence, all living creatures "quench their thirst;" the surface of the earth is thus rendered fertile; and all the purposes of cleanliness are answered: and the same waters, continually returning to the sea by brooks and rivers, enrich and beautify the adjacent countries, and confer manifold benefits upon mankind through the whole of their course.

ANIMALS.—A very superficial acquaintance with the numerous tribes of animals, of different sizes, immensely large, or invisibly minute; their distinct modes of existence, in different elements, and on different sustenance; the surprising exactness and kind contrivance, with which the organized body in every species is formed; and the various ways, in which they subserve the use and pleasure of man, may suffice to show us that we have abundant reason to admire and adore the great Creator: while the nature of life itself, and its production, continuance, and propagation, in every distinct species, forms a very proper subject for our speculations; if we would be convinced how [illegible] prehensible the works of God are, and how ignorant man is.

TRINITY.—The language here used is that of [illegible], and not of whose seed is in itself, upon the earth: and it was so.

12 And [t]the earth brought forth grass, and [u]herb yielding seed after his kind, and the tree yielding fruit, whose seed was in itself, after his kind: and God saw that it was good.

13 And the evening and the morning were the third day.

14 ¶ And God said, [x]Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven, to divide [l]the day from the night; [y]and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and years.[8]

15 And let them be for lights in the firmament of the heaven, to give light upon the earth: and it was so.

16 And God made two great lights; the greater light *to [a]rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night:[4] he made the stars also.

17 And God [a]set them in the firmament of the heaven, to give light upon the earth;

18 And to rule over the day and over the night, and to divide the light from the darkness: and God saw that it was good.

19 And the evening and the morning were the fourth day.

20 ¶ And God said, [b]Let the waters bring forth abundantly the [†]moving creature that hath [‡]life, and [§]fowl that may fly above the [l]earth in the open firmament of heaven.

21 And God created [c]great whales, and every living creature that moveth, which the waters [d]brought forth abundantly, after their kind, and every winged fowl after his kind: [e]and God saw that it was good.

22 And [f]God blessed them, saying, Be fruitful, and multiply, and fill the waters in the seas, and let fowl multiply in the earth.

23 And the evening and the morning were the fifth day.

24 ¶ And God said, [g]Let the earth bring forth the living creature after his kind, cattle, and creeping thing, and beast of the earth after his kind: and it was so.

25 And God [h]made the beast of the earth after his kind, and cattle after their kind, and every thing that creepeth upon the earth after his kind: and God saw that it was good.

26 ¶ And God said, [l]Let us make man [k]in our image, after our likeness; and let them [l]have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.

27 So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; [m]male and female created he them.

28 And [n]God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it; and have dominion[5] over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that *moveth upon the earth.

29 ¶ And God said, Behold, [o]I have given you every herb [†]bearing seed, which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree, in the which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed: [p]to you it shall be for meat.

30 And [q]to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to every thing that creepeth upon the earth, wherein there is [‡]life, I have given every green herb for meat: and it was so.

31 And God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was [r]very good.[6] [s]And the evening and the morning were the sixth day.

and it intimates far more than the superior excellency and dignity of the creature about to be formed. It is not to be conceived, that the infinite God, by speaking in the plural number, should employ a language assumed by many princes, (xli. 44; Dan. iv. 2;) which is indeed more ostentatious than dignified. But it is still more intolerable to suppose, that the eternal God addressed any of his own creatures, as fellow-workers with him in the creation of man. Yet, these seem the only expedients for interpreting this language, which can be adopted by those who allow the divine inspiration of the whole Scripture, and still refuse their assent to the doctrine of the Trinity: whereas, admit this doctrine to be scriptural, and the expressions are suitable, natural, and need little explanation. The three Persons in the sacred Trinity at first concurred, in counsel and operation, in the creation of man, as afterwards in his recovery from the fall.—Scott.

God's Image.—Man was not made in the likeness of any creature that went before him, but in the likeness of his Creator; yet still between God and man there is an infinite distance. Christ only is the express image of God's person, as the son of his Father, having the same nature. It is only some of God's honour that is put upon man, who is God's image, only as the shadow in the glass, or the king's impress upon the coin. God's image upon man consists of these three things, (1.) In his nature and constitution, not those of his body, (for God has not a body,) but those of his soul. This honour, indeed, God has put upon the body of man, that the Word was made flesh, the Son of God was clothed with a body like unto our's, and will shortly clothe our's with a glory like unto his. But it is the soul, the great soul, of man, that does especially bear God's image. The soul is a spirit, an intelligent immortal spirit, an influencing active spirit, herein resembling God, the Father of Spirits, and the Soul of the world. The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord. The soul of man, considered in its three noble faculties, understanding, will, and active power, is perhaps the brightest, clearest looking-glass in nature, wherein to see God. (2.) In his place and authority. Let us make man in our image, and let them have dominion. As he has the government of the inferior creatures, he is, as it were, God's representative, or viceroy, upon earth; they are not capable of fearing and serving God, therefore God has appointed them to fear and serve man. Yet his government of himself, by the freedom of his will, has in it more of God's image than his government of the creatures. (3.) In his purity and rectitude. God's image upon man consists in knowledge, righteousness, and true holiness, Eph. iv. 24; Col. iii. 10. He was upright, Eccl. vii. 29. He had an habitual conformity of all his natural powers to the whole will of God. His understanding saw divine things clearly and truly, and there were no errors or mistakes in his knowledge; his will complied readily and universally with the will of God, without reluctancy or resistance: his affections were all regular, and he had no inordinate appetites or passions; his thoughts were easily brought, and fixed, to the best subjects, and there was no vanity or ungovernableness in them. All the inferior powers were subject to the dictates and directions of the superior without mutiny or rebellion.—Henry.

Practical Observations.—The account given us in this chapter, of the Author and original of all things, is so rational, satisfactory, and sublime; and the visible creation, as it subsists at this day, displays such wise contrivance, powerful operation, and beneficent attention to the wants and welfare of all creatures; that atheists, and all others who, with the Bible in their hands, and the creation before their eyes, "honour not the Creator as God, neither are thankful," must be for ever left without excuse: and infidelity and impiety must at length manifestly appear to be as absurd and foolish, as they are wicked.—The Creator of all things is, without controversy, the sole Proprietor and sovereign Lord of all. Our very bodies and souls are his, and not our own; for "he made us, and not we ourselves." He has therefore an undoubted right to dispose of us, and of all creatures, as he pleases. To him an account must be rendered of the use which we make of all his gifts: nor should we ever allow ourselves to lose sight of this important truth; which is suited, not only to restrain us from abusing the work and gift of God in the practice of sin, but also to quicken us in employing all that we possess and enjoy, in the service of our liberal Benefactor. We should also accustom ourselves to contemplate his glory in every object which we behold, and to taste his bounty in all our comforts and enjoyments. As our obligations are so vast, his largest demands of love, worship, and service, are perfectly reasonable: yet, tried by this plain rule, our own hearts must certainly condemn our past and present conduct.—Scott.

CHAP. II. Sabbath.—1. The solemn observation of one day in seven, as a day of holy rest, and holy work to God's honour, is the indispensable duty of all those to whom God has revealed his holy sabbaths. 2. That the way of sabbath-sanctification is the good old way, Jer. vi. 16. Sabbaths are as ancient as the world; and I see no reason to doubt that the sabbath, being now instituted in innocency, was religiously observed by the people of God throughout the patriarchal age. 3. That the sabbath of the Lord is truly honourable, and we have reason to honour it; honour it for the sake of its antiquity, its great Author, the sanctification of the first sabbath by the holy God himself, and, in obedience to him, by our first parents in innocency. 4. That the sabbath-day is a blessed day, for God blessed it; and that which he blesses is blessed indeed. God has put an honour upon it—has appointed us, on that day, to bless him, and has promised, water the garden; and from thence it was parted, and became into four heads.

11 The name of the first is Pison: [5] that is it which compasseth the whole land of [a]Havilah, where there is gold;

12 And the gold of that land is good: there is [b]bdellium and [c]the onyx-stone.

13 And the name of the second river is Gihon: the same is it that compasseth the whole land of [6]Ethiopia.[6]

14 And the name of the third river is [7]Hiddekel: that is it which goeth [8]towards the east of [d]Assyria. And the fourth river is [e]Euphrates.[8]

15 And the Lord God took [f]the man, and [g]put him into the garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it.

16 And the Lord God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden [h]thou mayest [i]freely eat:

17 But [9]of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof, [10]thou shalt[k] surely die.[9]

18 ¶ And the Lord God said, It is not [l]good that the man should be alone. I will make him an help [m]meet for him.

19 And [n]out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air; and [o]brought them unto Adam to see what he would call them: and whatsoever [p]Adam called every living creature, that was the name thereof.

20 And Adam [q]gave names to all cattle, and to the fowl of the air, and to every beast of the field; [r]but for Adam there was not found an help meet for him.

21 And the Lord God caused [s]a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept: and he took one of his ribs, and closed up the flesh instead thereof;

22 And the rib which the Lord God had taken from man, [t]made he a woman, and [u]brought her unto the man.

23 And Adam said, This is now [v]bone of my bones, [w]and flesh of my flesh: she shall be called [11]Woman, because she was taken out of [12]Man.

24 Therefore shall a man [x]leave his father and his mother, and shall [y]cleave unto his wife: and [z]they shall be one flesh.

25 And they were both [a]naked, the man and his wife, and were not ashamed.

CHAP. III.

The woman, tempted by the serpent, eats the forbidden fruit, and induces Adam to do the same, 1–6. They are alarmed and ashamed, in vain attempt concealment, and are convicted by God, 7–13. Sentence is denounced against them, containing the gracious promise of a Redeemer, 14–19. They are clothed, but expelled from Eden, 20–24.

NOW [b]the serpent was more subtil than any beast of the field which the LORD God had made: and he said unto the woman, [c]Yea, [d]hath God said, Ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden?

2 And the woman said unto the serpent, We may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden:

3 [e]But of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden, God hath said, Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye [f]touch it, lest ye die.

4 And the serpent said unto the woman, [g]Ye shall not surely die;

5 For [h]God doth know, that in the day ye eat thereof, then [i]your eyes shall be opened: and ye shall be [j]as gods, [k]knowing good and evil.

6 And when the woman saw that the tree was good for food; and that it was [l]pleasant [m]to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise; she took of the fruit thereof, and [n]did eat, and gave also unto her husband with her, [o]and he did eat.

7 And [p]the eyes of them both were opened, and they [q]knew that they were naked; [r]and they sewed fig-leaves together, and made themselves [13]aprons.

8 And [s]they heard the voice of the LORD God walking in the garden in the [t]cool of the day: and Adam and his wife [u]hid themselves from the presence of the LORD God amongst the trees of the garden.

9 And the LORD God called unto Adam, and said unto him, [v]Where art thou?

10 And he said, I heard thy voice in the garden: [w]and I was afraid, [x]because I was naked; and I hid myself.

11 And he said, Who told thee that thou wast naked? [y]hast thou eaten of the tree, whereof I commanded thee that thou shouldest not eat?

12 And the man said, [z]The woman whom thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat.

13 And the LORD God said unto the woman, [a]What is this that thou hast done? and the woman said, [b]The serpent beguiled me, and I did eat.

14 And the LORD God said unto the serpent, Because thou hast done this, [c]thou art cursed above all cattle, and above every beast of the field: upon thy belly shalt thou go, and [d]dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life.

15 And I will put [e]enmity between thee and the woman, and between [f]thy seed and [g]her seed: [h]it shall bruise thy head, and [i]thou shalt bruise his heel.

16 Unto the woman he said, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception; [j]in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children; and [k]thy desire shall [14]be to thy husband, and he shall [l]rule over thee.

on that day, to meet us and bless us. 5. That the sabbath-day is a holy day, for God has sanctified it. He has separated and distinguished it from the rest of the days of the week, and he has consecrated it, and set it apart to himself and his own service and honour.—Henry.

Paradise.—This garden, planned doubtless with exquisite beauty, and stored with every thing which could regale the senses, seems to have been intended as a pledge of heavenly felicity.—The word paradise, in allusion to Eden, is frequently used for heaven itself, and there are many references to it in scripture. (Luke xxiii. 43; 2 Cor. xii. 4.) "The tree of life" seems also to have been a sacramental pledge of immortality; and, by eating the fruit of it, life and felicity were sealed to Adam, as long as he continued obedient. "The tree of knowledge" might be thus called, because that, by the prohibition of its fruit, a revelation was made to Adam of his Creator's will; of his own duty, interest, situation, and danger; of the consequences of his future conduct; and of the prescribed condition of life or death, happiness or misery; in which things his most interesting knowledge consisted. By abstaining from this fruit, the knowledge of good would be enjoyed; but by eating of it, the knowledge of evil would be fatally introduced.—Scott.

Woman.—The woman was made of a rib out of the side of Adam; not made out of his head to top him, not out of his feet to be trampled upon by him, but out of his side to be equal with him, under his arm to be protected, and near his heart to be beloved. Adam lost a rib, and without any diminution to his strength or comeliness; for, doubtless, the flesh was closed without a scar, but in lieu thereof, he had a help meet for him, which abundantly made up his loss.—Henry.

Marriage.—According to the original institution of marriage, the nearest of all relations, and the proper source of all the rest, men in every subsequent age would leave the immediate society even of their parents, to lay the foundation of new families; and thenceforth all other relative affections and duties must be regulated, in subordination to the affections and duties of that new relation. Thus one man and one woman are so closely united as to become one flesh; so that, according to the original institution, nothing can separate them but that which dissolves the union of soul and body, and even divides the component parts of the body from each other. This seems to be the remark of Moses rather than of Adam; but certainly it was the word of God, speaking by one of them. Neither polygamy nor divorces can accord with this original institution.—Scott.

CHAP. III. The Tempter.—Common sense and the whole scripture lead us to conclude, that the serpent was only the instrument; Satan the real agent, who is therefore called the serpent, the old dragon, a liar, and a murderer from the beginning. The word of God reveals to us the world of spirits, holy and unholy, of which otherwise we should have had no certain knowledge. Faith avails itself of this information; but unbelief rejects it, to the infidel's irreparable detriment: as nothing better answers the purpose of the powers of darkness, than to work in the dark; and none serve their interests more effectually, than they who deny and endeavour to disprove their existence; for we never can guard against the attacks of unseen or unsuspected enemies. From the Scriptures we learn that "angels sinned, and kept not their first estate;" and that, being created holy and happy, they by transgression forfeited the favour, and incurred the displeasure, of their Creator, and became unholy and miserable; yea, desperate, in the certain expectation of increasing and everlasting misery. Doubtless, the beauty of the new-created world, the glory of God and the happiness of man, excited the envy and rage of these evil spirits, and suggested to Satan the malicious design of ruining the whole. For this purpose, he, with dark craftiness, concealed himself in the subtle serpent, and thus made his unsuspected attack on the woman when alone; perhaps insinuating that by eating the fruit of the forbidden tree, the serpent had acquired the gift of reason and speech.—Scott.

The Temptation.—Satan questions whether it were a sin or no, to eat of this tree, and whether really the fruit of it were forbidden. Yea, hath God said, Ye shall not eat? Observe here, (1.) He does not discover his design at first, but puts a question which seemed innocent; "I hear a piece of news, pray, is it true; has God forbidden you to eat of this tree?" Thus he would begin a discourse, and draw her into a parley. (2.) He quotes the command fallaciously, as if it were a prohibition, not only of that tree, but of all; God had said, Of every tree ye may eat, except one. He, by aggravating the exception, endeavours to invalidate the concession; Hath God said, Ye shall not eat of every tree? The divine law cannot be reproached, unless it be first misrepresented. (3.) He seems to speak it tauntingly, upbraiding the woman with her shyness of meddling with that tree; as if he had said, "Your are so nice and cautious, and so very precise, because God has said, Ye shall not eat." (4.) That which he aimed at in the first onset was, to take off her sense of the obligation of the command. "Surely you are mistaken, it cannot be that God should tie you out from this tree; he would not do so unreasonable a thing.

The Fall.—1. She saw: she should have turned away her eyes from beholding vanity; but she enters into temptation, by looking with pleasure on the forbidden fruit. Observe, A great deal of sin comes in at the eye. As those windows Satan throws in those fiery darts which pierce and poison the heart. The eye affects the heart with 8 ¶ And Cain [m]talked[l] with Abel his brother: and it came to pass when they were in the field, that [n]Cain rose up against Abel his brother, and slew him.

9 And the LORD said unto Cain, [o]Where is Abel thy brother? And he said, [p]I know not: Am I my brother's keeper?

10 And he said, [q]What hast thou done? the voice of thy brother's [‡]blood [r]crieth unto me from the ground.

11 And now art thou [s]cursed from the earth, which hath [t]opened her mouth to receive thy brother's blood from thy hand.

12 When thou tillest the ground, [u]it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength. [x]A fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be in the earth.

13 And Cain said unto the LORD, [§]My [y]punishment is greater than I can bear.

14 Behold, thou hast [z]driven me out this day from the face of the earth: and [a]from thy face shall I be hid, and I shall be a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth, and it shall come to pass, [b]that every one that findeth me shall slay me.

15 And the LORD said unto him, [c]Therefore whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him [d]sevenfold. And the LORD set [e]a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him.

16 ¶ And Cain [f]went out from the presence of the LORD, and dwelt in the land of Nod, on the east of Eden.

17 And Cain knew his wife, and she conceived and bare *Enoch: [g]and he builded a city, and called [h]the name of the city after the name of his son, Enoch.

18 And unto Enoch was born Irad: and Irad begat Mehujael: and Mehujael [†]begat Methusael: and Methusael begat Lamech.

19 ¶ And Lamech took unto him [i]two wives: the name of the one was Adah, and the name of the other Zillah.

20 And Adah bare Jabal: he was [k]the father of such as [l]dwell in tents, and of such as have cattle.

21 And his brother's name was Jubal: he was the father of all such as handle [m]the harp and organ.

22 And Zillah, she also bare Tubal-cain, an [‡]instructor of every artificer [n]in brass and iron: and the sister of Tubal-cain was Naamah.

23 ¶ And Lamech said unto his wives, Adah and Zillah, [o]hear my voice; ye wives of Lamech, hearken unto my speech: for [§]I have slain a man to my wounding, and a young man [‖]to my hurt.

24 If Cain shall be avenged sevenfold, truly Lamech [p]seventy and sevenfold.

25 ¶ And Adam knew his wife again, and she bare a son, [q]and called his name guilt as well as grief. 2. She took: it was her own act and deed. The Devil did not take it, and put it into her mouth, whether she would or no; but she herself took it. Satan may tempt, but he cannot force. 3. She did eat: when she looked perhaps she did not intend to take, or, when she took, not to eat; but it ended in that. 4. She gave also to her husband with her: she gave it to him, persuading him with the same arguments that the serpent had used with her, adding this to all the rest, that she herself had eaten of it, and found it so far from being deadly, that it was extremely pleasant and grateful: stolen waters are sweet. 5. He did eat, overcome by his wife's importunity. It is needless to ask, "What would have been the consequence if Eve only had transgressed?" The wisdom of God we are sure, would have decided the difficulty according to equity; but, alas! the case was not so; Adam also did eat.—Henry.

FIRST GOSPEL.—Satan's cause would be ruined by one in a nature inferior to his own; by one emphatically called the "Seed of the woman," over whom the tempter had triumphed; and the victory over the enemy would be obtained, not only by the Messiah, but by all his servants. It is remarkable that this gracious promise of a Saviour was given unsolicited, and previous to any humiliation on the part of man. Without a revelation of mercy, inspiring hope of forgiveness, the convinced sinner would be hardened in despair: this intimation therefore formed that encouragement to hope, which was followed by true repentance and true religion, (as it is generally supposed,) in fallen Adam and Eve: and though it was at first very obscure, it continually became brighter, like the increasing light of the morning, till "the Sun of righteousness arose with healing in his wings."—Scott.

THE EXPULSION.—He turned Adam out, from the garden to the common. This is twice mentioned, ver. 23, he sent him forth, and then, ver. 24, he drove him out. God bade him go out; told him that that was no place for him, he should no longer occupy and enjoy that garden: but he liked the place too well to be willing to part with it, and therefore God drove him out, made him go out, whether he would or no. This signified the exclusion of him, and all his guilty race, from that communion with God, which was the bless and glory of paradise.—Henry.

CHAP. IV. THE FIRST-BORN OF MEN.—The word translated gotten, means acquired or possessed, and generally implies a high valuation of the acquisition; it is thus used in two remarkable texts, (Deut. xxxii. 6; Prov. viii. 22.) Probably therefore Eve concluded that this was the promised Seed; and indeed some think the words may be rendered, "I have acquired a MAN, even JEHOVAH." If so, the subsequent events must have been a most distressing disappointment.

FIRST SACRIFICE.—This early use of sacrifices confirms the supposition, that the appointment of them formed a part of the gracious revelation made to Adam after his transgression.—It is indeed exceedingly difficult, in any other way, to account for the use of altars and sacrifices, in appeasing the anger of the offended Deity; which has prevailed almost in all ages and nations, and which does not appear to have its origin from any deductions of human reason. The apostle informs us that "by faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain." Now, Cain evidently had some kind of faith in God, his creator and providential Benefactor; and he brought an offering as an outward acknowledgment of his obligations, and expression of his gratitude: but he did not believe in the promised Saviour, nor come as a sinner to supplicate mercy through him; and therefore he did not bring the sacrifices which prefigured the atonement. Thus he manifested an impenitent and unbelieving heart; and virtually cleaved to the violated covenant of works; and therefore he and his offering were rejected. But Abel came in faith as a sinner, according to the appointment of God; his offering was presented in sincerity, and was expressive of humility and believing obedience: and, as he sought the mercy of the new covenant, through the promised Seed, he was graciously accepted; and his sacrifice was distinguished by some manifest token of divine approbation. Probably, it was consumed by fire from heaven; which intimated, that deserved vengeance, consuming the sacrifice, made way for the exercise of mercy to the offender.—Scott.

FIRST MURDER.—Death reigned ever since Adam sinned, but we read not of any taken captive by him till now; and now, 1. The first that dies is a saint, one that was accepted and beloved of God; to show, that, though the promised Seed was so far to destroy him that had the power of death, as to save believers from its sting, yet that still they should be exposed to its stroke. The first that went to the grave went to heaven; God would secure to himself the first-fruits, the first-born to the dead, that first opened the womb into another world. Nay, 2. The first that dies is a martyr, and dies for his religion; and of such it may more truly be said than of soldiers, that they die in the field of honour. Abel's death has not only no curse in it, but it has a crown in it; so admirably well is the property of death altered, that it is not only become innocent and inoffensive to those that die in Christ, but honourable and glorious to those that die for him.

FIRST EXILE.—Cain went out from the presence of the Lord, that is, he willingly renounced God and religion, and was content to forego its privileges, so that he might not be under its precepts. He forsook Adam's family and altar, and cast off all pretensions to the fear of God, and never came among good people, nor attended on God's

THIS is the [a]book of the generations of Adam: In the day that God created man, [b]in the likeness of God made he him:[1]

2 Male and female created he them; and blessed them, and called [c]their name Adam, in the day when they were created.

3 ¶ And Adam lived an hundred and thirty years,[2] and begat a son [d]in his own likeness, after his image; and [e]called his name Seth.

4 And [f]the days of Adam after he had begotten Seth were eight hundred years: and [g]he begat sons and daughters:

5 And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years: [h]and he died.

6 ¶ And Seth lived an hundred and five years, and begat Enos:

7 And Seth lived after he begat Enos eight hundred and seven years, and begat sons and daughters:

8 And all the days of Seth were nine hundred and twelve years, and he died.

9 ¶ And Enos lived ninety years, and begat *Cainan:

10 And Enos lived after he begat Cainan eight hundred and fifteen years, and begat sons and daughters:

11 And all the days of Enos were nine hundred and five years: and he died.

12 ¶ And Cainan lived seventy years, and begat Mahalaleel.

13 And Cainan lived after he begat [†]Mahalaleel eight hundred and forty years, and begat sons and daughters:

14 And all the days of Cainan were nine hundred and ten years: and he died.

15 ¶ And Mahalaleel lived sixty and five years, and begat Jared.

16 And Mahalaleel lived after he begat [‡]Jared eight hundred and thirty years, and begat sons and daughters:

17 And all the days of Mahalaleel were eight hundred ninety and five years: and he died.

18 ¶ And Jared lived an hundred sixty and two years, and he begat [i]Enoch.

19 And Jared lived after he begat Enoch eight hundred years, and begat sons and daughters.

20 And all the days of Jared were nine hundred sixty and two years: and he died.

21 ¶ And Enoch lived sixty and five years, and begat [§]Methuselah.

22 And Enoch [k]walked with God after he begat Methuselah three hundred years, and begat sons and daughters.

23 And all the days of Enoch were three hundred sixty and five years.

24 And Enoch walked with God, and he was not: [l]for God took him.

25 ¶ And Methuselah lived an hundred eighty and seven years, and begat [l]Lamech.

26 And Methuselah lived after he begat Lamech seven hundred eighty and two years, and begat sons and daughters.

27 And all the days of Methuselah were nine hundred sixty and nine years: and he died.

28 ¶ And Lamech lived an hundred eighty and two years, and begat a son.

29 And [m]he called his name *Noah, saying, This same shall comfort us, concerning our work and toil of our hands, [n]because of the ground which the LORD hath cursed.

30 And Lamech lived after he begat Noah five hundred ninety and five years, and begat sons and daughters.

31 And all the days of Lamech were seven hundred seventy and seven years: and he died.

32 ¶ And Noah was five hundred years old: and Noah begat [o]Shem, Ham, and Japheth.

CHAP. VI.

The worshippers of God intermarry with the ungodly; wickedness rapidly increases; and the Lord in anger determines to destroy the earth, 1–7. Noah is accepted by God; warned of an approaching deluge; and instructed to prepare an ark, 8–21. He implicitly obeys, 22.

AND it came to pass, when men began [a]to multiply on the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them,

2 That [b]the sons of God saw the daughters of men, [c]that they were fair; [d]and they took them wives of all which they chose.

3 And the LORD said, [e]My Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is [f]flesh: yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years.

4 There were [g]giants in the earth in those days; and also after that, when the sons of God came in unto the daughters of men, and they bare children to them; the same became mighty men, which were of old, [h]men of renown.

5 ¶ And [l]God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that *every [k]imagination of the [l]thoughts of his heart was only evil [†]continually.

6 And it [m]repented the LORD that he had made man on the earth, and [n]it grieved him at his heart.[1] ordinances, any more. Cain went out now from the presence of the Lord, and we never find that he came into it again, to his comfort.—Henry.

FIRST ARCHITECT.—As the first city that is mentioned in history was built by Cain, and his posterity were the inventors of many useful arts; so, ungodly men still frequently excel in natural ingenuity and skill those who attend to "the one thing needful," who, yet "choose the good part, which shall never be taken from them."—Scott.

CHAP. V. MAN'S IMAGE.—Adam was made in the image of God; but when he was fallen and corrupt, he begat a son in his own image, sinful and defiled, frail, mortal, and miserable, like himself; not only a man like himself, consisting of body and soul, but a sinner like himself, guilty and obnoxious, degenerate and corrupt. Note, Grace does not run in the blood, but corruption does. A sinner begets a sinner, but a saint does not beget a saint.

TRANSLATION.—God took Enoch, body and soul, to himself in the heavenly paradise, by the ministry of angels, as afterward he took Elijah. He was changed, as those saints shall be, that will be found alive at Christ's second coming. Whenever a good man dies, God takes him, fetches him hence, and receives him to himself. The apostle adds concerning Enoch, that, before his translation, he had this testimony, that he pleased God, and this was the good report he obtained.

THE OLDEST MAN.—Concerning Methuselah, observe, 1. The signification of his name, which, some think, was prophetical, his father Enoch being a prophet; Methuselah signifies, he dies, there is a dart, or a sending forth, namely of the deluge, which came the very year that Methuselah died. If indeed his name was so intended, and so explained, it was fair warning to a careless world, a long time before the judgment came. However, this is observable, that the longest liver that ever was, carried death in his name, that he might be reminded of its coming surely, though it came slowly. 2. His age: he lived nine hundred and sixty-nine years, the longest we read of, that ever any man lived to on earth; and yet he died; the longest liver must die at last. Neither youth nor age will discharge from that war, for that is the end of all men: none can challenge life by long prescription, nor make that a plea against the arrests of death. It is commonly supposed that Methuselah died a little before the flood; the Jewish writers say, "seven days before," referring to chap. vii. 10, and that he was taken away from the evil to come.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—This chapter contains nearly all the history, which God hath pleased to transmit to us, of the antediluvian world, that subsisted for the space of 1656 years. Man, in his best estate, is altogether vanity.—He is born, raises up a family, and dies! These are his memoirs; all else is a cipher, or a blot, except he WALKS WITH GOD.—The page of history records the splendid actions of the great and illustrious: the report of the day proclaims the wealth which some have accumulated and left behind, and of which they are gone to render an account: the monuments of the dead are often inscribed with pompous titles and flattering commendations:—but may it, with truth, be engraved on my tombstone, or whispered in the obscurest corner, "He walked with God; and was not, for God took him!" and so far from envying their distinctions, not even Enoch's privilege shall be anxiously desired; but, as one expresses it,

> "I'll hail the sharpest pangs of death, > Which break my way to God."—[Doddridge.]—Scott.

CHAP. VI. GIANTS.—These giants perhaps were men of great stature and strength, but more certainly men of enormous wickedness; men, who by force and power cast down others. Or, men who had fallen from God, from naphal he fell. Several other words are translated giants, some of them, probably, out of deference to the Septuagint, which has so rendered them. And the children which sprang from the intermarriages above-mentioned, were of the same character. Thus they became, in those ancient times, "mighty men,—men of renown," as heroes, conquerors, and chieftains: but were apostates from God, and cruel destroyers and oppressors of mankind.

ARK.—The word tebath, an ark, is only used for Noah's ark, and that ark of bulrushes in which the child Moses was preserved. It seems to have been built, in some respects, like the hulk of a ship; except that it was flat-bottomed, square at each end, and roofed as a house; so that it terminated at the top in the breadth of a cubit. It is not agreed what kind of timber is meant by Gopher-wood; perhaps that of the cypress tree. The ark was made with three decks, and divided into many little cabins; it was pitched within and without, to keep it tight and sweet; and lighted from the upper part, probably by one window reaching from end to end. A cubit was something more than half a-yard; so that enormous vessel was about a hundred and sixty yards in length, twenty-seven in breadth, and sixteen in height; and thus vastly larger than our greatest ships. Learned men have shown, that these dimensions were far more than were necessary to contain all the animals to be preserved, and sufficient provision for them. But it must at first sight be evident that so great a vessel, thus constructed, and with so few persons on board, was utterly unsuitable to weather out the deluge, except as it was under the immediate guidance and protection of the Almighty.—Scott.

8 But Noah [c]found grace in the eyes of the LORD.

9 ¶ These are [d]the generations of Noah: Noah was a [e]just man and [f]perfect in his generations,[3] and [g]Noah walked with God.

10 And Noah begat three sons, [h]Shem, Ham, and Japheth.

11 The earth also was corrupt before God; and the earth was [i]filled with violence.

12 And God [k]looked upon the earth, and, behold, it was corrupt: for [l]all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth.

13 And God said unto Noah, [m]The end of all flesh is come before me; for the earth is filled with violence through them: and, behold, I will destroy them [1]with [2]the earth.

14 ¶ [n]Make thee an ark of gopher-wood: [o]rooms shalt thou make in the ark, and shalt [p]pitch it within and without with pitch.

15 And this is the fashion which thou shalt make it of: the length of the ark shall be three hundred [q]cubits, the breadth of it fifty cubits, and the height of it thirty cubits.

16 A [r]window shalt thou make to the ark, and in a cubit shalt thou finish it above; and [s]the door of the ark shalt thou set in the side thereof: [t]with lower, second, and third stories shalt thou make it.

17 And [u]behold, I, even I, do [v]bring a flood of waters upon the earth, to destroy all flesh, wherein is [1]the breath of life, from under heaven: and every thing that is in the earth [w]shall die.

18 But with thee will I [1]establish my covenant: and thou shalt [x]come into the ark; thou, and thy sons, and thy wife, and thy sons' wives with thee.

19 And of every living thing of all flesh, [y]two of every sort shalt thou bring into the ark, to keep them alive with thee: they shall be male and female.

20 Of fowls [z]after their kind, and of cattle after their kind, of every creeping thing of the earth after his kind: [a]two of every sort shall come unto thee, to keep them alive.

21 And take thou unto thee of [b]all food that is eaten, and thou shalt gather it to thee, and it shall be for food for thee, and for them.

22 Thus did Noah; [c]according to all that God commanded him, so did he.

2 Of every [q]clean beast thou shalt take to thee by [*]sevens, the male and his female: and of beasts that are [r]not clean by two, the male and his female.

3 Of fowls also of the air by sevens,[2] the male and the female; to keep seed alive upon the face of all the earth.

4 For [s]yet seven days, and I will cause it to rain upon the earth [t]forty days and forty nights: [u]and every living substance that I have made, will I [†]destroy from off the face of the earth.

5 And Noah did according unto [l]all that the LORD commanded him.

6 And Noah was [1]six hundred years old, when the flood of waters was upon the earth.

7 ¶ And [k]Noah went in, and his sons, and his wife, and his sons' wives with him, into the ark, because of the waters of the flood.

8 Of clean beasts, and of beasts that are not clean, and of fowls, and of every thing that creepeth upon the earth,

9 There [l]went in two and two unto Noah into the ark, the male and the female, as God had commanded Noah.

11 In the sixth hundredth year of Noah's life, in the second month, the seventeenth day of the month,[3] the same day were [m]all the fountains of the great deep broken up, and the [§]windows of heaven were opened.

12 And the rain was upon the earth [n]forty days and forty nights.

13 In the selfsame day entered Noah, [o]and Shem, and Ham, and Japheth, the sons of Noah, and Noah's wife, and the three wives of his sons with them, into the ark:

14 They, and every beast after his kind, and all the cattle after their kind, and every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth after his kind, and every fowl after his kind, every bird of every [1]sort.

15 And they went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh, wherein is the breath of life.

16 And they that went in, went in male and female of all flesh, as God had commanded him: and [p]the LORD shut him in.

17 ¶ And the flood was forty days upon the earth: and the waters increased, and bare up the ark; and it was lift up above the earth.

18 And the waters prevailed, and were increased greatly upon the earth: and the ark went upon the face of the waters.

FAITH.—To rear a building, such a one as he never saw, so large, and of such exact dimensions, would put Noah upon a great deal of care, and labour, and expense; it would be a work of time, the vision was for a great while to come; his neighbours would ridicule him for his credulity, and he would be the song of the drunkards; his building would be called Noah's folly; if the worst came to the worst, as we say, each would fare as well as his neighbours. But these, and a thousand such objections, Noah, by faith, got over; his obedience was ready and resolute. Thus did Noah willingly and cheerfully, without murmuring and disputing. God says, Do this, and he does it.—Henry.

CHAP. VII. NOAH.—For thee have I seen righteous before me in this generation. Observe, (1.) Those are righteous indeed that are righteous before God, that have not only the form of godliness, by which they appear righteous before men, who may easily be imposed upon, but the power of it, by which they approve themselves to God, who searches the heart, and cannot be deceived in men's character. (2.) God takes notice of, and is pleased with, those that are righteous before him; Thee have I seen. In a world of wicked people, God could see one righteous Noah; that single grain of wheat could not be lost, no not in so great a heap of chaff. The Lord knows them that are his. (3.) God, that is a Witness to, will shortly be a Witness for, his people's integrity; he that sees it, will proclaim it before angels and men, to their immortal honour. They that obtain mercy to be righteous, shall obtain witness that they are righteous. (4.) God is, in a special manner, pleased with those that are good in bad times and places. Noah was therefore illustriously righteous, because he was so in that wicked and adulterous generation. (5.) Those that keep themselves pure in times of common iniquity, God will keep safe in times of common calamity.—Henry.

FLOOD.—At the end of forty days the waters were so raised, that the ark was afloat: but they increased exceedingly afterwards, by the continuance of the same causes, though perhaps with some intermission. Thus the deluge prevailed till "all the high hills under the whole heaven were covered." The waters at length arose to be above eight yards deep on the top of the highest mountains: so that every project for security was frustrated; every advantage of situation was unavailing. Some might escape longer than others; but, first or last, all men, except those in the ark, perished. And with the human species most of the animals perished also, Isa. xxxiv. 1—6. Indeed, the faithful and powerful protection of God was Noah's only security, in this wild tumult of the elements: and the presence of God was his only comfort in this dreary confinement, and in witnessing the dire devastation of the earth and its inhabitants, and especially of the human species; of his companions, his neighbours, his relatives; of those, to whom he had preached, for whom he had prayed, and over whom he had wept, many of whom had even helped to build the ark.—Scott.

GOD'S POWER.—Now learn, (1.) That all the creatures are at God's disposal, and that he makes what use he pleases of them, whether for correction, or for his land, or for mercy, as Elihu speaks of the rain, Job xxxvii. 12, 13. (2.) That God often makes that which should be for our welfare, to become a trap, Psal. lxix. 22. That which usually is a comfort and benefit to us, becomes, when God pleases, a scourge and a plague to us. Nothing is more needful or useful than water, both the springs of the earth, and the showers of heaven; and yet, now, nothing is more hurtful, nothing more destructive; every creature is to be what God makes it. (3.) That it is impossible to escape the righteous judgments of God, when they come against sinners with commission; for God can arm both heaven and earth against them; see Job xx. 27. God can surround men with the messengers of his wrath, so that if they look upward, it is with horror and amazement; if they look to the earth, behold, trouble and darkness, Isa. viii. 21, 22. Who then is able to stand before God, when he is angry? Lastly, In this destruction of the old world by water, God gave a specimen of the final destruction of the world that now is, by fire; we find the apostle setting the one of these over against the other, 2 Pet. iii. 6, 7. As there are waters under the earth, so Ætna, Vesuvius, and other volcanoes, proclaim to the world that there are subterraneous fires too; and fire often falls from heaven, many desolations are made by lightning; so that when the time pre-determined comes, between these two fires the earth and all the works therein shall be burnt up; as the flood was brought upon the old world out of the fountains of the great deep, and through the windows of heaven.—Henry.

CHAP. VIII. ARARAT.—On the seventeenth day of the seventh month of the year, (as it is most probable,) just five months, or a hundred and fifty days from the beginning of the flood, the waters were so far abated, that the ark rested on one of the summits of Mount Ararat. This is supposed to mean a ridge of mountains extending from Armenia eastward to a great distance. The word Ararat is elsewhere translated Armenia, but it is not agreed whether the ark rested in Armenia, or more towards the east. It was, however, no doubt on some lofty summit; as it was almost three months longer before the tops of the mountains were seen. "If we had been a long and dangerous voyage at sea, we should be better able to conceive of the joy which this sight must have occasioned."—[Fuller.]

ARK AT REST.—Here we have the effects and evidences of the ebbings of the waters. (1.) The ark rested. This was some satisfaction to Noah, to feel the house he was in upon

The waters asswage, 1. Noah goeth forth of the ark, 18, buildeth an altar, and offereth sacrifice, 20. God's promise to curse the earth no more, 21.

AND [a]God remembered Noah, and every living thing, and all [b]the cattle that was with him in the ark: and God made [c]a wind to pass over the earth, and the waters asswaged.

2 The [d]fountains also of the deep and the windows of heaven were stopped, and [e]the rain from heaven was restrained.

3 And the waters [f]returned from off the earth continually; and after the end of the [g]hundred and fifty days the waters were abated.

4 And [h]the ark rested in the seventh month, on the seventeenth day of the month, upon the mountains of [b]Ararat.[1]

5 And the waters [i]decreased continually until [k]the tenth month: in the tenth month, on the first day of the month, were the tops of the mountains seen.

6 ¶ And it came to pass at the end of forty days, that Noah opened [l]the window of the ark which he had made.

7 And he sent forth [1]a raven, which went forth [‡]to and fro, until the waters were dried up from off the earth.

8 Also he sent forth [m]a dove from him, to see if the waters were abated from off the face of the ground.

9 But the dove [n]found no rest for the sole of her foot, [o]and she returned unto him into the ark: for the waters were on the face of the whole earth. Then he put forth his hand and took her, and [§]pulled her in unto him into the ark.

10 And he [p]stayed yet other [q]seven days, and again he sent forth the dove out of the ark.

11 And the dove came in to him in the evening, and lo, in her mouth was [r]an olive-leaf [2]pluckt off. So Noah knew that the waters were abated from off the earth.

12 And [s]he stayed yet other [t]seven days, and sent forth the dove; which returned not again unto him any more.

13 ¶ And it came to pass in the [u]six hundredth and first year, in the first month, the first day of the month, the waters were dried up from off the earth: and Noah removed the covering of the ark; and looked, and, behold, the face of the ground was dry.

14 And in the second month, on the seven and twentieth day of the month, was the earth dried.

15 ¶ And God spake unto Noah, saying,

16 [x]Go forth of the ark, thou, and thy wife, and thy sons, and thy sons' wives with thee.

17 [y]Bring forth with thee every living thing that is with thee, of all flesh, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth; that they may [z]breed abundantly in the earth, and be fruitful, and multiply upon the earth.

18 And Noah went forth, and his sons, and his wife, and his sons' wives with him:

19 Every beast, every creeping thing, and every fowl, and whatsoever creepeth upon the earth after their [1]kinds, went forth out of the ark.

20 ¶ And Noah [a]builded an altar [3]unto the LORD, and took of every [b]clean beast, and of every clean fowl, and offered [c]burnt-offerings on the altar.

21 And the LORD [d]smelled a sweet [e]savour; and the LORD said in his heart, I will not again [e]curse the ground any more for man's sake; [f]for [f]the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth: [g]neither will I again smite any more every thing living, [h]as I have done.

[2] Some versions read "leaves;" others, "a branch;" perhaps "a sprig of olive leaves" was what the dove really brought to Noah. Hence the olive-branch has ever been among the forerunners of peace, and chief of those emblems, by which a happy state of renovation and restoration to prosperity has been signified among mankind.—EXPOS. IND. SCRIPT. ILLUST.

The olive-branch, which was an emblem of peace, was brought, not by a raven, a bird of prey, nor by a gay and proud peacock, but by a mild, patient, humble dove. It is a dovelike disposition that brings in to the soul earnests of rest and joy.—EDWARDS.

firm ground, and no longer moveable. It rested upon a mountain, whither it was directed, not by Noah's prudence, (he did not steer it,) but by the wise and gracious providence of God, that it might rest the sooner. Note, God has times and places of rest for his people after their tossings; and many a time he provides for their seasonable and comfortable settlement, without their own contrivance, and quite beyond their own foresight. The ark of the church, though sometimes tossed with tempests, and not comforted, Isa. liv. 11, yet has its rests, Acts ix. 31. (2.) The tops of the mountains were seen, like little islands, appearing above the water. We must suppose that they were seen by Noah and his sons; for there were none besides to see them: it is probable that they had looked through the window of the ark every day, like the longing mariners, after a tedious voyage, to see if they could discover land, or as the prophet's servant, 1 Kings xviii. 43, 44, and at length they spy ground, and enter the day of the discovery in their journal. They felt ground above forty days before they saw it, according to Dr. Lightfoot's computation, whence he infers, that if the waters decreased proportionably, the ark drew eleven cubits in water.

NOAH'S MESSENGERS.—Forty days after the tops of the mountains became visible, Noah sent out a raven, in order that he might learn the state of the earth: but, as this bird was used to feed on flesh, it either returned no more; or, as some think, it continued to come back to the ark, and again to leave it, without being received into it, till the waters were dried up. After seven days, therefore, as the subsequent language implies, (ver. 10,) he sent forth a dove, which soon returned, and was taken into the ark; and on a second trial she brought an olive branch in her mouth. This was a token that some of the fruitful plains were dried, and the vegetables preserved. On the third trial the dove returned no more.—The repeated mention of seven days seems an intimation of the observance of the sabbath in the ark; after the ordinances of which, the dove was sent out.—The olive branch, probably from some obscure tradition of this event, has generally been the emblem of peace. Thus also the Holy Spirit, whose emblem is a dove, by his consolations brings to the broken-hearted believer the olive branch of peace and reconciliation with God.—According to the computation of time used in Scripture, Noah and his company continued in the ark a year and ten days.—Scott.

GRATITUDE.—Here observe, (1.) Noah offered only those that were clean; for it is not enough that we sacrifice, but we must sacrifice that which God appoints, according to the law of sacrifice, and not a corrupt thing. (2.) Though his stock of cattle was so small, and that rescued from ruin at so great an expense of care and pains, yet he did not grudge to give God his dues out of it. He might have said, "Have I but seven sheep to begin the world with, and must one of those seven be killed and burnt for sacrifice? Were it not better to defer it till we have more plenty?" No, to prove the sincerity of his love and gratitude, he cheerfully gives the seventh to his God, as an acknowledgment that all was his, and owing to him. Serving God with our little, is the way to make it more; and we must never think that wasted, with which God is honoured. (3.) See here the antiquity of religion: the first thing we find done in the new world, was an act of worship, Jer. vi. 16. We are now to express our thankfulness, not by burnt-offerings, but by the sacrifices of praise, and the sacrifices of righteousness, by pious devotions, and a pious conversation.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The Lord "knoweth how to reserve the wicked unto the day of judgment, to be punished," however numerous, powerful, and haughty they may be; and also "to deliver the godly out of temptation," in the best time and manner, though few, despised, and helpless. (2 Pet. ii. 9.) For a season he seems to forget his afflicted children, and they are prone to judge according to appearances; but in due season he will manifest his kind and careful remembrance of them.—The devoted servant of God will make haste to keep his commandments; and patiently wait his time for deliverance and promised blessings.—The faithfulness of God is the best security; and it is given to all them that trust in him: for, his glory is engaged for their salvation, as much as for Noah's preservation.—Alas! how many are there in the visible church, who resemble the raven more than the dove! who retain a relish for worldly things under a religious appearance; and who, "in time of temptation fall away!" But the true Christian, partaking of the Spirit of Christ, may indeed, through temptation, for a season, quit the ark, and go to the world; but like the dove, he can find no rest till he returns to the Lord.—Scott.

CHAP. IX. NEW CHARTER.—Grant of power over the inferor creatures, ver. 2. 1. A title to them. Into your hands they are delivered, for your use and benefit. 2. A dominion over them, without which the title would avail little. The fear of you and the dread of you shall be upon every beast. This revives a former grant, chap. i. 28, only with this difference, that man in innocence ruled by love, fallen man rules by fear. Now this grant remains in force, and thus far we have still the benefit of it. (1.) That those creatures which are any way useful to us, are reclaimed, and we use them either for service, or food, or both, as they are capable. The horse and ox patiently submit to the bridle and yoke, and the sheep is dumb both before the shearer and before the butcher; for the fear and dread of man are upon them. (2.) Those creatures that are any way hurtful to us are restrained, so that though now and then man may be hurt by some of them, yet they do not combine together to rise up in rebellion against man; else God and upon every fowl of the air, upon all that moveth upon the earth, and upon all the fishes of the sea; into your hand are they delivered.

3 [d]Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you; even [e]as the green herb[1] have I given you all things.

4 But flesh with [f]the life[2] thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat.

5 And surely your blood of your lives will I require: at the hand of [g]every beast will I require it; and [h]at the hand of man, at the hand of every man's [i]brother will I require the life of man.

6 Whoso sheddeth man's blood, [k]by man shall his blood be shed:[3] for [l]in the image of God made he man.

7 And you, be ye fruitful, and multiply, bring forth abundantly in the earth, and multiply therein.

8 ¶ And God spake unto Noah, and to his sons with him, saying,

9 And I, behold, I [m]establish my covenant with you, and with your seed after you;

10 And [n]with every living creature that is with you, of the fowl, of the cattle, and of every beast of the earth with you, from all that go out of the ark, to every beast of the earth.

11 And I will establish my covenant with you; [o]neither shall all flesh be cut off any more by the waters of a flood: neither shall there any more be a flood to destroy the earth.

12 And God said, This is [p]the token of the covenant which I make between me and you, and every living creature that is with you, for perpetual generations:

13 I do set [q]my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth.

14 And it shall come to pass, when I bring a cloud over the earth, that the bow shall be seen in the cloud:

15 And I will [r]remember my covenant which is between me and you, and every living creature of all flesh; and [s]the waters shall no more become a flood to destroy all flesh.

16 And the bow shall be in the cloud; and I will look upon it, that I may remember the [t]everlasting covenant, between God and every living creature of all flesh that is upon the earth.[4]

17 And God said unto Noah, This is the token of the covenant, which I have established between me and all flesh that is upon the earth.

18 ¶ And the sons of Noah that went forth of the ark, [u]were Shem, and Ham, and Japheth: and [x]Ham is the father of [*]Canaan.

could by these destroy the world as effectually as he did by a deluge; it is one of God's sore judgments, Ezek. xiv. 21. What is it that keeps wolves out of our towns, and lions out of our streets, and confines them to the wilderness, but this fear and dread? Nay, some have been tamed, James iii. 7.

Blood.—From this energetic declaration, ver. 6, it certainly follows, that wilful murder ought invariably in all communities to be punished with death; whatever form it assumes, or however it may, by specious pretences, be extenuated; and that God will himself require it of those, who suffer the murderer to escape; so that the punishment due to murder will, in some way, be inflicted on them, as accessaries to the crime. This implies, that magistrates should be appointed, who might punish murderers with death; though in the case of Cain the Lord had been pleased to prohibit all men from slaying him. Perhaps the impious inhabitants of the old world had been emboldened by the example of Cain; and no intimation is given, that any murderer was punished with death during all that period of violence. To impress the greater horror of destroying man's life, it was enjoined that even the beast which killed a man should be put to death.—Scott.

Rainbow.—(1.) The seal is affixed, with repeated assurances of the truth of that promise which it was designed to be the ratification of. (2.) The rainbow appears then when the clouds are most disposed to wet, and returns after the rain; then, when we have most reason to fear the rain prevailing, God shows this seal of the promise, that it shall not prevail. (3.) The thicker the cloud, the brighter the bow in the cloud. Thus, as threatening afflictions abound, encouraging consolations much more abound, 2 Cor. i. 5. (4.) The rainbow appears when one part of the sky is clear, which intimates mercy remembered in the midst of wrath; and the clouds are hemmed, as it were, with the rainbow, that it may not overspread the heavens; for the bow is coloured rain, or the edges of a cloud gilded. (5.) The rainbow is the reflection of the beams of the sun, which intimates, that all the glory and significancy of the seals of the covenant are derived from Christ the Sun of righteousness, who is also described with a rainbow about his throne, (Rev. iv. 3,) and a rainbow upon his head; (Rev. x. 1;) which bespeaks, not only his majesty, but his mediatorship.

Sin and Shame.—The consequence of Noah's sin was shame. He was uncovered within his tent, made naked to his shame, as Adam when he had eaten forbidden fruit. Yet Adam sought concealment; Noah is so destitute of thought and reason, that he seeks no covering. This was a fruit of the vine that Noah did not think of. Observe here the great evil of the sin of drunkenness. (1.) It discovers men; what infirmities they have they betray when they are drunken, and what secrets they are intrusted with are then easily got out of them. Drunken porters keep open gates. (2.) It disgraces men, and exposes them to contempt. As it shows them, so it shames them. Men say and do that, when drunken, which, when they are sober, they would blush at the thoughts of, Hab. ii. 15, 16.—Henry.

The Curse.—Ham must have felt it a very mortifying rebuke of his vile behaviour, when his own father was inspired on this occasion, to predict the durable oppression and slavery of his posterity: Canaan also was rebuked, by learning that the curse would especially rest on that branch of the family, which should descend from him; for his posterity were no doubt principally, though not exclusively intended. The devoted nations, which God destroyed before Israel, were descended from Canaan: and so were the Phœnicians and the Carthaginians, who were at length subjugated with dreadful destruction by the Greeks and Romans. "The whole continent of Africa was peopled principally by the descendants of Ham: and for how many ages have the better parts of that country lain under the dominion of the Romans, and then of the Saracens, and now of the Turks! In what wickedness, ignorance, barbarity, slavery, misery, live most of the inhabitants! and of the poor negroes, how many hundreds every year are sold and bought, like beasts in the market; and conveyed from one quarter of the world, to do the work of beasts in another!"—Scott.

CHAP. X. Colonisation.—This chapter, as a kind of introduction to universal history, implies many things afterwards related. It is supposed by many learned men, and shown at least by probable arguments, that the descendants of Gomer, Japheth's eldest son, settled in the northern parts of Asia Minor, and then spread into the Cimmerian Bosphorus, and the adjacent regions; and that from them the numerous tribes of the Gauls, Germans, Celts, and Cimbrians descended. The Scythians, Tartars, and other northern nations, are supposed to be descendants of Magog, Meshech, and Tubal; the Medes, of Medai; the Ionians, and indeed all the Greeks, of Javan; and the Thracians of Tiras. Nearly all the inhabitants of Europe, and probably of America, descended from Japheth, besides those of the northern regions of Asia.—"The isles of the Gentiles," generally mean the parts of Europe most known to the ancient inhabitants of Asia. The inhabitants of Britain are in general descended from Japheth, and especially concerned in the isles of the Gentiles.—The reader, by examining carefully the marginal references, may perceive, in several particulars, some of the grounds on which these conclusions rest: but it would be improper, in this place, to enter on so complicated a subject. From Cush, the eldest son of Ham, the Ethiopians in Africa, and many tribes in Asia, (inhabiting part of Arabia, and often improperly called Ethiopians,)

17 And the [n]Hivite, and the Arkite, and the Sinite.

18 And the [o]Arvadite, and the [p]Zemarite, and the [q]Hamathite: and afterward were the families of the Canaanites spread abroad.

19 And [r]the border of the Canaanites was from Sidon, [s]as thou comest to [t]Gerar, unto [u]Gaza; as thou goest unto [v]Sodom, and Gomorrah, and Admah, and Zeboim, even unto Lasha.

20 These are the sons of [x]Ham, after their families, after their tongues, in their countries, and in their nations.

21 ¶ Unto Shem also, [y]the father of all the children of Eber, [z]the brother of Japheth the elder, even to him were children born.

22 The [a]children of Shem; [b]Elam, and Asshur, and *Arphaxad, and [c]Lud, and [d]Aram.

23 And the children of Aram; [e]Uz, and Hul, and Gether, and Mash.

24 And Arphaxad begat [†]Salah; and [f]Salah begat Eber.

25 And unto Eber were born two sons: [g]the name of one was [†]Peleg, for in his days was the earth divided, [h]and his brother's name was Joktan.

26 And [i]Joktan begat Almodad, and Sheleph, and Hazarmaveth, and Jerah, 27 And Hadoram, and Uzal, and Diklah,

28 And Obal, and Abimael, and [k]Sheba,

29 And [l]Ophir, and [m]Havilah, and Jobab: all these were the sons of Joktan.

30 And their dwelling was from Mesha, as thou goest unto Sephar, a mount of the east.

31 These are the sons of Shem, [n]after their families, after their tongues, in their lands, after their nations.

32 These [o]are the families of the sons of Noah, after their generations, in their nations: and by these were the nations divided in the earth after the flood.

AND the whole earth [a]was of one *language,[1] and of one [†]speech.

2 And it came to pass, as they journeyed [‡]from the east, that they found a plain in the land of [b]Shinar; and they dwelt there.

3 And [§]they said one to another, [c]Go to, let us make brick, and [l]burn them throughly. And they had [d]brick for stone, and [e]slime had they for mortar.[2]

4 And they said, Go to, let us build us a city and a tower, [f]whose top may reach unto heaven, [g]and let us make us a name, [h]lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth.

5 And the LORD [i]came down to see the city and the tower, which the children of men builded.

6 And the LORD said, [k]Behold, [l]the people is one, and they have all one language; and this they begin to do: and now nothing will be restrained from them which they have [m]imagined to do.

7 Go to, [n]let us go down, and there [o]confound their language, that they [p]may not understand one another's speech.

8 So the [q]LORD scattered them abroad from thence upon the face of all the earth,[3] and they left off to build the city.

9 Therefore is the name of it called *Babel, because the LORD did there confound the language of all the earth: and from thence did the LORD scatter them abroad upon [r]the face of all the earth.

10 ¶ These are [s]the generations of Shem: Shem was an hundred years old, and begat Arphaxad two years after the flood.

11 And [t]Shem lived after he begat Arphaxad five hundred years, and begat sons and daughters.

12 And Arphaxad lived five and thirty years, and begat Salah.

13 And Arphaxad lived after he begat Salah four hundred and three years, and begat sons and daughters.

14 And Salah lived thirty years, and begat Eber.

15 And Salah lived after he begat Eber four hundred and three years, and begat sons and daughters.

16 And [u]Eber lived four and thirty years, and begat [†]Peleg.

17 And Eber lived after he begat Peleg four hundred and thirty years, and begat sons and daughters.

18 And Peleg lived thirty years, and begat [‡]Reu.

19 And Peleg lived after he begat Reu two hundred and nine years, and begat sons and daughters.

were evidently descended. Mizraim was the ancestor of the Egyptians, Cyrenians, and Libyans, or (the word being plural) the general name of the family or tribe, whence they sprang; and Phut, of the Mauritanians.—In short, all Africa is supposed to have been peopled by Ham's posterity; besides the Philistines, Canaanites, and Phœnicians.—Scott.

NIMROD.—Nimrod was a great hunter; this he began with, and for this became famous, to a proverb: every great hunter is, in remembrance of him, called a Nimrod. (1.) Some think he did good with his hunting, served his country by ridding it of the wild beasts which infested it, and so insinuated himself into the affections of his neighbours, and got to be their prince: those that exercise authority, either are, or at least would be called, benefactors, Luke xxii. 25. (2.) Others think, that, under pretence of hunting, he gathered men under his command, in pursuit of another game he had to play, which was to make himself master of the country, and to bring them into subjection. He was a mighty hunter, that is, He was a violent invader of his neighbours' rights and properties, and a persecutor of innocent men, carrying all before him, and endeavouring to make all his own, by force and violence. He thought himself a mighty prince, but, before the Lord, that is, in God's account, he was but a mighty hunter. Note, Great conquerors are but great hunters. Alexander and Cæsar would not make such a figure in scripture history as they do in common history.

AMBITION.—Observe, in Nimrod, the nature of ambition. (1.) It is boundless; much would have more, and still cries, Give, give. (2.) It is restless; Nimrod, when he had four cities under his command, could not be content till he had four more. (3.) It is expensive; Nimrod will rather be at the charge of rearing cities, than not have the honour of ruling them. The spirit of building is the common effect of a spirit of pride. (4.) It is daring, and will stick at nothing; Nimrod's name signifies rebellion, which (if he did indeed abuse his power to the oppression of his neighbours) teaches us that tyrants to men are rebels to God, and their rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—As all mankind are of one family, and nearly related in Adam and Noah, how reasonable is it that we should love and do good to each other! Whenever we behold a human being, whatever be his language and garb, or wherever he was born, we should recognise a near relation, and behave to him accordingly. In this view, how unnatural and absurd is that prejudice against foreigners, and that contempt of them, which generally prevail! And how can it consist with love to our neighbours, our brethren, "bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh," to treat them with rigour, or hold them in slavery?—Scott.

CHAP. XI. BABEL.—Let us build a city and a tower. It is observable, that the first builders of cities, both in the old world, chap iv. 17, and in the new world here, were not men of the best character and reputation; tents served God's subjects to dwell in; cities were first built by those that were rebels against him, and revolters from him. Observe here, 1. How they excited and encouraged one another to set about this work. They said, Go to, let us make brick, ver. 3, and again, ver. 4, Go to, let us build us a city; by mutual excitements they made one another more daring and resolute. 2. What materials they used in their building. The country being plain, yielded neither stone nor mortar, yet did not discourage them from their undertaking, but they made brick to serve instead of stone, and slime or pitch instead of mortar. See here, (1.) What shift those will make that are resolute in their purposes: were we but thus zealously affected in a good thing, we should not stop our work so often as we do, under pretence that we want conveniences for carrying it on. (2.) What a difference there is between men's building and God's; when men build their Babel, brick and slime are their best materials; but, when God builds his Jerusalem, he lays even the foundations of it with sapphires, and all its borders with pleasant stones, Isa. liv. 11, 12; Rev. xxi. 19. 3. For what ends they built. (1.) It seems designed for an affront to God himself; for they would build a tower, whose top might reach to heaven, which bespeaks a defiance of God, or at least a rivalship with him; they will be like the Most High, or come as near him as they can, not in holiness, but in height. They forgot their place, and, scorning to creep on the earth resolve to climb to heaven, not by the door, or ladder, but some other way. (2.) They hoped hereby to make them a name; they would do something to be talked of now, and to give posterity to know that there had been such men as they in the world; rather than die and leave no memorandum behind them, they would leave this monument of their pride, and ambition, and folly. (3.) They did it to prevent their dispersion: lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the earth. "It was done," (says Josephus,) "in disobedience to that command, chap. ix. 1, Replenish the earth." God orders them to scatter; "No," say they, "we will not, we will live and die together." In order hereunto, they engage themselves, and one another, in this vast undertaking. That they might unite in one glorious empire, they resolve to build this city and tower, to be the metropolis of their kingdom, and the centre of their unity. It is probable that the hand of ambitious Nimrod was in all this; he could not content himself with the command of a particular colony, but aimed at universal monarchy; in order to which, under pretence of uniting for their common safety, he contrives to keep them in one body, that, having them all under his eye, he might not fail to have them under his power.—Henry.

9 And Abram journeyed, [*]going on still toward the south.

10 ¶ And there was [u]a famine in the land: and Abram [x]went down into Egypt to sojourn there; for the famine was grievous in the land.

11 And it came to pass, when he was come near to enter into Egypt, that he said unto Sarai his wife, Behold now, I know that thou art [y]a fair woman to look upon.

12 Therefore it shall come to pass, when the Egyptians shall see thee, that they shall say, This is his wife: and they [z]will kill me, but they will save thee alive.

13 Say, I pray thee, [a]thou art my sister: that it may be well with me for thy sake; [b]and my soul shall live because of thee.

14 ¶ And it came to pass, that, when Abram was come into Egypt, the Egyptians [c]beheld the woman, that she was very fair.

15 The [d]princes also of Pharaoh saw her, and commended her before [e]Pharaoh: and the woman was [f]taken into Pharaoh's house.

16 And he [g]entreated Abram well for her sake: and [h]he had sheep, and oxen, and he-asses, and men-servants, and maid-servants, and she-asses, and camels.

17 And the LORD [i]plagued Pharaoh and his house with great plagues, because of Sarai, Abram's wife.

18 And Pharaoh called Abram, and said, [k]What is this that thou hast done unto me? why didst thou not tell me that she was thy wife?

19 Why saidst thou, She is my sister? so I might have taken her to me to wife: now, therefore, behold thy wife, take her, and go thy way.

20 And Pharaoh commanded his men exerted in confounding the language of this rebellious company; and nothing could be more suited to break their wicked combination. Some indeed have thought, that no more is meant than dividing their counsels, by leaving them to their violent passions, till they quarrelled and separated; and several other interpretations have been given: but the variety of languages, which has ever since prevailed on earth, proves that their language was confounded, and that they could not understand each other. By an extraordinary miracle, their minds were strangely confused, as to the meaning of the terms in which they had before conversed; and led to form other words and expressions. Thus new languages were produced; and, probably, these were as numerous as the principal families in the company, who could understand one another, but could not converse with their former associates. Thus the very plan which they had formed to prevent their dispersion made way for it; and in consequence the several tribes removed to the regions allotted to them. In some respects this was a severe rebuke, and led to the more entire separation of most of them from the worshippers of God: but it tended to accomplish his purpose in replenishing the earth with the human species.—"There is scarcely a great nation in the world, but what has its own language. The dividing of languages was therefore the dividing of nations; and so a bar to the whole world being under one government."—[Fuller.] Noah, and other pious persons, chiefly the descendants of Shem in the line of Eber, not being concerned in this project, retained the original language.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—How soon do men forget the most tremendous judgments, and return to their former crimes! The increase of wickedness kept pace with that of the human species; though the desolations of the deluge were before their eyes, though they sprang from the stock of righteous Noah, and though that patriarch was still living. So ineffectual is every thing, except the sanctifying grace of the Holy Spirit, to rectify the obliquity of the human will, and subdue the depravity of the human heart!—Arduous undertakings can be accomplished only by counsel, harmony, and mutual encouragement; which we often find in the enterprises of daring sinners against the cause of God, and which are too often wanting in the endeavours of his servants to promote his glory. There is, however, no counsel or wisdom against the Lord. While men on earth are plotting to defeat his purposes, "he sitteth in heaven, and langheth them to scorn;" and all the efforts of sinners to honour themselves will all at last terminate in shame and confusion.—In the difficulty with which our intercourse with foreign nations is carried on, and the labour with which learning is acquired, we experience the effects of the transaction at Babel.—Scott.

CHAP. XII. ABRAHAM'S BLESSING.—1. I will make of thee a great nation. When God took him from his own people, he promised to make him the head of another; he cut him off from being the branch of a wild olive, to make him the root of a good olive. 2. I will bless thee; either particularly, with the blessing of fruitfulness and increase, as he had blessed Adam and Noah; or in general, "I will bless thee with all manner of blessings, both of the upper and the nether springs: leave thy father's house, and I will give thee a father's blessing, better than that of thy progenitors." 3. I will make thy name great; by deserting his country he lost his name there: "Care not for that," says God, "but trust me, and I will make thee a greater name than ever thou couldest have had there." Having no child, he feared he should have no name; but God will make him a great nation, and so make him a great name. 4. Thou shalt be a blessing; that is, (1.) "Thy happiness shall be a sample of happiness, so that those who would bless their friends, shall only pray that God would make them like Abraham;" as Ruth iv. 11. Note, God's dealings, with obedient believers, are so kind and gracious, that we need not desire, for ourselves or our friends, to be any better dealt with; that is blessedness enough. (2.) "Thy life shall be a blessing to the places where thou shalt sojourn." Note, good men are the blessings of their country, and it is their unspeakable honour and happiness to be made so. 5. I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee; this made it a kind of league offensive and defensive between God and Abram. Abram heartily espoused God's cause, and here God promises to interest himself in his; He promises to be a friend to his friends, to take kindnesses shown to him as done to himself, and to recompense them accordingly. God will take care that none will be losers, in the long run, by any service done for his people; even a cup of cold water shall be rewarded. 6. In thee shall all families of the earth be blessed; this was the promise that crowned all the rest; for it points at the Messiah, in whom all the promises are yea and amen. Note, Jesus Christ is the great Blessing of the world, the greatest that ever the world was blessed with; he is a family-blessing, by him salvation is brought to the house, Luke xix. 9. When we reckon up our family blessings, let us put Christ in the imprimis—the first place, as the Blessing of blessings. But how are all the families of the earth blessed in Christ, when so many are strangers to him? Answer, (1.) All that are blessed, are blessed in him, Acts iv. 12. (2.) All that believe, of what family soever they are, shall be blessed in him. (3.) Some of all the families of the earth are blessed in him. (4.) There are some blessings which all the families of the earth are blessed with in Christ; for the gospel-salvation is a common salvation, Jude 3. —Henry.

concerning him;[1] and they sent him away, and his wife, and all that he had.

CHAP. XIII.

Abram and Lot return out of Egypt, 1. By disagreement they part asunder, 7. God's promise renewed to Abram, 14.

AND Abram went up out of Egypt, he, and his wife, and all that he had, and Lot with him, into [a]the south.

2 And Abram was very [b]rich in cattle, in silver, and in gold.

3 And he went on his journeys from the south, even to Beth-el, unto the place where his tent had been at the beginning, between Beth-el and Hai.

4 Unto [c]the place of the altar, which he had made there at the first: and there Abram [d]called on the name of the LORD.

5 ¶ And Lot also which went with Abram had flocks, and herds, and [e]tents.

6 And the land was not able to [f]bear them, that they might dwell together: for their substance was great, so that they could not dwell together.

7 And there was [g]a strife between the herdmen of Abram's cattle and the herdmen of Lot's cattle: and the [h]Canaanite and the Perizzite[1] dwelled then in the land.

8 And Abram said unto Lot, [i]Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen: for we be [k]brethren.

9 Is [l]not the whole land before thee? Separate thyself, I pray thee, from me: [m]if thou wilt take the left hand, then I will go to the right; or if thou depart to the right hand, then I will go to the left.

10 ¶ And Lot lifted up his eyes, [n]and beheld all [o]the plain of Jordan, that it was well watered every where, before the LORD destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah, even as [p]the garden of the LORD, like the land of Egypt, as thou comest unto [q]Zoar.

11 Then Lot chose him all the plain of Jordan; and Lot journeyed east: and [r]they separated themselves the one from the other.

12 Abram dwelled in the land of Canaan, and Lot [s]dwelled in the cities of the plain, and [t]pitched his tent toward Sodom.

13 But [u]the men of Sodom were wicked, and sinners [v]before the LORD exceedingly.

14 ¶ And the LORD said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, [x]Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art, [y]northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward.

15 For all the land which thou seest, [z]to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever.

16 And [a]I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth: so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered.

17 Arise, walk through the land, in the length of it, and in the breadth of it: for I will give it unto thee.

18 ¶ Then Abram removed his tent, and came and dwelt in the *plain of [b]Mamre, which is in [c]Hebron, and built there [d]an altar unto the LORD.

CHAP. XIV.

The battle of the kings, 1. Lot taken, 12. Is rescued by Abram, 14. Melchisedek blesseth Abram, 18, who giveth him tithes, 20.

AND it came to pass in the days of Amraphel king of [a]Shinar,[1] Arioch king of [b]Ellasar, Chedorlaomer king of [c]Elam, and Tidal king of nations;

2 That these made war with Bera king of [d]Sodom, and with Birsha king of Gomorrah, Shinab king of [e]Admah, and Shemeber king of Zeboiim, and the king of Bela, which is [f]Zoar.

3 All these were joined together in the vale of Siddim, which is the [g]salt sea.

4 Twelve years [h]they served Chedorlaomer, and in the thirteenth year they rebelled.

5 And in the fourteenth year came Chedorlaomer, and the kings that were with him, and smote the [i]Rephaims in [k]Ashteroth-Karnaim, and the [l]Zuzims in Ham, and the [m]Emims in [n]Shaveh Kiriathaim,

6 And the [o]Horites in their mount Seir, unto [p]El-paran, which is by the wilderness.

7 And they returned, and came to Enmishpat, which is [q]Kadesh, and smote all the country of the [r]Amalekites, and also the Amorites, that dwelt in [s]Hazezon-tamar.

8 And there went out the king of Sodom, and the king of Gomorrah, and the king of Admah, and the king of Zeboiim, and the king of Bela, (the same is Zoar;) and they joined battle with them in the vale of Siddim;

9 With Chedorlaomer the king of Elam, and with Tidal king of nations, and Amraphel king of Shinar, and Arioch king of Ellasar; four kings with five.

10 And the vale of Siddim was full of [t]slime-pits: and the kings of Sodom and Gomorrah fled, and fell there: and they that remained fled[2] to [u]the mountain.

11 And they took all the goods of Sodom and Gomorrah, and all their victuals, and went their way.

12 And they took [v]Lot, Abram's brother's son, ([w]who dwelt in Sodom,) and his goods, and departed.

13 ¶ And there came [x]one that had whither he went." He was fully satisfied that the call, promise, and command were from the living God. He believed that his testimony was true, and his promise faithful, and that he was able to fulfil it. He was assured that the blessing of the Almighty was sufficient to compensate for all that he could lose or leave behind, to countervail all trials, to supply all wants, and to answer and exceed all his desires and expectations. His natural reluctance might be strong; and many would deride him as a visionary, for leaving all, without so much as being able to inform his inquiring neighbours, or expostulating relatives, whither he was going. For it seems that Canaan was almost entirely unknown to him; being at least three hundred miles distant from Haran, and separated by great rivers, and an extensive perilous desert.—Lot also, with his family, went with him, having become, probably by his means, a believer: and they took such of their possessions as could be removed, with the servants who were their property, and perhaps many of them proselytes to their religion. Thus with steady perseverance they went forward, and by the Lord's guidance and protection, safely arrived in Canaan.

FAILURE OF FAITH.—It is supposed that Sarai's complexion, being fair, (as the Egyptians were sallow,) might render her more beautiful in the eyes of Pharaoh; though she was at this time sixty-five years of age.—The impartiality of the historian is here worthy of admiration: but the conduct of Abram was exceedingly culpable, and inconsistent with the character of "the father of the faithful," and "the friend of God." His counsel to Sarai could arise from nothing but distrust and unbelief; for a numerous posterity had been just before promised him; and would the Lord suffer him to be slain when childless? The words which he suggested to Sarai were at best an equivocation, intended for the purpose of deceiving. He tempted her to join in his sin, and thus to expose her own chastity to imminent danger! And his language implied a strong dependence on the success of his carnal policy; and a disposition, if it succeeded, to give Sarai the credit of preserving his life, instead of ascribing his safety to the Lord. The temptation also, thrown in the way of Pharaoh and his princes, was suited to ensnare them in guilt, and even to prejudice them against Abram's religion.—Scott.

CHAP. XIII. WEALTH.—Now Abram and Lot both being very rich, the land was not able to bear them, that they might dwell comfortably and peaceably together. So that their riches may be considered, (1.) As setting them at a distance one from another; because the place was too strait for them, and they had not room for their stock, it was necessary they should live asunder. Note, Every comfort in this world has its cross attending it. Business is a comfort: but it has this inconvenience in it, that it allows us not the society of those we love, so often, nor so long, as we could wish. (2.) As setting them at variance one with another. Note, Riches are often an occasion of strife and contention among relations and neighbours. This is one of those foolish and hurtful lusts which they that will be rich fall into, 1 Tim. vi. 9. Riches not only afford matter for contention, and are the things most commonly striven about: but they also stir up a spirit of contention, by making people proud and covetous. Meum et tuum—Mine and thine, are the great make-bates of the world. Poverty and travail, wants and wanderings, could not separate between Abram and Lot; but riches did it. Friends are soon lost, but God is a friend from whose love neither the height of prosperity, nor the depth of adversity, shall separate us.

THE PEACEMAKER.—Abram's petition for peace was very affectionate. Let there be no strife, I pray thee. Abram here shows himself to be a man, (1.) Of a cool spirit, that had the command of his passion, and knew how to turn away wrath with a soft answer. Those that would keep the peace must never render railing for railing. (2.) Of a condescending spirit; he was willing to beseech even his inferior to be at peace, and made the first overture of reconciliation. Conquerors reckon it their glory to give peace by power; and it is no less so to give peace by the meekness of wisdom.—Henry.

LOT'S CHOICE.—Lot seems to have expressed no great reluctance at leaving Abram's family, and the benefit of his conversation, counsel, example, worship, and instructions; nor so much as to have remitted to him the privilege of the first choice! But if this was faulty, it was still worse to choose, merely from "the lust of the eye," a well-watered fruitful land, without any higher motive, than the hope that his substance, already too large, would there become much greater.—Before the destruction of Sodom, this region appeared to those who approached it by the way of Zoar, which lay on its borders, like a most beautiful garden. The garden of Eden seems referred to: but in the Hebrew tongue, whatever is most excellent in its kind is thus described. The flat country, watered abundantly by the streams of Jordan, resembled Egypt in appearance and fertility. Thither Lot resorted: and Abram continued to dwell in a part of that country, which was afterwards inherited by his posterity.—Scott.

CHAP. XIV. ABRAHAM'S EXPEDITION.—The cause was plainly good, his call to engage in it was clear; and therefore, with all speed, he armed his trained servants, born in his house, to the number of three hundred and eighteen. A great family, but a small army, about as many as Gideon's that routed the Midianites, Judg. vii. 7. He drew out his trained servants, or his catechised servants, not only instructed in the art of war, which was then far short of the perfection which later and worse ages have improved it to, but instructed in the principles of religion; for Abram escaped, and told Abram [y]the Hebrew; for he [z]dwelt in the plain of [a]Mamre the [b]Amorite, brother of Eshcol, and brother of Aner: and these were confederate with Abram.

14 And when Abram heard that [c]his brother[3] was taken captive, he [‡]armed his [§]trained servants, [d]born in his own house, three hundred and eighteen, and pursued them unto [e]Dan.

15 And he divided himself against them, he and his servants, by night, [f]and smote them, and pursued them unto Hobah, which is on the left hand of [g]Damascus.

16 And [h]he brought back all the goods, and also brought again his brother Lot, and his goods, and the women also, and the people.

17 ¶ And the king of Sodom went out [i]to meet him ([k]after his return from the slaughter of Chedorlaomer, and of the kings that were with him), at the valley of Shaveh, which is the [l]king's dale.

18 And Melchizedek, [m]king of Salem, brought forth [n]bread and wine: and he was [o]the priest of the most high God.

19 And he [p]blessed him, and said, [q]Blessed be Abram of the [r]most high God, [s]possessor of heaven and earth:

20 And [t]blessed be the most high God, [u]which hath delivered thine enemies into thy hand. And he gave him [x]tithes of all.

21 ¶ And the king of Sodom said unto Abram, Give me the [‖]persons, and take the goods to thyself.

22 And Abram said to the king of Sodom, I have [y]lift up mine hand [z]unto the LORD, [a]the most high God, the possessor of heaven and earth;

23 That [b]I will not take from a thread even to a shoe-latchet, and that I will not take any thing that is thine, [c]lest thou shouldest say, I have made Abram rich:

24 Save only that which the young men have eaten, and the portion of the men which went with me, [d]Aner, Eschol, and Mamre; [e]let them take their portion.

CHAP. XV.

Abram is encouraged, 1. A son is promised, 4. He is justified by faith, 6. Canaan is promised again, 7.

AFTER these things the word of the LORD came unto Abram [a]in a vision, saying, [b]Fear not, Abram; I am [c]thy shield, and thy [d]exceeding great reward.

2 And Abram said, LORD God, [e]what wilt thou give me, seeing I go [f]childless, and [g]the steward of my house is this Eliezer of Damascus?

3 And Abram said [h]Behold, to me thou hast given no seed: and, lo, one [i]born in my house is mine heir.

4 ¶ And, behold, the word of the LORD came unto him, saying, This shall not be thine heir, but he that [k]shall come forth out of thine own bowels shall be thine heir.

5 And he brought him forth abroad, and said, Look now toward heaven, and [l]tell the stars, if thou be able to number them: and he said unto him, [m]So shall thy seed be.

6 And [n]he believed in the LORD; and he [o]counted it to him for righteousness.

7 ¶ And he said unto him, I am the LORD that [p]brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees, to give thee this land to inherit it.

8 And he said, LORD God, [q]whereby shall I know that I shall inherit it?

9 And he said unto him, Take me [r]an heifer of [s]three years old, and a she-goat of three years old, and a ram of three years old, and a turtle-dove, and a young pigeon.

10 And he took unto him all these, and [t]divided them in the midst, and laid each piece one against another: but [u]the birds divided he not.

11 And when the fowls came down upon the carcases, [x]Abram drove them away.

12 And when the sun was going down, [y]a deep sleep fell upon Abram: and, lo, [z]an horror of great darkness fell upon him.

13 And he said unto Abram, Know of a surety, that [a]thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them: and they shall afflict them [b]four hundred years.

14 And also [c]that nation whom they shall serve, will I judge; and afterward shall they come out [d]with great substance.

15 And [e]thou shalt go to thy fathers [f]in peace; thou shalt be [g]buried in [h]a good old age.

16 But in [i]the fourth generation they shall come hither again; for the iniquity of [k]the Amorites [l]is not yet full.

17 ¶ And it came to pass, that when the sun went down, and it was dark, behold a [m]smoking furnace, and *a burning lamp that passed between those pieces.

18 In the same day the LORD [n]made a covenant with Abram, saying, [o]Unto thy seed have I given this land, [p]from the river of Egypt, unto the great river, the river [q]Euphrates;

19 The [r]Kenites, and the Kenizzites, and the Kadmonites,

20 And the Hittites, and the Perizzites, and [s]the Rephaims, commanded his household to keep the way of the Lord. This shows that Abram was, 1. A great man, who had so many servants depending upon him, and employed by him; which was not only his strength and honour, but gave him a great opportunity of doing good, which is all that is truly valuable and desirable in great places and great estates. 2. A good man, who not only served God himself, but instructed all about him in the service of God. Note, Those that have great families, have not only many bodies, but many souls, beside their own, to take care of, and provide for. Those that would be found the followers of Abram, must see that their servants be catechised servants. 3. A wise man; for though he was a man of peace, yet he disciplined his servants for war, not knowing what occasion he might have, some time or other, so to employ them.—Henry.

21 And [t]the Amorites, and the Canaanites, and [u]the Girgashites, and the Jebusites.

MELCHIZEDEK.—Various have been the opinions of expositors respecting Melchizedek. Some have conjectured that it was Shem, who, as Abram's venerable progenitor, was entitled to peculiar respect. But Shem's genealogy was well known; and Levi was descended from him as well as from Abram, which is irreconcileable with the apostle's reasoning on the subject.—Others therefore have thought that it was the Son of God himself; being unwilling to allow that any mere man was superior to Abram. But surely the apostle in this case would never have said, that Melchizedek was "made like to the Son of God;" or that Christ was constituted "a priest after the order of Melchizedek;" or consider him as a type of himself! Melchizedek is stated to have been the king of Salem; (probably the city afterwards called Jerusalem, and distinguished in pagan writers by the name Solyma;) but we may be sure that Christ did not then reign over any particular city as a temporal prince. It is indeed very evident that Melchizedek was a mere man; but the Lord has not seen good to inform us from which of Noah's sons he sprang; or who were his immediate parents, predecessors, or successors: indeed, he seems intentionally to have concealed them. We may, however, reasonably determine, that he was an aged person, venerable for sanctity, who ruled over his subjects in righteousness, while they lived under him in peace; which, when oppression and violence prevailed among their neighbours, perhaps gave the name both to him and to his city: he also kept up the worship of the true God, and though a king, he officiated as his priest.—In these things, and many others, he was a remarkable type of Christ; and, in reverence to his age, rank, piety, and priestly character, Abram showed him great honour, received his benediction, and gave him tithes of all his spoils: being influenced to this by some secret divine monition; perhaps being led to see in this typical character his future Lord and Saviour. At least the Spirit of God intended to instruct Abram's descendants by this action, "that a better priest should arise" than those of the family of Aaron.—We cannot determine from the silence of the sacred historian, that this was the only interview between Melchizedek and Abram: for, as Shem lived almost as long as Abram, it is probable they met together, though we are not informed that they did.—Bread and wine constituted a suitable refreshment of Abram's weary followers: and it is remarkable that Christ hath appointed the same, as the memorials of his body and blood, which are "meat indeed and drink indeed." Melchizedek is the only person expressly spoken of, as the priest of the true God, before the institution of the Aaronic priesthood. In this he had no predecessor, or successor, but was appointed for special purposes by God himself.—Scott.

CHAP. XV. PROMISE REPEATED.—1. God gave Abram express promise of a son, ver. 4. This that is born in thy house shall not be thine heir, as thou fearest, but one that shall come forth out of thine own bowels shall be thine heir. Note, (1.) God makes heirs; he says, "This shall not, and this shall;" whatever men devise and design, in settling their estates, God's counsel shall stand. (2.) God is often better to us than our own fears, and gives the mercy we had long despaired of. 2. To affect him the more with surprise, he took him out, and showed him the stars, (this vision being early in the morning before day,) and then tells him, So shall thy seed be, ver. 5. (1.) So numerous; the stars seem innumerable to a common eye: Abram feared he should have no child at all, but God tells him that the descendants from his loins should be so many as not to be numbered. (2.) So illustrious, resembling the stars in splendour: for to them pertained the glory, Rom. ix. 4. Abram's seed, according to his flesh, were like the dust of the earth, (chap. xiii. 16,) but his spiritual seed are like the stars of heaven, not only numerous, but glorious and very precious.—Henry.

THE COVENANT.—In order to give Abram the desired token, the Lord was pleased to prescribe a solemn sacrifice. The heifer, she goat, and ram were supposed to be arrived at maturity when three years old. As the ratification of a covenant between the Lord and his servant was intended, the animals were divided asunder, the birds alone excepted; because the form of covenanting required that the persons concerned should pass between the parts of the sacrifice; perhaps intimating, that he who broke the covenant, might expect in like manner to be cut asunder by the avenging sword of justice. The Gentiles, as well as the Jews, used a form of this kind in confirming covenants and treaties; which custom might perhaps be derived by tradition from this transaction; or the Lord saw good to condescend, as far as practicable to a custom already established.—Scott.

THE CHARTER.—We have a recital of the particulars granted, such as is usual in the grants of lands. He specifies the boundaries of the land intended hereby to be granted, mistress, 6, is sent back by an angel, 9. Ishmael is born, 15.

NOW Sarai Abram's wife [a]bare him no children; and she had an handmaid, [b]an Egyptian, whose [c]name was Hagar.

2 And Sarai said unto Abram, Behold now, [d]the LORD hath restrained me from bearing; I pray thee go in unto my maid; it may be that I may [e]obtain children by her; and Abram [f]hearkened to the voice of Sarai.

3 And Sarai, Abram's wife, took Hagar her maid, the Egyptian, after Abram [g]had dwelt ten years in the land of Canaan, and [h]gave her to her husband Abram to be [i]his wife.

4 And he went in unto Hagar, and she conceived: and when she saw that she had conceived, [j]her mistress was despised in her eyes.

5 And Sarai said unto Abram, [k]My wrong be upon thee; I have given my maid into thy bosom; and when she saw that she had conceived, I was despised in her eyes: [l]the LORD judge between me and thee.

6 But [m]Abram said unto Sarai, [l]Behold, thy maid is [n]in thy hand; do to her [o]as it pleaseth thee. And when Sarai [p]dealt hardly with her, she [q]fled from her face.

7 ¶ And the angel of the LORD found her by a fountain of water in the wilderness, by [r]the fountain in the way to Shur.

8 And he said, Hagar, [s]Sarai's maid, [t]whence comest thou? and whither wilt thou go? And she said, I flee from the face of my mistress Sarai.

9 And the angel of the LORD said unto her, Return to thy mistress, and [u]submit thyself under her hands.

10 And [v]the angel of the LORD said unto her, [w]I will multiply thy seed exceedingly, that it shall not be numbered for multitude.

11 And the angel of the LORD said unto her, Behold, thou art with child, and shalt bear a son, and [x]shalt call his name [y]Ishmael, [z]because the LORD [a]hath heard thy affliction.

12 And he will be [b]a wild man; [c]his hand will be against every man, and every man's hand against him: and [d]he shall dwell in the presence of all his brethren.

13 And she [e]called the name of the LORD that spake unto her, [f]Thou God seest me; for she said, Have I also here looked after him that seeth me?

14 Wherefore the well was called [g]Beer-lahai-roi; behold, it is between [h]Kadesh and Bered.

15 ¶ And [i]Hagar bare Abram a son: and Abram called his son's name, which Hagar bare, [j]Ishmael.

16 And Abram was fourscore and six years old, when Hagar bare Ishmael to Abram.

The covenant is renewed, 1. Abram's name changed, 5. Circumcision is instituted, 10. Isaac is promised, 16.

AND when Abram [a]was ninety years old and nine, [b]the LORD appeared to Abram, and said unto him, I am the [c]Almighty God: [d]walk before me, and be thou [e]perfect.

2 And [f]I will make my covenant between me and thee, and will [g]multiply thee exceedingly.

3 And Abram [h]fell on his face: and God talked with him, saying,

4 As for me, behold, my covenant is with thee, and thou shalt be [i]a father of [j]many nations.

5 Neither shall thy name any more be called Abram; but [k]thy name shall be [l]Abraham, for a father of many nations have I made thee.

6 And I will make thee exceeding fruitful, and I will make [m]nations of thee; and [k]kings shall come out of thee.

7 And [n]I will establish my covenant between me and thee, and thy seed after thee, in their generations, for an everlasting covenant; to be [o]a God unto thee, and [p]to thy seed after thee.

8 And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land [q]wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an [r]everlasting possession: and I will be [s]their God.

9 ¶ And God said unto Abraham, Thou shalt [t]keep my covenant therefore, thou and thy seed after thee, in their generations.

10 This is my covenant which ye shall keep between me and you, and thy seed after thee; [u]every man-child among you shall be circumcised.

11 And ye shall circumcise [v]the flesh of your foreskin, and it shall be a token of the covenant betwixt me and you.

12 And he that is [w]eight days old shall be circumcised among you, every man-child in your generations, [x]he that is born in the house, or bought with money of any stranger, which is not of thy seed.

13 He [y]that is born in thy house, and he that is [z]bought with thy money, must needs be circumcised: and my covenant shall be in your flesh for an everlasting covenant.

14 And the uncircumcised man-child, whose flesh of his foreskin is not circumcised, that soul shall be [a]cut off from his people; he hath [b]broken my covenant.

ver. 18. And then for the greater certainty, as is usual in such cases, he mentions in whose tenure and occupation these lands now were. Then several nations or tribes are here spoken of, ver. 19—21, that must be cast out, to make room for the seed of Abram. They were not possessed of all these countries when God brought them into Canaan. The bounds are fixed much narrower, Num. xxxiv. 2, 3, &c. But, (1.) In David's time and Solomon's their jurisdiction extended to the utmost of these limits, 2 Chron. ix. 26. (2.) It was their own fault that they were not sooner and longer in possession of all these territories. They forfeited their right by their sins, and by their own sloth and cowardice kept themselves out of possession. (3.) The land granted is here described in its utmost extent, because it was to be a type of the heavenly inheritance, where there is room enough: in our Father's house are many mansions.—Henry.

CHAP. XVI. HAGAR.—Hagar, forgetful of God, who had especially favoured her, was lifted up with pride and self-preference; flattering herself that she should now secure Abram's affections, and probably expecting to be the mother of the promised Seed. Sarai, also, instead of condemning herself, seemed to claim merit from her conduct; unreasonably blamed Abram, as if he had encouraged Hagar's insolence; improperly appealed to the Lord; and betrayed much passion and peevishness, and a very uneasy frame of mind. "Passionate appeals to God, instead of indicating a good cause, are commonly the marks of a bad one."—[Fuller.] In these perplexing circumstances Abram indeed acted wisely in relinquishing Hagar, and showed that he had not been influenced by carnal affection: but he conceded too far in leaving one, whom he was bound to protect, entirely in the power of Sarai, whose mind was too much embittered to act with equity and impartiality: so that she exacted rigorously from Hagar her former service, which in her situation was unjustifiable; and she otherwise used her with harshness. And Hagar, not brooking to be treated as a slave, when she had expected the privilege of a wife, passionately and inconsiderately left Abram's house and family.—Scott.

THE ANGEL'S QUESTION.—He called her Hagar, Sarai's maid, 1. As a check to her pride: though she was Abram's wife, and, as such, was obliged to return, yet he calls her Sarai's maid, to humble her. 2. As a rebuke to her flight: Sarai's maid ought to be in Sarai's tent, and not wandering in the wilderness, and sauntering by a fountain of water. Now, 3. The questions the angel put to her, were proper and very pertinent. (1.) "Whence camest thou? Consider that thou art running away, both from the duty thou wast bound to, and the privileges thou wast blessed with, in Abram's tent." Note, It is a great advantage to live in a religious family, which those ought to consider who have that advantage, yet, upon every slight inducement, are forward to quit it. (2.) "Whither wilt thou go? Thou art running thyself into sin, in Egypt," (if she return to that people, she will return to their gods,) "and into danger, in the wilderness" through which she must travel, Deut. viii. 15. Note, Those who are forsaking God and their duty would do well to remember not only whence they are fallen, but whither they are falling.—Henry.

ISHMAEL.—The word, rendered "a wild man," properly signifies a wild-ass man: and perhaps this emblem was descriptive of Ishmael's character; but his posterity were principally intended. The Hagarenes, Saracens, and various other tribes of Arabs, are allowed to have descended in great measure from Ishmael; and they have, in all ages, to this present day, been a hardy untamed race of freebooters, unlike every other nation in the world. They have chiefly subsisted by plundering their neighbours, and passengers; as it appears by the united testimony of all the historians and travellers who have written of those countries. They have provoked the enmity of the neighbouring nations, and have lived in a state of hostility with all men; so that there is no travelling in safety through those countries, except in large armed companies, called caravans, and these are often plundered. Yet have they set at defiance the mightiest conquerors in every age, and stood their ground against them all. The Persians, Macedonians, and Romans, successively attempted to subjugate them; and made many powerful, but ineffectual, efforts to that purpose. At length Mohammed arose, and under him and his successors, they subdued a large part of the world. After a time, indeed, the power of the Mohammedans was transferred to the Turks, who have repeatedly attempted to subdue the Saracens, or Arabs: but, instead of succeeding, they have for above three hundred years been obliged to pay a large tribute to them, for the safe passage of their pilgrims to Mecca, the city which is the centre of their religion! The descendants of Ishmael also lived as ravagers in the neighbourhood of the Israelites and Edomites, and other descendants of Abram, and yet were never subjugated by any of them.—Scott.

CHAP. XVII. NEW NAME.—His name was changed from Abram, a high father, to Abraham, the father of a multitude. This was, (1.) To put an honour upon him; it is spoken of as the glory of the church, that she shall be called by a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall name, Isa. lxii. 2. Princes dignified their favourites by conferring new titles upon them; thus was Abraham dignified by him that is indeed the fountain of honour: all believers have a new name, Rev. ii. 17. Some think it added to the honour of Abraham's new name, that a letter of the name Jehovah was inserted into it, as it was a disgrace to Jeconiah to have the first syllable of his name cut off, because it was the same with the first syllable of that sacred name, Jer. xxii. 28. Believers are son also of her: yea, I will bless her, and she shall *be a mother of nations; [d]kings of people shall be off her.

17 Then Abraham fell upon his face, [e]and laughed, and said in his heart, Shall a child be born unto him that is an hundred years old? and shall Sarah, that is ninety years old, bear?

18 And Abraham said unto God, [f]O that Ishmael [2]might live before thee!

19 And God said, [g]Sarah thy wife shall bear thee a son indeed; and thou shalt call his name Isaac: and I will establish my covenant with him for an everlasting covenant, and with his seed after him.

20 And as for Ishmael, I have heard thee: Behold, [h]I have blessed him, and will make him fruitful, and will multiply him exceedingly; twelve princes shall he beget,[3] and I will make him a great nation.

21 But [i]my covenant will I establish with Isaac[4] which Sarah shall bear unto thee [k]at this set time in the next year.

22 And he left off [l]talking with him, and God went up from Abraham.

23 ¶ And Abraham took Ishmael his son, and all that were born in his house, and all that were bought with his money, every male among the men of Abraham's house; and [m]circumcised the flesh of their foreskin, in the selfsame day, as God had said unto him.

24 And [n]Abraham was ninety years old and nine, when he was circumcised in the flesh of his foreskin.

25 And Ishmael his son was thirteen years old, when he was circumcised in the flesh of his foreskin.

26 [o]In the selfsame day was Abraham circumcised, and Ishmael his son.

27 And all the men of his house, born in the house, and bought with money of the stranger, were [p]circumcised with him.

6 And Abraham hastened into the tent unto Sarah, and said, [‡]Make ready quickly [g]three measures of fine meal, knead it, and make cakes upon the hearth.

7 And Abraham [h]ran unto the herd, and fetched a calf tender and good, and gave it unto a young man; and he hasted to dress it.

8 And [i]he took butter and milk, and the calf which he had dressed, and set it before them; [k]and he stood by them under the tree,[3] [l]and they did eat.

9 And they said unto him, [m]Where is Sarah thy wife? And he said, Behold, [n]in the tent.

10 And [o]he said, I will certainly return unto thee [p]according to the time of life: and, lo, [q]Sarah thy wife shall have a son. And Sarah heard it in the tent-door, which was behind him.

11 Now Abraham and Sarah were [r]old, and well stricken in age: and it ceased to be with Sarah after [s]the manner of women.

12 Therefore Sarah [t]laughed within herself, saying, After I am waxed old, shall I have pleasure, [u]my lord being old also?

13 And the LORD said unto Abraham, Wherefore did Sarah laugh, saying, Shall I of a surety bear a child, which am old?

14 Is [v]any thing too hard for the LORD? At the time appointed [w]I will return unto thee, according to the time of life, and Sarah shall have a son.

15 Then Sarah [x]denied, saying, I laughed not: for she was afraid. And he said, [y]Nay, but thou didst laugh.

16 ¶ And the men rose up from thence, and looked toward Sodom: and Abraham went with them, [z]to bring them on the way.

17 And the Lord said, [a]Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do, 18 Seeing that Abraham shall surely [b]become a great and mighty nation, and all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him?

19 For [c]I know him, that he will [d]command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the LORD, to do justice and judgment: [e]that the LORD may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him.

20 And the LORD said, Because [f]the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, and because their [g]sin is very grievous; named from Christ, Eph. iii. 15. (2.) To encourage and confirm the faith of Abraham; while he was childless, perhaps even his own name was sometimes an occasion of grief unto him: why should he be called a high father, who was not a father at all? But now that God had promised him a numerous issue, and had given him a name which signified so much, that name was his joy. Note, God calls things that are not, as though they were. It is the apostle's observation upon this very thing, Rom. iv. 17, he called Abraham the father of a multitude, because he should prove to be so in due time, though as yet he had but one child.—Henry.

THE SEAL OF THE COVENANT.—Many nations have practised circumcision, and do so to this day; and even some not descended from Abraham, or related to him: yet, it is highly probable, that this was the first introduction of this singular observance.—Cutting off the foreskin seems to have been intended as an intimation, that a sinful nature is propagated with the human species; and this depravity called "the old man," must be put off, or mortified and destroyed, by believers. In them the "heart is circumcised to love the Lord;" and rebellion and enmity are gradually destroyed out of it by sanctifying grace. This observance was the sacrament of regeneration, "the seal of the righteousness of faith;" Rom. iv. 11; for the circumcision of the heart is an inward seal, that the sinner is justified by the righteousness of faith, as Abraham was.—Circumcision was a bloody and painful ordinance: for the sanctification of the Spirit is vouchsafed to sinners through the blood of Christ; the mortification of sin is painful to the flesh; and, till the blood of Christ had been shed once for all, the ordinances of God were generally attended with the shedding of blood; but none since that time have been so. Not only Abraham and Isaac, and Abraham's posterity by Isaac, were circumcised; but his son Ishmael, and his very bond-servants; for circumcision sealed not only the covenant of Canaan to Isaac's posterity, but heaven, through Christ, to the whole church of God. The outward sign belonged to the professed people of God; but the inward seal of the Spirit is peculiar to those whom God knows, (and he alone can know them,) to be believers.—Infants were circumcised, because a part of the visible church, and because this was a profession of their parents' faith, and a pledge for the religious education of their children, thus early dedicated to God. Yet, they must not be circumcised till the eighth day; and under the law, even animals must not be presented to God before that age; Ex. xxii. 29—31. But as many infants would die before the eighth day; this might intimate that the outward ordinance, though always the parents' duty, was not essential to salvation. Males only were capable of circumcision; but in Christ there is no more distinction between male or female, than between Jew and Gentile. The Gentile, who embraced the Jewish religion, was circumcised adult; but his future offspring at eight days old. The uncircumcised were ordered to be cut off; for, the neglect of circumcision was in fact a rejection of the covenant; and the uncircumcised in heart will be separated for ever from the Lord and his people. Doubtless the guilt of his neglect would be chargeable on the parent, and not on the child till grown up.—Scott.

THE WORLD AND THE CHURCH—ISHMAEL AND ISAAC.—1. Common blessings are secured to Ishmael, ver. 20. As for Ishmael, whom thou art in so much care about, I have heard thee; he shall find favour for thy sake; I have blessed him, that is, I have many blessings in store for him. (1.) His posterity shall be numerous; I will multiply him exceedingly, more than his neighbours: this is the fruit of the blessing, as that, chap. i. 28. (2.) They shall be considerable; twelve princes shall he beget: we may charitably hope that spiritual blessings also were bestowed upon him, though the visible church was not brought out of his loins, and the covenant was not lodged in his family. Note, Great plenty of outward good things is often given to those children of godly parents, who are born after the flesh, for their parents' sake. 2. Covenant-blessings are reserved for Isaac, and appropriated to him, ver. 19, 21. If Abraham, in his prayer for Ishmael, meant that he would have the covenant made with him; and the Promised Seed to come from him; then God did not answer him in the letter, but in that sense which was equivalent, nay, which was every way better.—Henry.

CHAP. XVIII. GOD IN MAN'S FORM.—It is here expressly said, that Jehovah appeared to Abraham, or was seen by him; and the manner of this appearance is afterwards related.—Abraham was waiting for an opportunity of exercising hospitality, by entertaining any weary traveller, who might need refreshment and a cooling shade, (for inns were not then to be met with, as among us;) and at that time three persons, appearing as men, presented themselves before him. It is generally agreed, that two of these were created angels; but many infer from the context, that the other was the eternal Son, visibly appearing as in human form. Indeed, there is not the least intimation in the narrative of any other appearance, except that of the three men whom Abraham entertained. If this were the only instance, in which language naturally suited to warrant such a conclusion was used, it would not be proper to ground much upon it: but passages frequently occur, which seem incapable of any other construction, without having recourse to human tradition, in explaining the words of inspiration, even that very tradition which our Lord opposed, (Mark vii. 9;) and thus implying that the simple narrative of the sacred historian was calculated to mislead the unlearned.—Scott.

HOSPITALITY.—The Holy Ghost takes particular notice of the very free and affectionate welcome which Abraham gave to the strangers. 1. He was complaisant and respectful to them; forgetting his age, he "ran to meet them" in the most obliging manner, and "bowed himself toward the ground," though as yet he knew nothing of them, but that they appeared graceful, respectable men. Note, Religion does not destroy, but improves good manners, and teaches us to honour all men. Decent civility is a great ornament to piety. 2. He was very earnest and importunate for their stay, and took it as a great favour, ver. 3, 4. Note, (1.) It becomes those whom God has blessed with plenty, to be liberal and open-hearted in their entertainments, according to their ability, and (not in compliment, but cordially) to bid their friends welcome: we should take a pleasure in showing kindness to any; for both God and man love a cheerful giver. Who would "eat the bread of him that hath an evil eye?" Prov. xxiii. 6, 7. (2.) Those that would have communion with God, must earnestly desire it, and pray for it. God is a Guest worth entreating. 3. His entertainment, though it was very free, yet it was plain and homely, and there was nothing in it of the gaiety and niceness of these times. His dining-room was an arbour under a tree; no rich table-linen, no side-board set with plate; his feast was a joint or two of veal, and some "cakes baked on the hearth," and both hastily dressed up; here were no dainties, no varieties, no forced-meats, no sweet-meats, but good plain wholesome food, though Abraham was very rich, and his guests very honourable. Note, We ought not to be curious in our diet: let us be thankful for food convenient, though it be homely and common; and not be desirous of dainties, for they are deceitful meat to those that love them, and set their hearts upon them. 4. He and his wife were both of them very attentive, and busy, in accommodating their guests with the best they had. Sarah herself is cook and baker; Abraham runs to fetch the calf, brings out the milk and butter, and thinks it not below him to wait at table, that he might show how heartily welcome his guests were.—Henry.

SARAH.—This attention to Abraham's concerns would gradually show him whom he had entertained. At first, they inquired after Sarah, who was in her tent: and then one of them, JEHOVAH, (as it must appear to every plain reader,) spake to Abraham respecting that promise as his own, which had been given in the foregoing chapter (ver. 19.) by the almighty God; and he expressly engaged for its accomplishment! But, as this had been delayed, till it had become unprecedented, according to general observation, Sarah, who heard what passed, "laughed within herself;" (xxi. 6,) and spake words, not very dissimilar to those of Abraham in the preceding chapter. Yet, the heart-searching God saw, that her's was the expression of unbelief; and his of faith, admiration, and joy "According to the time of life," is supposed to mean the usual term of pregnancy.—It is observable, that from this very speech of Sarah, the apostle Peter quotes her words concerning Abraham, in which she calls him, "My Lord," as a commendable instance of her dutiful subjection to him!

ABRAHAM'S PRAYER FOR SODOM.—"The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much;" and the ungodly are little aware how deeply they are indebted, as to temporal comforts, and that long-suffering, which frequently makes way for their conversion and salvation, to the prayers of the very persons whom they despise and injure; nay, a number in any nation or city, who stand in the gap by their intercessions and exertions, are a stronger defence than armies, navies, or fortifications.—It is our duty and privilege thus to stand before the Lord, not only in behalf of our relatives, friends, brethren, and country, but likewise of all on whom we apprehend the wrath of God is about to be poured; and to fill our mouth with arguments, and order our case before him in the best manner we can. And though our unworthiness and vileness, compared with his majesty and holiness, must frequently excite a consciousness, how unmeet we are, thus "to engage our hearts to approach unto God," yet, coming through our great and merciful High-Priest to a throne of grace, we, sinful dust and ashes, need not fear, lest the Lord should be angry at our humble, compassionate, and fervent petitions: for they are "spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God through Jesus Christ." We shall always find him more ready to hear, than we are to ask; and shall commonly discontinue our requests, before he ceases to grant them. Yet in many cases we must be satisfied with the assurance, that our prayers will return into our own bosom.—In praying for sinners, we should be careful not to impeach the justice of God in their condemnation; for we could not desire, that the destruction of the finally impenitent should be prevented.—The Lord will by no means deal "alike with the righteous and the wicked," "That be far from him; shall not the Judge of all the earth do right."—Scott.

CHAP. XIX. LOT IN SODOM.—Lot sufficiently distinguished himself from the rest of his neighbours at this time, which plainly set a mark upon him. He that did not act like the rest, must not fare like the rest. 1. Lot sat in the gate of Sodom at even; when the rest, it is likely, were tippling and drinking, he sat alone, waiting for an opportunity to do good. 2. He was extremely respectful to men whose mien and aspect were sober and serious, though they did not come in state. He bowed himself to the ground when he met them, as if, upon the first view, he discerned something divine in them. 3. He was hospitable, and very free and generous in his invitations and entertainments. He courted these strangers to his house, and to the best accommodations he had, and gave them all the evidences that he could of his sincerity.—Henry.

here; lest thou be consumed in the [t]iniquity of the city.

16 And while he [c]lingered, the men laid hold upon his hand, and upon the hand of his wife, and upon the hand of his two daughters; [d]the LORD being merciful unto him: and they [e]brought him forth, and set him without the city.

17 And it came to pass, when they had brought them forth abroad, that he said, [f]Escape for thy life; [g]look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain; escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed.

18 And Lot said unto them, [h]Oh, not so, my Lord.

19 Behold now, thy servant hath found grace in thy sight, [i]and thou hast magnified thy mercy, which thou hast shewed unto me in saving my life: and I cannot escape to the mountain, [k]lest some evil take me, and I die.

20 Behold, now, [l]this city is near to flee unto, and it is a little one: Oh, let me escape thither, (is it not a little one?) [m]and my soul shall live.

21 And he said unto him, See, [n]I have accepted [‡]thee concerning this thing also, [o]that I will not overthrow this city, for the which thou hast spoken.

22 Haste thee, escape thither: [p]for I cannot do any thing till thou be come thither. Therefore the name of the city was [q]called [§]Zoar.

23 The sun was [‖]risen upon the earth when Lot entered into Zoar.

24 ¶ Then [r]the LORD rained upon Sodom and upon Gomorrah, brimstone and fire from the LORD out of heaven.

25 And he overthrew those cities, and [s]all the plain, and all the inhabitants of the cities, and that which grew upon the ground.

26 ¶ But his wife [t]looked back from behind him, [u]and she became a pillar[3] of salt.

27 ¶ And Abraham gat up early in the morning, [x]to the place where he stood before the LORD.

28 And he looked toward Sodom and Gomorrah, and toward all the land of the plain, and beheld, [y]and, lo, the smoke of the country went up as the smoke of a furnace.

29 ¶ And it came to pass, when God destroyed the cities of the plain, that [z]God remembered Abraham, and sent Lot out of the midst of the overthrow, when he overthrew the cities in the which Lot dwelt.

30 ¶ And [a]Lot went up out of Zoar, and dwelt in the mountain, and his two daughters with him; for [b]he feared to dwell in Zoar: and he dwelt in a cave, he and his two daughters.

31 ¶ And the first-born said unto the younger, Our father is old, and there is not a man in the earth [c]to come in unto us after the manner of all the earth.[4]

32 Come, let us make our father [d]drink wine, and we will lie with him, that we may preserve [e]seed of our father.

33 And they made their father [f]drink wine that night: and the first-born went in, and lay with her father; and he perceived not when she lay down, nor when she arose.

34 And it came to pass on the morrow, that the first-born said unto the younger, Behold, [g]I lay yesternight with my father: let us make him drink wine this night also; and go thou in, and lie with him, that we may preserve seed of our father.

35 And they made their father drink wine [h]that night also: and the younger arose, and lay with him; and he perceived not when she lay down, nor when she arose.

36 Thus [i]were both the daughters of Lot with child by their father.

37 And the first-born bare a son, and called his name Moab: the same is the father of the [k]Moabites unto this day.

38 And the younger, she also bare a son, and called his name Ben-ammi: the same is the father of the [l]children of Ammon unto this day.

Abraham denieth his wife, and loseth her, 1; Abimelech restoreth her, 14.

AND Abraham journeyed from [a]thence toward the south-country, and dwelled between [b]Kadesh and Shur, and sojourned in [c]Gerar.[1]

2 And Abraham [d]said of Sarah his wife, She is my sister. And [e]Abimelech king of Gerar sent, and took Sarah.

3 But God came to Abimelech in [f]a dream by night, and said to him, Behold, thou art but [g]a dead man, for the woman which thou hast taken; for she is [*]a man's wife.

4 But Abimelech [h]had not come near her: and he said, LORD, [i]wilt thou slay also a righteous nation?

5 Said he not unto me, She is my sister? and she, even she herself, said, He is my brother: [k]in the [†]integrity of my heart, [l]and innocency of my hands, have I done this.

6 And God said unto him in a dream, Yea, I know that thou didst this in the integrity of thy heart; for I also [m]withheld thee from [n]sinning against me: therefore suffered I thee not [o]to touch her.

7 Now therefore restore the man his wife; for he is a [p]prophet, and he shall [q]pray for

SODOM.—The simple narration (ver. 4—6) conveys more forcibly an idea of the extreme and unparalleled wickedness of Sodom, and all ranks and descriptions of its inhabitants, than the most laboured descriptions and rhetorical declamations could have done; and is a most beautiful example of giving intimations concerning practices, too shameful to be mentioned, in language which excites no other sensation than horror and indignation.

LOT'S RESCUE.—Lot was forbidden to look behind him: as this would indicate great reluctancy to leave his property in Sodom, and to quit the fertile plain which had so long ensnared him. Indeed, his attachment was so strong to Sodom, and his lingering so criminal, that it was an instance of special indulgence, that he was not left to loiter till it had been too late to escape. And at last, through unbelief and undue valuation of worldly things, he was unwilling entirely to quit the plain, and flee to the mountain: yet mercy prevailed; and Zoar, a small city, was spared in condescension to his infirmity, and in answer to his request! Zoar signifies little: it was before called Bela; but being spared because it was a little city, it afterwards retained that name. Lot addressed himself especially to the angel, who led him out of Sodom, and was answered by him; yet the other seems to have continued with his family. Many indeed suppose, that he, who appeared and spake to Abraham as JEHOVAH, had now joined them; but there is no decided proof of it. The angels might have a commission to spare Zoar at Lot's request; and he might express his gratitude to the instrument of his preservation, when visibly present, in the language here used, without ascribing to him the honour due to God alone. Lot must arrive at a place of safety, before vengeance could be inflicted on Sodom: this implied a rebuke of his unbelieving fears, as well as a most condescending assurance of the Lord's merciful care of him.—Scott.

THE FATE OF SODOM.—It was a strange punishment. Job xxxi. 3. Never was the like, before or since. Hell was rained from heaven upon them. "Fire and brimstone, and a horrible tempest, was the portion of their cup," Ps. xi. 6; not a flash of lightning, which is destructive enough, when God gives it commission, but a shower of lightning. Brimstone was scattered upon their habitation, Job xviii. 15, and then the fire soon fastened upon them. God could have drowned them, as he did the old world; but he would show that he has many arrows in his quiver, fire as well as water. 1. That it was a judgment that laid all waste; "it overthrew the cities," and destroyed all the inhabitants of them, the plain, and all that grew upon the ground, ver. 25. It was an utter ruin, and irreparable; that fruitful valley remains to this day a great lake, or dead sea; it is called the Salt sea, Numb. xxxiv. 12. 2. That it was a punishment that answered to their sin, their crime against nature was justly punished with this preternatural fire. They were made an example, were destroyed by strange fire, Jude 7. 3. That it was designed for a standing revelation of the wrath of God against sin and sinners, in all ages: it is, accordingly, often referred to in the Scripture, and made a pattern of the ruin of Israel, Deut. xxix. 23, of Babylon, Isa. xiii. 19, of Edom, Jer. xlix. 18, of Moab and Ammon, Zeph. ii. 9. Nay, it was typical of "the vengeance of eternal fire," Jude 7, and the ruin of all "that live ungodly," 2 Pet. ii. 6, especially that despise the gospel, Matt. x. 15. It is in allusion to this destruction that the place of the damned is often represented by a lake that burns, as Sodom did, with fire and brimstone. Let us learn from it, (1.) The evil of sin, and the hurtful nature of it. Iniquity tends to ruin. (2.) The terrors of the Lord. See what a fearful thing it is to fall into the hands of the living God.—Henry.

LOT'S WIFE.—This unhappy woman, contrary to God's express command, in unbelief, and love to Sodom and its riches, regretting what was left behind, and probably purposing to return, "looked back;" and, as some think, actually attempted to return: and our Lord's words—"Let him not return back, remember Lot's wife," favour this supposition. She was therefore instantaneously struck dead and petrified, and thus remained to after ages a visible monument of the Divine displeasure; being punished as a warning to others through successive generations. Perhaps she was a native of Sodom, as nothing is said of Lot having a wife, when with Abraham. Above twenty years had passed, from the time that Lot went to Sodom.

LOT'S DAUGHTERS.—Many conjectures have been formed concerning the motives which induced Lot's daughters to this most atrocious conduct; and many excuses have been attempted. It is not indeed improbable that the desire of having children, of which they seemed to have no other prospect, was one powerful inducement: but there is little reason to think that they had any expectations of being the ancestors of the promised seed, for that distinction was expressly limited to the seed of Abraham. The truth seems to be, that, though preserved from gross crimes, they had been accustomed in Sodom to hear and witness wickedness, till their consciences were become unfeeling, and their sense of shame blunted. No sufficient excuse can be made either for them or for Lot; and, indeed, scarcely any account can be given of the transaction, but this, that "the heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked; who can know it?" After this, we read no more in the history of Lot, or of his daughters. Peter's testimony satisfies us, that he lived to repent; yet there is no proof that his daughters did. But he died under a dark cloud; all his substance and part of his family perished in Sodom: his wife in looking back lost her life; and it might almost have been wished, that his daughters had been taken away too, to have prevented his and their sin and shame: for, though he was not "written childless," his posterity were the monuments of his reproach, and thee, and thou shalt live: and if thou restore her not, know thou that thou shalt [r]surely die, thou, and [s]all that are thine.

8 Therefore Abimelech rose early in the morning, and called all his servants, and told all these things in their ears: and the men were sore afraid.

9 ¶ Then Abimelech called Abraham, and said unto him, [t]What hast thou done unto us? and what have I offended thee, that thou hast brought on me, and on my kingdom, [u]a great sin? thou hast done deeds unto me that [x]ought not to be done.

10 And Abimelech said unto Abraham, What sawest thou, that thou hast done this thing?

11 And Abraham said, Because I thought, [y]Surely the fear of God is not in this place: and they will [z]slay me for my wife's sake.

12 And [a]yet indeed she is my sister;[2] she is the daughter of my father, but not the daughter of my mother: and she became my wife.

13 And it came to pass, when [b]God caused me to wander from my father's house, that I said unto her, [c]This is thy kindness which thou shalt show unto me; at every place whither we shall come, say of me, He is my brother.

14 ¶ And Abimelech [d]took sheep, and oxen, and men-servants, and women-servants, and gave them unto Abraham, [e]and restored him Sarah his wife.[3]

15 And Abimelech said, Behold, [f]my land is before thee: dwell *where it pleaseth thee.

16 And unto Sarah he said, Behold, I have given [g]thy brother a thousand pieces of silver: [h]behold, he is to thee [i]a covering of the eyes, unto all that are with thee, and with all other: [k]thus she was reproved.

17 ¶ So Abraham [l]prayed unto God: and God healed Abimelech, and his wife, and his maid-servants: and they bare children.

18 For the LORD had [m]fast closed up all the wombs of the house of Abimelech, because of Sarah, Abraham's wife.

4 And Abraham circumcised his son Isaac, [f]being eight days old, as God had commanded him.

5 And Abraham was [g]an hundred years old, when his son Isaac was born unto him.

6 ¶ And Sarah said, [h]God hath made me to laugh, so that all that hear [i]will laugh with me.

7 And she said, [k]Who would have said unto Abraham, that Sarah should have given children suck? for I have born him a son in his old age.

8 And the child grew, [l]and was weaned: and Abraham made a great feast the same day that Isaac was weaned.

9 ¶ And [m]Sarah saw the son of Hagar the [n]Egyptian, which she had born unto Abraham, [2]mocking.

10 Wherefore she said unto Abraham, [p]Cast out this bondwoman, and her son: for the son of this bondwoman shall not be heir with my son, even with Isaac.

11 And the thing was very grievous in Abraham's sight, [q]because of his son.

12 And God said unto Abraham, Let it not be grievous in thy sight, because of the lad, and because of thy bondwoman: in all that Sarah hath said unto thee, [r]hearken unto her voice: for in Isaac shall thy seed be called.

13 And also [s]of the son of the bondwoman will I make a nation, because he is thy seed.

14 And Abraham [u]rose up early in the morning, and [x]took bread, and a bottle of water, and gave it unto Hagar (putting it on her shoulder), and the child, and sent her away: and she departed, and [y]wandered in the wilderness of [z]Beer-sheba.

15 ¶ And [a]the water was spent in the bottle, and she cast the child under one of the shrubs.

16 And she went, and sat her down over-against him, a good way off, as it were a bow-shot: for she said, [b]Let me not see the death of the child. And she sat over against him, and [c]lift up her voice and wept.

17 And God [d]heard the voice of the lad: and [e]the angel of God called to Hagar out of heaven, and said unto her, [f]What aileth thee, Hagar? [g]Fear not; for God hath heard the voice of the lad where he is.

18 Arise, lift up the lad, and hold him in thine hand: for [h]I will make him a great nation.

19 And [i]God opened her eyes, and she saw a well of water: and she went, and filled the bottle with water, and gave the lad drink.

CHAP. XX. ABRAHAM AT GERAR.—Gerar was inhabited by the Philistines, and seems to have been their capital city. Abimelech signifies My father the king. He took Sarah with intent to espouse her, though he had already one wife or more, ver. 17. She still retained her beauty; which appears wonderful to us, but might not be so very remarkable at that time. Probably Sarah was then pregnant, which circumstance would increase her anxiety and that of Abraham; and it was also an aggravation of their sin, which was indeed in every respect much more heinous than before. The Lord was pleased to make known his will, in ordinary cases, by dreams, (as distinct from prophetical discoveries to be communicated to others,) more frequently before revelation by the written word was afforded and completed: but every impression of that kind, and indeed all supposed discoveries of the Divine will, must now be tried by the infallible and perfect standard of the holy Scriptures; and no farther regarded than they are warranted by them. As Sarah was another man's wife, Abimelech was warned that he should inevitably die, unless he restored her: and he was alarmed lest his people also should be visited with overwhelming judgments on her account. Yet he was conscious that he had not intended to commit adultery, but had been misled by the express declarations of both Abraham and Sarah; nor could he suppose that the Lord would "slay also a righteous nation." He evidently referred to the late destruction of Sodom and the cities of the plain, which doubtless had caused great consternation, and probably a degree of reformation in that neighbourhood. As the Lord admitted Abimelech's plea, we may suppose that both he and his subjects were free from the abomination of Sodom; and were not generally idolaters, but had some remains of true religion among them; and thus were comparatively "a righteous nation." The Lord had "withheld Abimelech from sinning against him;" probably by some uncommon disease, with which his subjects also were visited, ver. 18. This was in fact a merciful dispensation, to keep him from bringing guilt, and heavier condemnation, on himself and his people. If all adulterers were dead men, in this Christian land, how would it decrease our numbers, and especially how would it thin the ranks of the superior orders in the community!—Scott.

ABIMELECH'S GENEROSITY.—Here is, 1. The kindness of a prince, which Abimelech showed to Abraham. See how unjust Abraham's jealousies were; he fancied, that, if they knew that Sarah was his wife, they would kill him; but, instead of that, when they did know, they were kind to him, frightened at least to be so by the divine rebukes they were under. (1.) He gives him his royal license to dwell where he pleased in his country; courting his stay, because he saw that God was with him, ver. 15. (2.) He gives him his royal gifts, ver. 14, "sheep and oxen," and, ver. 16, "a thousand pieces of silver." This he gave when he restored Sarah, either, [1.] By way of satisfaction for the wrong he had offered to do, in taking her to his house. [2.] To engage Abraham's prayers for him; not as if prayers should be bought and sold; but those, whose spiritual things we reap of, we should endeavour to be kind to, 1 Cor. ix. 11.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—We often disquiet ourselves, and even are led into temptation and sin, by groundless suspicions; and we sometimes find the fear of God where we least expected it. Combinations to deceive generally issue in shame and sorrow: and restraints from sin, though by suffering, should thankfully be acknowledged. But though the Lord rebukes, yet he will pardon and deliver his people, and for his own glory put honour upon them and their prayers. He will give them favour in the sight of those with whom they sojourn, and overrule even their very infirmities, when they are humbled for them; so that they shall prove an occasion of good to themselves and others. —Scott.

CHAP. XXI. ISAAC'S BIRTH.—1. Isaac was born according to the promise. The Lord "visited Sarah" in mercy, as he had said. Note, No word of God shall fall to the ground; for he is faithful that has promised, and God's faithfulness is the stay and support of his people's faith. He was born "at the set time at which God had spoken to him," ver. 2. Note, God is always punctual to his time; though his promised mercies come not at the time we set, they will certainly come at the time that He sets, and that is the best time. 2. He was born by virtue of the promise; "Sarah by faith received strength to conceive," Heb. xi. 11. God therefore, by promise, gave that strength. It was not by the power of common providence, but by the power of a special promise, that Isaac was born. A sentence of death was, as it were, passed upon the second causes; Abraham was old, and Sarah old, and both as good as dead; and then the word of God took place. Note, True believers, by virtue of God's promises, are enabled to do that which is above the power of human nature, for "by them they partake of a divine nature," 2 Pet. i. 4.—Henry.

ISAAC'S NAME.—Isaac signifies laughter, and this child of promise was so named, in remembrance of Abraham's believing, and Sarah's unbelieving, laughter; and as an expression of joy and gratitude. In this, as well as in circumcising Isaac on the eighth day, Abraham was implicitly obedient to the commandment of God. The joy of Abraham and Sarah, on this extraordinary occasion, and the congratulations which they would receive from friends and neighbours, were but feeble earnests of the rejoicing of many millions in Him who descended from Isaac, to bless the nations of the earth.—Scott.

ran: and his mother took him [n]a wife out of the land of Egypt.[s]

22 ¶ And it came to pass at that time, that [o]Abimelech, and Phicol the chief captain of his host, spake unto Abraham, saying, [p]God is with thee in all that thou doest.

23 Now therefore [q]swear unto me here by God, [*]that thou wilt not deal falsely with me, nor with my son, nor with my son's son; but according to the kindness that I have done unto thee, thou shalt do unto me, and to the land wherein thou hast sojourned.

24 And Abraham said, I will swear.

25 And Abraham [r]reproved Abimelech because of a [t]well of water, which Abimelech's [u]servants had violently taken away.

26 And Abimelech said, [v]I wot not who hath done this thing; neither didst thou tell me, neither yet heard I of it, but to-day.

27 And Abraham [w]took sheep, and oxen, and gave them unto Abimelech: and both of them [x]made a covenant.

28 And Abraham set seven ewe-lambs of the flock by themselves.

29 And Abimelech said unto Abraham, [y]What mean these seven ewe-lambs which thou hast set by themselves?

30 And he said, For these seven ewe-lambs shalt thou take of my hand, [z]that they may be a witness unto me, that I have digged this well.

31 Wherefore he [a]called that place [†]Beer-sheba: because there they sware both of them.

32 Thus [b]they made a covenant at Beer-sheba: then Abimelech rose up, and Phicol the chief captain of his host, and they returned into the land of [c]the Philistines.

33 ¶ And Abraham planted a [‡]grove in Beer-sheba, and [d]called there on the name of the LORD, the [e]everlasting God.

34 And Abraham [f]sojourned in the Philistines' land many days.

AND it came to pass after these things, that [a]God did tempt Abraham, and said unto him, Abraham: and he said, [*]Behold, here I am.

2 And he said, [b]Take now thy son, thine only son Isaac, whom thou lovest, and get thee into the land of [c]Moriah; [d]and offer him there for a burnt-offering upon one of the mountains which I will tell thee of.

3 ¶ And Abraham [e]rose up early in the morning, and saddled his ass, and took two of his young men with him, and Isaac his son; and clave the wood for the burnt-offering, and rose up, and went unto the place of which God had told him.

4 Then on the [f]third day Abraham lifted up his eyes, and saw the place afar off.

5 And Abraham said unto his young men, [g]Abide ye here with the ass; and I and the lad will go yonder and worship, and[1] [h]come again to you.

6 And Abraham took the wood of the burnt-offering, and [i]laid it upon Isaac his son; and he took the fire in his hand, and a knife: and they went both of them together.

8 And Abraham said, My son, [m]God will provide himself a lamb for a burnt-offering: so they went both of them together.

9 And they came to the place which God had told him of; and Abraham built an altar there, and laid the wood in order; and [n]bound Isaac his son, and laid him on the altar upon the wood.

10 And Abraham [o]stretched forth his hand, and took the knife to slay his son.

11 ¶ And the [p]angel of the LORD called unto him out of heaven, and said, [q]Abraham, Abraham: and he said, Here am I.

12 And he said, [r]Lay not thine hand upon the lad, neither do thou any thing unto him: for [s]now I know that thou fearest God, [t]seeing thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son, from me.

13 And Abraham lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold, [u]behind him a ram caught in a thicket by his horns: and Abraham went and took the ram, and offered him up for a burnt-offering [x]in the stead of his son.

14 And Abraham [y]called the name of that place [*]Jehovah-jireh: as it is said to this day, [z]In the mount of the LORD it shall be seen.

15 ¶ And [a]the angel of the LORD called unto Abraham out of heaven the second time,

ISAAC'S INFANCY.—Ver. 8, "The child grew;" special notice is taken of this, though a thing of course, to intimate that the children of the promise are growing children. See Luke i. 80; ii. 40. They that are born of God shall increase more and more with the increase of God, Col. ii. 19. He grew so as not always to need milk, but was able to bear strong meat, and then he was weaned. See Heb. v. 13, 14. And then it was that Abraham "made a great feast" for his friends and neighbours, in thankfulness to God for his mercy to him. He made this feast, not on the day that Isaac was born, that would have been too great a disturbance to Sarah; nor on the day that he was circumcised, that would have been too great a diversion from the ordinance; but on the day that he was weaned, because God's blessing upon the nursing of children, and the preservation of them through the perils of the infant-age, are signal instances of the care and tenderness of the Divine Providence, which ought to be acknowledged, to its praise.—See Ps. xxii. 9, 10; Hos. xi. 1, 2.

ISHMAEL'S EXPULSION.—Ishmael himself gave the occasion, by some affronts he gave to Isaac, his little brother; some think, on the day that Abraham made the feast, for joy that Isaac was safely weaned, which, the Jews say, was not till he was three years old; others say, five. Sarah herself was an eye-witness of the abuse; she "saw the son of the Egyptian mocking," ver. 9, mocking Isaac, no doubt, for it is said, with reference to this, Gal. iv. 29, that "he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit." Ishmael is here called the "son of the Egyptian," because, as some think, the four hundred years' affliction of the seed of Abraham by the Egyptians began now, and was to be dated from hence, chap. xv. 13. She saw him "playing with Isaac," so the Seventy, and, in play, "mocking him." Ishmael was fourteen years older than Isaac; and when children are together, the elder should be careful and tender of the younger: but it argued a very base and sordid disposition in Ishmael, to be abusive to a child that was no way a match for him. Note, 1. God takes notice of what children say and do in their play, and will reckon with them, if they say or do amiss, though their parents do not. 2. Mocking is a great sin, and very provoking to God. 3. There is a rooted, remaining enmity in the seed of the serpent against the seed of the woman. The children of promise must expect to be mocked. This is persecution which they that live godly must count upon. 4. None are rejected and cast out from God, but those who have first deserved it; Ishmael is continued in Abraham's family till he becomes a disturbance, grief, and scandal to it.—Henry.

HAGAR'S JOURNEY.—Ishmael was more than sixteen, some think he was nineteen, years of age at this time: yet, the provisions were put upon Hagar's shoulder, as more inured to labour; and the lad was committed to her care. No doubt, these circumstances were ordered according to instructions given to Abraham; perhaps for Hagar's humiliation, and with some view to the future state of Ishmael's posterity. She, however, "wandered," or lost her way, in the desert, which may account for the distress which ensued; for it does not appear that the provisions were consumed, or that she was sent away without money. But the water was spent, and the climate was hot; so that Ishmael was overcome with fatigue and thirst, and ready to die; and Hagar assisted him in reaching the shade of some shrubs, and lying down as his circumstances would admit: and, fully expecting that he would die, she sat down at a distance and wept. In this season of deep distress the Lord heard the voice of Ishmael's groaning, perhaps of his prayer, and addressed Hagar by an angel, saying, "What aileth thee, Hagar? Fear not." Intimating that the promise, before made to her, (ver. xvi. 10—13,) was a full security that Ishmael should not die at this time, and that therefore her anguish was needless, and her fear groundless. At the same time the Lord directed her attention to the relief, which was near at hand, but which she had not before observed.—Scott.

CHAP. XXII. THE PURPOSE OF THE TRIAL.—"After these things;" "after five-and-twenty years' waiting; after the promise had been frequently repeated; after hope had been raised to the highest pitch, yea, after it had been actually turned into enjoyment; and when the child had lived long enough to discover an amiable and godly disposition."—[Fuller.]—Tempt. This word conveys an idea, which, as here used, may seem inconsistent with other testimonies of the sacred oracles; but the case is different as to the original languages, in which to tempt, and to try, or to prove, are expressed in the same manner. Accordingly, an old translation very properly renders the clause, "God did prove Abraham."—Scott.

THE TRIAL.—1. Note, The person to be offered; (1.) "Take thy son," not thy bullocks and thy lambs; how willingly would Abraham have parted with them by thousands to redeem Isaac? No, "I will take no bullock out of thy house," Psal. l. 9. "I must have thy son: not thy servant, no, not the steward of thine house, that shall not serve the turn; I must have thy son." Jephthah, in pursuance of a vow, offered a daughter; but Abraham must offer his son, in whom the family was to be built up. "Lord, let it be an adopted son;" No, (2.) "Thine only son; thine only son by Sarah." Ishmael was lately cast out to the grief of Abraham; and now Isaac only was left, and must he go too? Yes, (3.) "Take Isaac, him, by name, thy laughter, that son indeed," chap. xvii. 19, not, "Send for Ishmael back, and offer him; no, it must be Isaac;" "But, Lord, I love Isaac, he is to me as my own soul; Ishmael is not, and wilt thou take Isaac also? All this is against me;" Yes, (4.) That son "whom thou lovest." It was a trial of Abraham's

21 [m]Huz his first-born, and [n]Buz his brother, and Kemuel the father of Aram, 22 And Chesed, and Hazo, and Pildash, and Jidlaph, and Bethuel.

23 And [o]Bethuel begat [p]Rebekah: these eight Milcah did bear to Nahor, Abraham's brother.

24 And his [q]concubine, whose name was Reumah, she bare also Tebah, and Gaham, and Thahash, and Maachah.

CHAP. XXIII.

Sarah's age and death, 1. The purchase of Machpelah, 3. Where Sarah was buried, 19.

AND Sarah was [a]an hundred and seven and twenty years old: these were the years of the life of Sarah.[1]

2 And Sarah died in [b]Kirjath-arba;[2] the same is Hebron in the land of Canaan: and Abraham came to [c]mourn for Sarah, and to weep for her.

3 ¶ And Abraham stood up from before his dead,[3] and spake unto the sons of [d]Heth, saying,

4 I am a [e]stranger and a sojourner with you: give me a possession of a [f]burying-place with you, that I may [g]bury my dead out of my sight.

5 And the children of Heth answered Abraham, saying unto him,

6 Hear us, [h]my lord: thou art *a mighty [i]prince among us; in the choice of our sepulchres bury thy dead: none of us shall withhold from thee his sepulchre, but that thou mayest bury thy dead.

7 And Abraham stood up, and [k]bowed himself to the people of the land, even to the children of Heth.

8 And he communed with them, saying, If it be your mind that I should bury my dead out of my sight, hear me, and [l]intreat for me to Ephron the son of Zohar,

9 That he may give me the cave of Machpelah,[4] which he hath, which is in the end of his field; for [†]as much money as it is worth he shall give it me, for a possession of a burying-place amongst you.

10 And Ephron dwelt among the children of Heth. And Ephron the Hittite answered Abraham in the [‡]audience of the children of Heth, even of [m]all that went in at the gate of his city, saying, 11 Nay, [n]my lord, hear me: the field give I thee, and the cave that is therein, I give it thee; in the presence [5]of the sons of my people give I it thee: bury thy dead.

12 And Abraham bowed down himself before the people of the land.

13 And he spake unto Ephron in the audience of the people of the land, saying, But if thou wilt give it, I pray thee hear me: [o]I will give thee money for the field; take it of me, and I will bury my dead there.

14 And Ephron answered Abraham, saying unto him,

15 My lord, hearken unto me: the land is worth four hundred shekels of silver; what is that betwixt me and thee? bury therefore thy dead.

16 And Abraham hearkened unto Ephron, and Abraham [p]weighed to Ephron the silver, which he had named in the audience of the sons of Heth,[6] [q]four hundred shekels of silver, current money with the merchant.

17 And [r]the field of Ephron, which was in Machpelah, which was before Mamre, the field, and the cave which was therein, and all the trees that were in the field, that were in all the borders round about, were [s]made sure

18 Unto Abraham for a possession, in the presence of the children of Heth, before all that went in at the gate of the city.

19 ¶ And after this, Abraham [t]buried Sarah his wife in the cave of the field of Machpelah, before Mamre: the same is Hebron in the land of Canaan.

20 And the field, and the cave that is therein, were made sure unto Abraham for a possession of a burying-place, by the sons of Heth.

CHAP. XXIV.

Abraham sendeth his servant to get a wife for his son Isaac, 1. He obtaineth Rebekah, 58. Isaac meeteth her, 62.

AND Abraham was [a][1]old, and *well stricken in age; and the LORD had [b]blessed Abraham in all things.

2 And Abraham said unto his [c]eldest servant of his house, that [d]ruled over all that he had, [e]Put, I pray thee, thy hand under my thigh:

3 And I will make thee [f]swear by the LORD, [g]the God of heaven, and the God of the earth, [h]that thou shalt not take a wife unto my son, of the daughters of the [2]Canaanites among whom I dwell:

4 But thou shalt go unto [3]my country, and [i]to my kindred, and take a wife unto my son Isaac.

5 And the servant said unto him, [k]Peradventure the woman will not be willing to follow me unto this land: must I needs bring thy son again unto the land from whence thou camest?

6 And Abraham said unto him, [l]Beware love to God, and therefore it must be in a beloved son, and that string must be touched most upon: in the Hebrew it is expressed more emphatically, and, I think, might very well be read thus, "Take now that son of thine, that only one of thine, whom thou lovest, that Isaac." God's command must overrule all these considerations. 2. The place; "in the land of Moriah," three days' journey off; so that he might have time to consider it, and, if he did it, might do it deliberately, that it might be a service the more reasonable, and the more honourable. 3. The manner; "offer him for a burnt-offering;" he must not only kill his son, but kill him as a sacrifice, kill him devoutly, kill him by rule, kill him with all that pomp and ceremony, with all that sedateness and composure of mind, with which he used to offer his burnt-offerings.

THE CRISIS.—With the same resolution and composedness of mind, after many thoughts of heart, he applies himself to the completing of this sacrifice, ver. 9, 10. He goes on with a holy willfulness, after many a weary step, and with a heavy heart he arrives, at length, at the fatal place, builds the altar, an altar of earth, we may suppose, the saddest that ever he built, (and he had built many an one,) "lays the wood in order" for Isaac's funeral pile, and now tells him the amazing news; "Isaac, thou art the lamb which God has provided." Isaac, for aught that appears, is as willing as Abraham; we do not find that he made any objection against it, any petition for his life, that he attempted to make his escape, much less that he struggled with his aged father, or made any resistance: Abraham does it, God will have it done, and Isaac has learned to submit to both: Abraham, no doubt, comforted him with the same hopes with which he himself by faith was comforted. Yet it is necessary that a sacrifice be bound. But with what heart could tender Abraham tie those guiltless hands, that perhaps had often been lifted up to ask his blessing, and stretched out to embrace him, and were now the more straitly bound with the cords and love of duty! However, it must be done. Having bound him, he lays him upon the altar, and his hand upon the head of his sacrifice; and now, we may suppose, with floods of tears, he gives and takes the final farewell of a parting kiss, perhaps he takes another for Sarah, from her dying son. This being done, he resolutely forgets the bowels of a father, and puts on the awful gravity of a sacrificer; with a fixed heart, and an eye lifted up to heaven, he takes the knife, and stretches out his hand to give the fatal cut to Isaac's throat. Be astonished, O heavens, at this; and wonder, O earth! Here is an act of faith and obedience, which deserves to be a spectacle to God, angels, and men. Abraham's darling, Sarah's laughter, the church's hope, the heir of promise, lies ready to bleed and die by his own father's hand, who never shrinks at the doing of it.—Henry.

MAN'S EXTREMITY—GOD'S OPPORTUNITY.—The angel called to Abraham out of heaven by name: yet he says, "Thou hast not withheld thy son—from me;" and by this he knew, that Abraham feared the Lord.—Doubtless God knew the reality and vigour of Abraham's piety previous to this trial; but he saw good to require experimental evidence of it, for the glory of his own grace, for Abraham's comfort, and for the benefit of his whole church.—"The fear of God" is frequently put for the whole of true religion, being an essential part of it, and necessarily connected with all the rest. The ram now became the type of the sacrifice of Christ's death, and indicated what sort of prefigurations of that event God would approve and accept.—Isaac thus rescued, after having been three days under the sentence of death, and living to be the progenitor of the promised innumerable posterity, represented the Saviour rising on the third day, "to see his seed, and prolong his days, that the pleasure of the Lord might prosper in his hand."

FAITH'S REWARD.—"Because he could swear by no greater, the Lord sware by himself;" and thus he solemnly pledged the honour of his holy name, and of all his perfections, as the security for the fulfilment of his engagements to Abraham. The promises before given had been formed into a covenant; that covenant was signed, sealed, and ratified; and now it was solemnly confirmed with an oath. This was intended, not only that Abraham, but also "that we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge, to lay hold on the hope set before us" in Christ, Heb. vi. 13—20.—To the former promises it is here added, "Thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies;" or, by occupying their cities, shall acquire the dominion over them. "Thy seed shall inherit the cities of the adversaries."—[Sept.] This was accomplished when the Israelites conquered Canaan, and in the victories of David, and the extensive authority of Solomon.—Abraham's obedience evinced the strength of his faith, and the sincerity of his love: thus "faith wrought with his works, and by works was his faith made perfect." As a sinner he was justified before God by faith alone; as a professed believer he was justified before the whole world, by the works which his faith produced.—Scott.

CHAP. XXIII. SARAH'S DEATH.—We have here, 1. Sarah's age, ver. 1. Almost forty years before, she had called herself old, chap. xviii. 12. Old people will die never the sooner, but may die the better, for reckoning themselves old. 2. Her death, ver. 2. The longest liver must die at last. Abraham and Sarah had lived comfortably together many years; but death parts those whom nothing else could part. The special friends and favourites of heaven are not exempted from the stroke of death. She died in the land of Canaan, where she had been above sixty years a sojourner. 3. Abraham's

9 And the servant [r]put his hand under the thigh of Abraham his [s]master, and swear to him concerning that matter.

10 ¶ And the servant took ten camels, of the camels of his master, and departed, ([t]for [u]all the goods of his master were in his hand:) and he arose, and went to [v]Mesopotamia, unto the [w]city of Nahor.

11 And he made his camels to kneel down without the city, by a well of water, at the time of the evening, even the time that [‡]women go out to draw water.

16 And the damsel was very [§] fair to look upon, a virgin, neither had any man known her; and she went down to the well, and filled her pitcher, and came up.

17 And the servant ran to meet her, and said, [g]Let me, I pray thee, drink a little water of thy pitcher.

18 And she said, [h]Drink, my lord: and she hasted, and let down her pitcher upon her hand, and gave him drink.

19 And when she had done giving him drink, [i] she said, I will draw water for thy camels also, until they have done drinking.

20 And she hasted, and emptied her pitcher into the trough, and ran again unto the well to draw water, and drew for all his camels.

Chardin justly observes, is about five ounces. Upon which he tells us, "the women wear rings and bracelets of as great weight as this through all Asia, and even much heavier. They are rather manacles than bracelets. There are some as large as the finger. The women wear several of them, one above another, in such a manner as sometimes to have the arm covered with them from the wrist to the elbow. Poor people wear as many of glass or horn. 21 And the man [k]wondering at her held his peace, to wit whether the LORD had made his journey prosperous, or not.

22 ¶ And it came to pass, as the camels had done drinking, that the man [l]took a golden [l]ear-ring, [m]of half a shekel weight, [6] and two bracelets for her hands, of ten shekels weight of gold;

23 And said, Whose daughter art thou? tell me, I pray thee: is there room in thy father's house for us to lodge in?

24 And she said unto him, [n]I am the daughter of Bethuel, the son of Milcah, which she bare unto Nahor.

25 She said moreover unto him, [o]We have both straw and provender enough, and room to lodge in.

26 And the man [p]bowed down his head, and worshipped the LORD.

27 And he said, [q]Blessed be the LORD God of my master Abraham, who hath not left destitute my master [r]of his mercy and his truth: I being in the way, [s]the LORD led me to the house of [t]my master's brethren.

28 And the damsel ran, and told them [u]of her [7]mother's house these things.

29 ¶ And Rebekah had [x]a brother, and his name was Laban: and Laban ran out unto the man, unto the well.

30 And it came to pass when he saw the ear-ring, and bracelets upon his sister's hands, and when he heard the words of Rebekah his sister, saying, Thus spake the man unto me; that he came unto the man, and, behold, he stood by the camels at the well.

31 And he said, Come in, [y]thou blessed of the LORD: wherefore standest thou without? [z]for I have prepared the house, and room for the camels.

32 ¶ And the man came into the house: and he ungirded his camels, and gave straw and provender for the camels, and water to [a]wash his feet, and the men's feet that were with him.

33 And there was set meat before him to eat: but he said, [b]I will not eat, until I have told mine errand. And he said, Speak on.

34 And he said, I am Abraham's servant.

35 And [c]the LORD hath blessed my master greatly, and he is become great: and he hath given him [d]flocks, and herds, and silver, and gold, and men-servants, and maid-servants, and camels, and asses.

36 And [e]Sarah my master's wife bare a son to my master when she was old: and [f]unto him hath he given all that he hath.

37 And [g]my master made me swear, saying, Thou shalt not take a wife to my son of the daughters of the Canaanites, in whose land I dwell; mourning for her; and he was a true mourner. He did not only perform the ceremonies of mourning, according to the custom of those times, as the mourners that go about the streets; but he did sincerely lament the great loss he had of a good wife, and gave proof of the constancy of his affection to her to the last. Two words are used; he came both to mourn and to weep. His sorrow was not counterfeit, but real. He came to her tent, and sat down by the corpse, there to pay the tribute of his tears, that his eye might affect his heart, and that he might pay the greater respect to the memory of her that was gone. Note, It is not only lawful, but it is a duty, to lament the death of our near relations, both in compliance with the providence of God, who thus calls to weeping and mourning, and in honour to those to whom honour is due. Tears are a tribute due to our deceased friends; when the body is sown, it must be watered: but we must not sorrow as those that have no hope; for we have a good hope, through grace, both concerning them and concerning ourselves.

PURCHASE OF A SEPULCHRE.—We have here the conclusion of the treaty between Abraham and Ephron about the burying-place. The bargain was publicly made before all the neighbours, in the "presence and audience of the sons of Heth," ver. 16, 17. 1. Abraham, without fraud, covin, or further delay, pays the money: ver. 16, he pays it readily, without hesitation; pays it in full, without diminution; and pays it by weight, current money with the merchant, without deceit. See how anciently money was used for the help of commerce; and see how honestly money should be paid where it is due. Observe, Though all the land of Canaan was Abraham's by promise, yet the time of his possessing being not come, what he had now occasion for, he bought and paid for. Note, Dominion is not found in grace. The saints' title to an eternal inheritance does not entitle them to the possessions of this world, nor justify them in doing wrong. 2. It is worth nothing, (1.) That a burying-place was the first spot of ground Abraham was possessed of in Canaan. Note, When we are entering into the world, it is good to think of our going out of it; for as soon as we are born we begin to die. (2.) That it was the only piece of land he was ever possessed of, though it was all his own in reversion. Those that have least of this earth find a grave in it. Abraham provided, not cities, as Cain and Nimrod, but a sepulchre.—Henry.

CHAP. XXIV. MATRIMONIAL EMBASSY.—There can be no reasonable doubt, but that Eliezer of Damascus was the servant employed on this occasion, (chap. xv. 2.) About sixty years had elapsed, since Abraham spoke of him as "the steward of his house;" and the words rendered "the eldest servant of his house;" or his servant, the elder of his house, are of similar import. He was, therefore, not only far advanced in years, but a person of singular piety and wisdom.—"Lifting up the hand to the Lord," was before mentioned, as the form of taking an oath, but "putting the hand under the thigh" might be used to express submissive duty and fidelity.—Eliezer was required to swear, that he would diligently use his influence to prevent Isaac from marrying a wife of the Canaanites, who were then generally idolaters, and not proper persons with whom to form so intimate a connection; especially as the Lord had shown Abraham, that they were filling up their measure of iniquity, and were doomed to destruction: but that he would endeavor to procure him one of Abraham's kindred, among whom the worship of God was still, in some measure, maintained.—"There does not appear in all this concern the least taint of worldly policy, or any of those motives which usually govern men in the settlement of their children. No mention is made of riches, or honours, or natural accomplishments; but merely of what related to God."—[Fuller.] Before, however, Eliezer thus engaged, he inquired whether, if the proper person, when found, should not consent to leave home, and become a stranger in Canaan, Isaac ought to go and live in Mesopotamia. But the sojourning of the patriarchs in Canaan represented the state of believers in this world; and Isaac's returning and settling in that country, from which Abraham at God's command had come, would have been an emblem of a professed Christian's apostasy. Abraham, therefore, declared his assurance, grounded on the former mercies of the Lord, and on his promises, and his covenant confirmed by an oath, that "he would send his angel before him" to prosper his way. And this assurance, with the express stipulation, that the oath should not otherwise be binding, fully satisfied this faithful and conscientious servant.

CIRCUMSPECTION.—"That which is done for life, and which may involve things of another life, requires to be done well; and nothing can be done well, in which the will of God is not consulted, and his blessing implored."—[Fuller.] Great humility and caution are requisite in imitating such examples as this of Abraham's servant: yet, we must not limit God by our rules; and he may still at some times so impress the minds of his servants in perplexity, as to lead them to expect extraordinary interpositions, and then evidently to answer these expectations. We should not, therefore, hastily condemn every thing of this kind; provided it neither countenances unscriptural opinions, or practices; nor takes men off from attending to the ordinary means of instruction; nor be substituted as the foundation of hope, instead of the promises of God, and the work of his Spirit upon the heart.—It is observable that Abraham's servant had in mind, in his address, the idea of a wife for Isaac, as one who united in her character, simplicity, industry, humility, affability, and cheerfulness in being serviceable and hospitable. —Scott.

38 But thou shalt go unto my father's house, and to my kindred, and take a wife unto my son.

39 And I said unto my master, Peradventure, the woman will not follow me.

40 And he said unto me, The LORD, [h]before whom I walk, [i]will send his angel with thee, and prosper thy way: and thou shalt take a wife for my son of my kindred, and of my father's house.

41 Then shalt thou be clear from this my oath, when thou comest to my kindred; and if they give not thee one, thou shalt be clear from my oath.

42 And I came this day unto the well, and said, [k]O LORD God of my master Abraham, if now thou do [l]prosper my way which I go;

43 Behold, I stand by the well of water;[8] and it shall come to pass, that when the virgin cometh forth to draw water, and I say to her, Give me, I pray thee, a little water of thy pitcher to drink;

44 And she say to me, [m]Both drink thou, and I will also draw for thy camels: let the same be [n]the woman whom the LORD hath appointed out for my master's son.

45 And [o]before I had done [p]speaking in mine heart, behold, Rebekah came forth with her pitcher on her shoulder; and she went down unto the well, and drew water: and I said unto her, Let me drink, I pray thee.

46 And she made haste, and let down her pitcher from her shoulder, and said, Drink, and I will give thy camels drink also: so I drank, and she made the camels drink also.

47 And I asked her, and said, Whose daughter art thou? And she said, The daughter of Bethuel, Nahor's son, whom Milcah bare unto him: and [q]I put the [9]earring upon her face,[10] and the bracelets upon her hands.

48 And [r]I bowed down my head, and worshipped the LORD, and blessed the LORD God of my master Abraham, which had [s]led me in the right way to take my master's brother's daughter unto his son.

49 And now [t]if you will deal kindly and truly with my master, tell me: and if not, tell me; [u]that I may turn to the right hand, or to the left.

50 ¶ Then [x 11]Laban and Bethuel answered and said, [y]The thing proceedeth from the LORD: [z]we cannot speak unto thee bad or good.

51 Behold, Rebekah is before thee, take her, and go, and let her be thy master's son's wife, as the LORD hath spoken.

52 And it came to pass, that when Abraham's servant heard their words, he [a]worshipped the LORD, bowing himself to the earth.

53 And the servant brought forth [*]jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment, and gave them to Rebekah: [12]he gave also to her brother and to her mother [b]precious things.

54 And they did eat and drink, he and the men that were with him, and tarried all night: and they rose up in the morning, and he said, [c]Send me away unto my master.

55 And her brother and her mother said, Let the damsel abide with us a few [†]days, at the least ten; after that she shall go.

56 And he said unto them, [d]Hinder me not, seeing the LORD hath prospered my way: send me away, that I may go to my master.

57 And they said, We will call the damsel, and inquire at her mouth.

58 And they called Rebekah, and said unto her, [e]Wilt thou go with this man? And she said, I will go.

59 And they sent away Rebekah [f]their sister, and her [g]nurse,[13] and Abraham's servant, and his men.

60 And [h]they blessed Rebekah, and said unto her, Thou art our sister, be thou the mother of thousands of millions, and let [i]thy seed possess the gate of those which hate them.

61 And Rebekah arose, and her damsels, and [k]they rode upon the camels, and followed the man: and the servant took Rebekah, and went his way.

62 ¶ And Isaac came from the way of the well [l]Lahai-roi; for he dwelt in the south country.

63 And Isaac went out [‡]to [m]meditate in the field at the even-tide: and he lifted up his eyes, and saw, and, behold, the camels were coming.

64 And Rebekah lifted up her eyes, and when she saw Isaac, she [n]lighted off the camel.

65 For she had said unto the servant, What man is this that walketh in the field to meet us? And the servant had said, It is my master: therefore she took a [o]vail,[14] and covered herself.

66 And [p]the servant told Isaac all things that he had done.

67 And Isaac brought her into [q]his mother Sarah's tent, [r]and took Rebekah, and she became his wife: and he loved her: and Isaac was [s]comforted after his mother's death.

SPECIAL PROVIDENCE.—God owned Eliezer by a particular providence. He decreed the thing, and it was established to him, Job xxii. 28. According to his faith, so was it unto him. The answer to this prayer was, 1. Speedy, "before he had made an end of speaking," ver. 15, as it is written, Isa. lxv. 24, "While they are yet speaking, I will hear." Though we are backward to pray, God is forward to hear prayer. 2. Satisfactory: the first that came to draw water, was, and did, in every thing, according to his own heart. (1.) She was so well qualified, that in all respects she answered she characters he wished for in the woman that was to be his master's wife, handsome and healthful, humble and industrious, very courteous and obliging to a stranger, and having all the marks of a good disposition: when she came to the well, ver. 16, she went down, and filled her pitcher, and came up to go home with it; she did not stand to gaze upon the strange man and his camels, but minded her business, and would not have been diverted from it but by an opportunity of doing good; she did not curiously or confidently enter into discourse with him, but modestly answered him with all the decorum that became her sex. What a degenerate age do we live in, in which appear all the instances of pride, luxury, and laziness, the reverse of Rebekah's character, whose daughters few are. Those instances of goodness, which were then in honour, are now in contempt. (2.) Providence so ordered it, that she did that which exactly answered to his sign, and was wonderfully the counter-part of his proposal; she not only gave him drink, but, which was more than could have been expected, she offered her service to give his camels drink, which was the very sign he proposed.

THE BRIDE'S DEPARTURE.—Rebekah is sent away with Abraham's servant; not, we may suppose, the very next day, but very quickly: her friends see that she puts a good heart on it, and so they dismiss her, 1. With suitable attendants; her nurse, ver. 59, her damsels, ver. 61. It seems then, that when she went to the well for water, it was not because she had not servants at command, but because she took a pleasure in exemplifying humility and industry. Now that she was going among strangers, it was fit to take those with her whom she was acquainted with. Here is nothing said of her portion; her personal merits were a portion in her; she needed none with her, nor did that ever come into the treaty of marriage. 2. With hearty good wishes; ver. 60, "they blessed Rebekah." Note, When our relations are entering into a new condition, we ought by prayer to recommend them to the blessing and grace of God. Now that she was going to be a wife, they prayed that she might be a mother both of a numerous and of a victorious progeny. Perhaps Abraham's servant had told them of the promise God had lately made his master, which, it is likely Abraham acquainted his household with, that God would "multiply his seed as the stars of heaven, and that they should possess the gate of their enemies," chap. xxii. 17, to which promise they had an eye in this blessing, "Be thou the mother" of that seed.

THE FIRST INTERVIEW.—Isaac and Rebekah are, at length, happily brought together. 1. Isaac was well employed when he met Rebekah, ver. 62, 63. "He went out to meditate," or pray, "in the field at even-tide." Some think he expected the return of his servants about this time, and went out on purpose to meet them. But it should seem, he went out on another errand, to take the advantage of a silent evening, and a solitary field, for meditation and prayer, those divine exercises by which we converse with God and our own hearts. Note, (1.) Holy souls love retirement; it will do us good to be often left alone, walking alone, and sitting alone; and if we have the art of improving solitude, we shall find we are never less alone than when alone. (2.) Meditation and prayer ought to be both our business and our delight, when we are alone; while we have a God, a Christ, and a Heaven, to acquaint ourselves with, and to secure our interests in, we need not want matter either for meditation or prayer, which, if they go together, will mutually befriend each other. (3.) Our walks in the field are then truly pleasant, when in them we apply ourselves to meditation and prayer; we there have a free and open prospect of the heavens above us and the earth around us, and the hosts and riches of both, by the view of which we should be led to the contemplation of the Maker and Owner of all. Some think Isaac was now praying for good success in this affair that was depending, and meditating upon that which was proper to encourage his hope in God concerning it; and now, when he sets himself, as it were, upon his watch-tower, to see what God would answer him, as the prophet, Hab. ii. 1, "he sees the camels coming;" sometimes God sends in the mercy prayed for immediately, Acts xii. 12. 2. Rebekah behaved herself very becomingly, when she met Isaac: understanding who he was, she "lighted off her camel," ver. 64, and "took a veil, and covered herself," ver. 65, in token of humility, modesty and subjection; she did not reproach Isaac for not coming himself to fetch her, or at least to meet her a day's journey or two; did not complain of the tediousness of her journey, or the difficulty of leaving her relations, to come into a strange place; but having seen Providence going before her in the affair, she accommodates herself with cheerfulness to her new relation. 3. They were thus brought together, (probably, after some further acquaintance,) to their mutual comfort.—Henry.

CHAP. XXV. KETURAH.—Abraham was a hundred and thirty-seven years of age when Sarah died; and, nearly forty years before that event, his age had rendered it very improbable he should have children: yet he had six sons by Keturah, whom he sent away in his life-time: and on these grounds it has been conjectured that

2 And she bare him Zimran, and Jokshan, and Medan, and [b]Midian, and Ishbak, and [c]Shuah.

3 And Jokshan begat [d]Sheba and [e]Dedan. And the sons of Dedan were [f] Ashurim, and Letushim, and Leummim.

4 And the sons of Midian; [g]Ephah, and Epher, and Hanoch, and Abidah, and Eldaah. All these were the children of Keturah.

5 ¶ And Abraham [h]gave all that he had unto Isaac.

6 But unto the sons of the [i]concubines, which Abraham had, Abraham gave [k]gifts,[1] and sent them away from Isaac his son, (while he yet lived), eastward, unto the [l]east country.

7 And these are the days of the years of Abraham's life which he lived, an hundred threescore and fifteen years.

8 Then Abraham [m]gave up the ghost, and died in a [n]good old age, an old man, and full of years; and was [o]gathered to his people.

9 And his sons, [p]Isaac and Ishmael, buried him [q]in the cave of Machpelah, in the field of Ephron the son of Zohar the Hittite, which is before Mamre;

10 The field which Abraham purchased of the sons of Heth: there was Abraham buried, and Sarah his wife.

11 ¶ And it came to pass [r]after the death of Abraham, that God blessed his son Isaac: and Isaac dwelt by the well [s]Lahai-roi.[2]

12 ¶ Now [t]these are the generations of Ishmael, Abraham's son, whom Hagar, the Egyptian, Sarah's handmaid, bare unto Abraham.

13 And these are [u]the names of the sons of Ishmael, by their names, according to their generations: The first-born of Ishmael, [x]Nebajoth; and [y]Kedar, and Adbeel, and Midsam, 14 And Mishma, and [z]Dumah, and Massah.

15 [a]Hadar, and [b]Tema, Jetur, Naphish, and Kedemah.

16 These are the sons of Ishmael, and these are their names, by their towns, and by their castles; [c]twelve princes according to their nations.

17 And [d]these are the years of the life of Ishmael, an hundred and thirty and seven years: and he gave up the ghost and died, and was gathered unto his people.

18 And they dwelt from [e]Havilah unto Shur, that is before Egypt, [f]as thou goest [g]towards Assyria: and he [†]died [§]in the presence of all his brethren.

19 ¶ And these are the generations of Isaac, Abraham's son: [h]Abraham begat Isaac.

20 And Isaac was forty years old [i]when he took Rebekah to wife, the daughter of Bethuel [k]the Syrian, of Padan-aram, the sister to Laban the Syrian.

21 ¶ And Isaac [l]intreated the LORD for his wife, [m]because she was barren: and the LORD was intreated of him, [n]and Rebekah his wife conceived.

22 And the children struggled together within her:[3] and she said, If it be so, why am I thus? And she went to [o]inquire of the LORD.

23 And the LORD said unto her, [p]Two nations are in thy womb, and [q]two manner of people shall be separated from thy bowels: and the one people shall be stronger than the other people, and [r]the elder shall serve the younger.

24 ¶ And when her days to be delivered were fulfilled, behold, there were twins in her womb.

25 And the first came out red, [s]all over like an hairy garment: and they called his name Esau.

26 And [t]after that came his brother out, and his hand [u]took hold on Esau's heel; and his name was called [x]Jacob: and Isaac [y]was threescore years old when she bare them.

27 ¶ And the boys grew: and Esau was [z]a cunning hunter, a man of the field; and Jacob was [a]a plain man, [b]dwelling in tents.

28 And Isaac loved Esau, because [‡]he did eat of his venison: but Rebekah loved Jacob.

29 ¶ And Jacob sod pottage: and Esau came from the field, [c]and he was faint.

30 And Esau said to Jacob, Feed me, I pray thee, [§]with that same red pottage; for I am faint: therefore was his name called [d]Edom.

31 And Jacob said, Sell me this day thy birthright.

32 And Esau said, Behold, I am [‖]at the point to die: [e]and what profit shall this birthright do to me?

33 And Jacob said, [f]Swear to me this day; and he sware unto him: [g]and he sold his birthright unto Jacob.

34 Then Jacob gave Esau bread and pottage of lentiles; and he did [h]eat and drink, and rose up, and went his way: [i]thus Esau despised his birthright.

[3] There is no grace where is no unquietness. Esau alone would not have striven. Nature will ever agree with itself. Never any Rebecca conceived only an Esau, or was so happy as to conceive none but a Jacob; she must be the mother of both, that she may have both joy and exercise. This strife began early: every true Israelite begins his war with his being. If either by strife, or purchase, or suit, we can attain spiritual blessings, we are happy. If Jacob had come forth first, he had not known how much he was bound to God for the favour of his advancement. —BISHOP HALL.

his wife long before. But the language of the original text, "And Abraham added, and took a wife," as well as the unnatural disturbance, which this supposition occasions in the simple narration, militates against the opinion. The Lord had promised him an innumerable posterity, and the long delay both served to try his faith, and to illustrate the divine power and faithfulness; when at length, beyond all probability, the promise was so remarkably fulfilled. And, as Abraham lived thirty-eight years after Sarah's death, all these children might be grown up, much older than Ishmael was when he was sent away, and might be settled in the world before his death.

ABRAHAM'S TESTAMENT.—Abraham gave the bulk of his substance to Isaac, as his legitimate heir, his only son by Sarah the free-woman, according to the promise. Isaac typified the son of God, "whom he hath appointed heir of all things;" and also represented believers, to whom, with Christ, the Father giveth all things. The word concubine is used, not only for one who cohabited with a man that had another wife, as Hagar; but also for one who was a lawful wife, though not admitted to the full privilege of that relation, in respect of rank and possessions, as Keturah. Ishmael was one of the sons here mentioned, and we may hence infer, that he was not sent away destitute, or finally deserted, by Abraham.—Scott.

ABRAHAM'S DEATH.—He lived 175 years; just 100 years after he came to Canaan; so long he was a sojourner in a strange country. Though he lived long, and lived well, though he did good, and could be ill spared, yet he died at last. Observe how his death is here described. 1. He "gave up the ghost." His life was not extorted from him, but he cheerfully resigned it; into the hands of the Father of spirits he committed his spirit. 2. He "died in a good old age, an old man;" so God had promised him. His death was his discharge from the burdens of his age; an old man would not so live always: it was also the crown of the glory of his old age. 3. He was full of years, or full of life, (as it might be supplied,) including all the conveniences and comforts of life. He did not live till the world was weary of him, but till he was weary of the world; he had had enough of it, and desired no more, Vixi quantum satis est—I have lived long enough.—[Seneca.] A good man, though he should not die old, dies full of days, satisfied with living here, and longing to live in a better place. 4. He "was gathered to his people." His body was gathered to the congregation of the dead, and his soul to the congregation of the blessed. Note, Death gathers us to our people. Those that are our people while we live, whether the people of God, or the children of this world, are the people to whom death will gather us.—Henry.

REBEKAH'S PREGNANCY.—The extraordinary sensations experienced by Rebekah convinced her that there was something supernatural in her case. She therefore said, "If so, why is it thus with me?" "This must be inquired into." Abraham was yet living, and was a prophet: and probably he directed her in inquiring of the Lord, but the particular method used on this occasion is not recorded: she, however, received for answer, that two nations, and two manner of people, were in her womb; namely, the Israelites and the Edomites, or Idumeans, being then in their common parents, Jacob and Esau. They were men of very opposite dispositions; and their descendants were as dissimilar: they personally struggled hard for the pre-eminence, and so did their posterity during many ages. In the Days of David, the descendants of Esau, the elder brother, were generally subject to those of Jacob the younger; and much more entirely in the latter times of the Jewish state. These struggles may be considered as an emblem of the conflict between the world and the true church of God, the seed of the serpent and the seed of the woman; in which the church, which is the younger, after many struggles, will gain a final mastery. It may be like a shadow of the conflict between the new and the old nature in the believer's experience.—Scott.

SALE OF THE BIRTHRIGHT.—We cannot but notice Esau's profane contempt of the birthright, and the foolish sale he made of it. He is called "profane Esau" for it, Heb. xii. 16, because, "for one morsel of meat, he sold his birthright;" as dear a morsel as ever was eaten since the forbidden fruit; and he lived to regret it, when it was too late. Never was there such a foolish bargain as that which Esau now made; and yet he valued himself upon his policy, and had the reputation of a cunning man; and perhaps had often bantered his brother Jacob as a weak and simple man. Note, 1. There are those that are penny-wise and pound-foolish, cunning hunters that can out-wit others and draw them into their snares, and yet are themselves imposed upon by Satan's wiles, and led captive by him at his will. 2. God often chooses the foolish things of the world, by them to confound the wise. Plain Jacob makes a fool of cunning Esau. Observe the instances of Esau's folly. (1.) His appetite was very strong, ver. 29, 30. Poor Jacob had got some bread and pottage (ver. 34) for his dinner, and was sitting down to it contentedly enough, without venison; when Esau came from hunting, hungry and weary, and perhaps had caught nothing. And now Jacob's pottage pleased his eye better than ever his game had done. Give me (says he) some of that red, that red, as it is in the original; it suited his own colour, ver. 25, and, in reproach to him, for this he was ever afterward called "Edom, Red." Nay, it should seem, he was so faint, that he could not feed himself, nor had he a servant at hand to help him, but entreats his brother to feed him. (2.) His reasoning was very weak, ver. 32. "Behold, I am at the point to die;" and if he were, would nothing serve to keep him alive but this pottage? Nothing will please him but this "red," this "red pottage," and to palliate his desire, he pretends he is at 2 ¶ And the LORD [d]appeared unto him, and said, Go not down into Egypt; [e]dwell in the land which I shall tell thee of.

3 [f]Sojourn in this land, and [g]I will be with thee, and will bless thee: for [h]unto thee and unto thy seed I will give all these countries, and I will perform the [i]oath which I sware unto Abraham thy father.

4 And I will make thy seed to [k]multiply as the stars of heaven, and will give unto thy seed all these countries: and in thy [l]seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed:[1]

5 Because that Abraham [m]obeyed my voice, and kept my charge, my commandments, my statutes, and my laws.

6 ¶ And Isaac dwelt in Gerar.

7 And the men of the place asked him of his wife; and he said, [n]She is my sister: for he feared to say, She is my wife; lest, said he, the men of the place should kill me for Rebekah, because she was [o]fair to look upon.

8 And it came to pass, when he had been there a long time, that Abimelech king of the Philistines looked out at [p]a window, and saw, and, behold, Isaac was [q]sporting with Rebekah his wife.

9 And Abimelech called Isaac, and said, Behold, of a surety, she is thy wife: and how saidst thou, She is my sister: And Isaac said unto him, Because I said, Lest I die for her.

10 And Abimelech said,[2] [r]What is this thou hast done unto us? one of the people might lightly have lien with thy wife, and thou shouldest have brought guiltiness upon us.

11 And Abimelech charged all his people, saying, He that [s]toucheth this man or his wife, shall surely be put to death.

12 ¶ Then Isaac sowed in that land, and *received in the same year [t]an hundredfold, and the LORD [u]blessed him.

13 And the man waxed great, and [v]went forward, and grew until he became very great.

14 For he had [x]possession of flocks, and possession of herds, and great store of [y]servants. And the Philistines [z]envied him.

15 For all the wells which [a]his father's servants had digged, in the days of Abraham his father, the Philistines had stopped them, and filled them with earth.

16 And Abimelech said unto Isaac, Go from us: for thou art much [b]mightier than we.

17 And Isaac departed thence, and pitched his tent in the valley of Gerar,[3] and dwelt there.

18 ¶ And Isaac digged again the wells of water, which they had digged in the days of Abraham his father; for the Philistines had stopped them, after the death of Abraham: and he called their names after the names by which his father had called them.

19 And Isaac's servants digged in the valley, and found there a well of [c]springing water.

20 And the herdmen of Gerar did strive with Isaac's herdmen, saying, The water is ours: and he called the name of the well [d]Esek, because they strove with him.

21 And they digged another well, and strove for that also: and he called the name of it *Sitnah.

22 And he removed from thence, and digged another well; and for that they strove not: and he called the name of it [e]Rehoboth; and he said, For now [f]the LORD hath made room for us, and we shall be fruitful in the land.

23 ¶ And he went up from thence to [g]Beer-sheba.

24 And the LORD appeared unto him the same night, and said, [h]I am the God of Abraham thy father: [i]fear not, for I am with thee, and will bless thee, and multiply thy seed, for my servant Abraham's sake.

25 And he [k]builded an altar there,[4] and called upon the name of the LORD, and pitched his tent there: and there Isaac's servants digged a well.

26 ¶ Then [l]Abimelech went to him from Gerar, and Ahuzzath[5] one of his friends, and Phichol the chief captain of his army.

27 And Isaac said unto them, Wherefore come ye to me, [m]seeing ye hate me, and have sent me away from you?

28 And they said, [n]We saw certainly that the LORD was with thee: and we said, [o]Let there be now an oath betwixt us, even betwixt us and thee, and let us make a covenant with thee;

29 [p]That thou wilt do us no hurt, as we have not touched thee, and as we have done unto thee nothing but good, and have sent thee away in peace: thou art now [q]the blessed of the LORD.

30 And he [r]made them a feast, and they did eat and drink.

31 And they rose up [s]betimes in the morning, and sware one to another: and Isaac sent them away, and they departed from him in peace.

32 And it came to pass the same day, that Isaac's servants came, and told him concerning the well which they had digged, and said unto him, We have found water.

33 And he called it [t]Shebah:[6] therefore the name of the city is *Beer-sheba unto this day.

34 ¶ And Esau was forty years old when he took to wife Judith, [u]the daughter of Beeri the Hittite,[7] and Bashemath the daughter of Elon the Hittite:

the point to die; if it had been so, was it not better for him to die in honour than to live in disgrace; to die under a blessing than to live under a curse? The birthright was typical of spiritual privileges, those of the church of the first-born.—Henry.

CHAP. XXVI. ISAAC AT GERAR.—Abraham had gone down into Egypt during a famine, and we may suppose that Isaac was purposing to do the same; but God commanded him to dwell in some part of the land of Canaan, according to such intimations as should from time to time be given him. For the present he was directed to sojourn in the country of the Philistines; and the Lord promised to be with him, to supply his wants, and to protect and comfort him: and he renewed the promises, which had been repeatedly ratified to Abraham. God thus testified his approbation of Abraham's remarkable obedience, for the honour of his own name, and the encouragement of Isaac, and of others in every age and nation. This obedience likewise conduced to the fulfilment of the promises. It was the evidence of that faith, by which Abraham was justified; and, in consequence of his prompt obedience, the covenant respecting his seed was confirmed to him by an oath. The several expressions made use of seem to refer to Abraham's unreserved obedience, in leaving his native country, sojourning in Canaan, offering sacrifices, being circumcised, and circumcising his sons and servants, and at length intentionally sacrificing Isaac, at God's command; as well as to his general course of piety, righteousness, and holiness. As "Abraham was justified by faith," which referred to the righteousness of Christ; so the Lord's blessing Isaac for Abraham's sake was virtually blessing him through the Redeemer. The principle of blessing some for the sake of others seems to have been intended to prepare men's minds for receiving the blessings of salvation, not as due to them, but as given for the sake of the divine Saviour. —Scott.

HIS SIN.—Because his wife was handsome, he fancied the Philistines would find some way or other to take him off, that some of them might marry her; and therefore she must pass for his sister. It is an unaccountable thing, that both these great and good men should be guilty of so strange a piece of dissimulation, by which they so much exposed both their own and their wives' reputation. But we see, (1.) That very good men have sometimes been guilty of very great faults and follies. Let those, therefore, that stand take heed lest they fall, and those that are fallen not despair of being helped up again. We see, (2.) That there is an aptness in us to imitate even the weaknesses and infirmities of those we have a value for; we have need, therefore, to look our foot, lest, while we aim to tread in the steps of good men, we sometimes tread in their by-steps.

HIS PROSPERITY.—Here we have the tokens of God's good-will to Isaac; he "blessed him," and prospered him, and made all that he had to thrive under his hands. 1. His corn multiplied strangely, ver. 12. He had no land of his own, but took land of the Philistines, and sowed it; and (be it observed for the encouragement of poor tenants, that occupy other people's lands, and are honest and industrious) God blessed him with a great increase. He reaped an hundred fold; and there seems to be an emphasis laid upon the time; it was that same year when there was a famine in the land; while others scarcely reaped at all, he reaped thus plentifully. See Isa. lxv. 13, "My servants shall eat, but ye shall be hungry." Ps. xxxvii. 19, "In the days of famine they shall be satisfied." 2. His cattle also increased, ver. 14. And then, 3. He had "great store of servants," whom he employed and maintained. Note, "As goods are increased, they are increased that eat them," Eccl. v. 11.

ENVY AGAINST HIM.—The Philistines had already showed their ill-will to his family, by stopping up the wells which his father had digged, ver. 15. This was spitefully done; because they had not flocks of their own to water at these wells, they would not leave them for the use of others; so absurd a thing is malice. And it was perfidiously done; contrary to the covenant of friendship they had made with Abraham, chap. xxi. 31, 32. No bonds will hold ill-nature. They expelled him out of their country, ver. 16, 17. The king of Gerar began to look upon him with a jealous eye. Isaac's house was like a court, and his riches and retinue eclipsed Abimelech's; and therefore he must go further off: they were weary of his neighbourhood, because they saw that the Lord blessed him: whereas, for that reason, they should the rather have courted his stay, that they also might be blessed for his sake.

THE TRUCE WITH ABIMELECH.—Isaac entertains the king and his company, and enters into a league of friendship with him, ver. 30, 31. Here see how generous the good man was, (1.) In giving; "he made them a feast," and bid them welcome. (2.) In forgiving; he did not insist upon the unkindnesses they had done him, but freely entered into a covenant of friendship with them, and bound himself never to do them any injury. Note, Religion teaches us to be neighbourly, and, as much as in us lies, to live peaceably with all men. Providence smiled upon what Isaac did: for the same day that he made this covenant with Abimelech, his servants brought him the tidings of a well of water they had found, ver. 32, 33. He had not insisted upon the restitution of the wells which the Philistines had unjustly taken from him, lest that should have broken off the treaty, but sat down silent under the injury; and, to recompense him for that, immediately he is enriched with a new well, which, because it suited so well to the occurrence of the day, is called by an old name, "Beer-sheba, The well of the oath."—Henry.

CHAP. XXVII.

Isaac sendeth Esau for venison, 1. Jacob, instructed by Rebekah, obtaineth the blessing, 6. Esau threatening him, 41, is prevented, 42.

AND it came to pass, that when Isaac was old, and his eyes were ªdim, so that he could not see, [1] he called Esau his eldest son, and said unto him, My son: and he said unto him, Behold, here am I.

2 And he said, Behold now, I am old, ᵇI know not the day of my death.

3 Now therefore °take, I pray thee, thy weapons, thy quiver, and thy bow, and go out to the field, and *take me some venison;

4 And make me savoury meat, such as I love, and bring it to me, that I may eat; ᵈthat my soul may bless thee before I die.[2]

5 And Rebekah heard when Isaac spake to Esau his son: and Esau went to the field to hunt for venison, and to bring it.

6 ¶ And Rebekah spake unto Jacob her son, saying, Behold, I heard thy father speak unto Esau thy brother, saying,

7 Bring me venison, and make me savoury meat, that I may eat, and bless thee °before[3] the LORD before my death.

8 Now therefore, my son, ᶠobey my voice, according to that which I command thee.

9 Go now to the flock, and fetch me from thence, ᵍtwo good kids of the goats; and I will make them savoury meat for thy father, such as he loveth.

10 And thou shalt bring it to thy father, that he may eat, and that he may bless thee before his death.

11 And Jacob said to Rebekah his mother, Behold, Esau my brother is a ʰhairy man, and I am a smooth man.

12 My father peradventure will feel me, and I shall seem to him as [1]a deceiver; ᵏand I shall bring a curse upon me, and not a blessing.

13 And his mother said unto him, [1]Upon[4] me be thy curse, my son: only obey my voice, and go fetch me them.

14 And he went, and fetched, and brought them to his mother: and his mother ᵐmade savoury meat, such as his father loved.

15 And Rebekah took †goodly raiment of her eldest son Esau, which were with her in the house, and put them upon Jacob her younger son.

16 And she put the skins of the kids of the goats upon his hands, and upon the smooth of his neck.

17 And she gave the savoury meat, and the bread, which she had prepared, into the hand of her son Jacob.

18 ¶ And he came unto his father, and said, My father: And he said, Here am I: who art thou, my son?

19 And Jacob said unto his father, ⁿI am Esau thy first-born; I have done according as thou badest me: arise, I pray thee, sit and eat of my venison, that thy soul may bless me.

20 And Isaac said unto his son, How is it that thou ⁵hast found it so quickly, my son? And he said, °Because the LORD thy God brought it ‡to me.

21 And Isaac said unto Jacob, Come near, I pray thee, that I may feel[6] thee, my son, whether thou be my very son Esau, or not.

22 And Jacob went near unto Isaac his father; and he felt him, and said, The voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau.

23 And he discerned him not, because his hands were hairy, as his brother Esau's hands. So he blessed him.

24 And he said, Art thou my very son Esau? And he said, ᵖI am.

25 And he said, Bring it near to me, and I will eat of my son's venison, that my soul may bless thee. And he brought it near to him, and he did eat: and he brought him wine, and he drank.

26 And his father Isaac said unto him, Come near now, and kiss me, my son.

27 And he came near, and kissed him: and he [7]smelled the smell of his raiment, and blessed him, and said, See, ᵠthe smell of my son is as the smell of a field, ʳwhich the LORD hath blessed.

28 Therefore God give thee ˢof the dew of heaven, and ᵗthe fatness of the earth, and ᵘplenty of corn and wine.

29 ˣLet people serve thee, and nations bow down to thee; ʸbe lord over thy brethren, and let thy mother's sons bow down to thee: ᶻcursed be every one that curseth thee, and blessed be he that blesseth thee.[8]

30 ¶ And it came to pass, as soon as Isaac had made an end of blessing Jacob, and Jacob was yet scarce gone out from the presence of Isaac his father, that Esau his brother came in from his hunting.

31 And he also had made savoury meat, and brought it unto his father; and said unto his father, Let my father arise, and eat of his son's venison, that thy soul may bless me.

32 And Isaac his father said unto him, Who art thou? And he said, I am thy son, thy first-born Esau.

33 And Isaac ˢtrembled very exceedingly, and said, Who, where is he that hath ᴵtaken venison, and brought it me, and I have

[2] It seems Isaac did not understand the Divine oracle (xxv. 25) as Rebekah did; or, she had not acquainted him with it. For he intended to bestow upon Esau the promised land; which was that God told Abraham he would bless his posterity withal. For the last benediction of these great men was the settling of their inheritance, and making those their heirs upon whom they bestowed their blessing. Now the birthright which Esau sold Jacob gave him right only to the greatest part of Isaac's estate, but not to the land of Canaan, which was to be disposed of by Isaac according to Divine direction.—PATRICK.

other advantages, in order to be near the ordinances of God. Many will try to deprive us of these wells of salvation: but we must contend earnestly, yet meekly, for them; and endeavour to preserve for our children the religious privileges which we have received from our fathers. In other things, "the wisdom which is from above" will teach us to recede from our right, and retire from the contentious; and if we are injuriously driven from one place, the Lord will make room for us in another, and recompense us with the assurance and consolations of his love. Yea, he will "make our enemies to be at peace with us," and to court our friendship, acknowledging that he loveth us: and we should always show ourselves disposed to reconciliation and hospitality.—Scott.

CHAP. XXVII. ISAAC'S ERROR.—Here is Isaac's design to make his will, and to declare Esau his heir. The promise of the Messiah and the land of Canaan was a great trust, first committed to Abraham, inclusive and typical of spiritual and eternal blessings: this, by divine direction, he transmitted to Isaac. Isaac, being now old, and either not knowing, or not understanding, or not duly considering, the divine oracle concerning his two sons, that "the elder should serve the younger," resolves to entail all the honour and power that were wrapped up in the promise, upon Esau his eldest son. In this he was governed more by natural affection, and the common method of settlements, than he ought to have been, if he knew (as it is probable he did) the intimations God had given of his mind in this matter. Note, We are very apt to take our measures rather from our own reason than from divine revelation, and thereby often miss our way: we think the wise and learned, the mighty and noble, should inherit the promise; but God sees not as man sees. See 1 Sam. xvi. 6, 7.—Henry.

REBEKAH'S POLICY.—Rebekah was sensible that Isaac was about to act improperly; for she knew that the blessing was intended for Jacob, and expected that he would have it. But she ought either calmly to have argued the case, and expostulated with Isaac; or, if that appeared inexpedient, to have committed the matter to the Lord by prayer, and by no means to have used any artifice on such an occasion. She indeed did no wrong to Esau in regard to the birthright; as both the purpose of God, and his own agreement, ratified with an oath, deprived him of all claim to it; but she injured Isaac by practising an imposition upon him; and Jacob, by using her authority and persuasions to tempt him to sin: and she dishonoured the power and faithfulness of God, by supposing he needed such means of effecting his purpose and fulfilling his promise. Nay, she even threw a stumbling-block in Esau's way, and furnished him with a plausible pretext for his enmity, not only against his brother, but also against religion, by putting Jacob on acting so treacherous a part.—Scott.

DISSIMULATION.—The means were bad, and no way justifiable. If it were not a wrong to Esau, to deprive him of the blessing, (he himself having forfeited it by selling the birthright,) yet it was a wrong to Isaac, taking advantage of his infirmity, to impose upon him; it was a wrong to Jacob too, whom she taught to deceive, by putting a lie into his mouth, or, at least, by putting one into his right hand. It would likewise expose him to endless scruples about the blessing, if he should obtain it thus fraudulently, whether it would stand him or his in any stead, especially if his father should revoke it, upon the discovery of the cheat, and plead, as he might, that it was nulled by an error personæ—a mistake of the person. He himself also was aware of the danger, lest, ver. 12, if he should miss of the blessing, as he might probably have done, he should bring upon himself his father's curse, which he dreaded above any thing; besides, he laid himself open to that divine curse which is pronounced upon him that "causeth the blind to wander out of the way," Deut. xxvii. 18. If Rebekah, when she heard Isaac promise the blessing to Esau, had gone, at his return from hunting, to Isaac, and, with humility and seriousness, put him in remembrance of that which God had said concerning their sons; if she, further, had showed him how Esau had forfeited the blessing, by selling his birthright, and by marrying strange wives; it is probable that Isaac would have been prevailed with, knowingly and wittingly, to have conferred the blessing upon Jacob, and needed not thus to have been cheated into it. This had been honourable and laudable, and would have looked well in the history; but God left her to herself, to take this indirect course, that he might have the glory of bringing good out of evil, and of serving his own purposes by the sins and follies of men, and that he might have the satisfaction of knowing, that, though there is so much wickedness and deceit in the world, God governs it according to his will, to his own praise. See Job xii. 16, "With him are strength and wisdom, the deceived and the deceiver are his." Isaac had lost the sense of seeing, which in this case could not have been imposed upon, Providence having so admirably well ordered the difference of features, that no two faces are exactly alike: conversation and commerce could scarcely be maintained, if there were not such a variety.—Scott.

JACOB'S BLESSING.—Three things Jacob is here blessed with; (1.) Plenty; ver. 28, heaven and earth concurring to make him rich. (2.) Power; ver. 29, particularly dominion over his brethren, namely, Esau and his posterity. (3.) Prevalency with God, and the great interest in heaven; "Cursed be every one that curseth thee." Let God be a friend to all thy friends, and an enemy to all thine enemies. More is certainly comprised in this blessing than appears prima facie—at first sight; it must amount to an entail of the promise of the Messiah, and the church: that was in the patriarchal dialect, the blessing; something spiritual, doubtless, is included in it. First, That from him should

CHAP. XXVIII.

Jacob is blessed, and sent to Padan-aram, 1. His vision, 10. The stone of Beth-el, 18. Jacob's vow, 20.

AND Isaac called Jacob, and [a]blessed him, and charged him, and said unto him, [b]Thou shalt not take a wife of the daughters of Canaan.

2 Arise, go to [c]Padan-aram, to the house of Bethuel thy mother's father; and take thee a wife from thence of the daughters of [d]Laban thy mother's brother.

3 And [e]God Almighty bless thee, [f]and make thee fruitful, and multiply thee, that thou mayest be [*]a multitude of people;

4 And give thee [g]the blessing of Abraham,[1] to thee and to thy seed with thee; that thou mayest inherit the land [†]wherein thou art a stranger, [h]which God gave unto Abraham.

5 And Isaac sent away Jacob, and he went to Padan-aram unto Laban, son of Bethuel the Syrian, the brother of Rebekah, Jacob's and Esau's mother.

6 ¶ When [i]Esau saw that Isaac had blessed Jacob, and sent him away to Padan-aram, to take him a wife from thence; and that as he blessed him, he gave him a charge, saying, Thou shalt not take a wife of the daughters of Canaan;

7 And [k]that Jacob obeyed his father, and his mother, and was gone to Padan-aram;

8 And Esau seeing that [l]the daughters of Canaan [‡]pleased not Isaac his father;

9 Then went Esau [m]unto Ishmael, and took unto the wives which he had, [§]Mahalath the daughter of Ishmael Abraham's son, the sister of Nebajoth, to be his wife.

10 ¶ And Jacob went out from Beer-sheba, and [n]went toward [l]Haran.

11 And he lighted upon a certain place, and tarried there all night, because the sun was set: [o]and he took of the stones of that place, and put them for his pillows, and lay down in that place to sleep.[2]

12 And [p]he dreamed, and behold a [q]ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven; and behold the angels of God ascending and descending on it.

13 And behold, [r]the Lord stood above it, and said, [s]I am the Lord God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac: [t]the land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed;

14 And [u]thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth, and thou shalt [*]spread abroad [x]to the west, and to the east, and to the north, and to the south: [y]and in thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed.

15 And, behold, [z]I am with thee, and will keep thee in all places whither thou goest, come the Messiah, who should have a sovereign dominion on earth. It was that top-branch of his family which people should serve, and nations bow down to. See Num. xxiv. 19, "Out of Jacob shall come he that shall have dominion, the Star and Sceptre," ver. 17. Jacob's dominion over Esau was to be only typical of this, chap. xlix. 10. Secondly, That from him should come the church, that should be particularly owned and favoured by heaven. It was part of the blessing of Abraham, when he was first called to be the father of the faithful, chap. xii. 3, "I will bless them that bless thee;" therefore, when Isaac afterward confirmed the blessing to Jacob, he called it "the blessing of Abraham," chap. xxviii. 4. Balaam explains this too, Numb. xxiv. 9. Note, It is the best and most desirable blessing, to stand in relation to Christ and his church, and to be interested in Christ's power, and the church's favours.

Esau's Blessing.—It was a good thing, and better than he deserved. It was promised him, (1.) That he should have a competent livelihood; "The fatness of the earth and the dew of heaven." Note, Those that come short of the blessings of the covenant, may yet have a very good share of outward blessings. God gives good ground, and good weather, to many that reject his covenant, and have no part or lot in it. (2.) That, by degrees, he should recover his liberty; if Jacob must rule, ver. 29, Esau must serve; but he has this to comfort him, he shall "live by his sword;" he shall serve, but he shall not starve; and, at length, after much skirmishing, he shall break the yoke of bondage, and wear the marks of freedom. This was fulfilled (2 Kings viii. 20, 22,) when the Edomites revolted.—Henry.

Ordering of Providence.—The hand of God is manifest in this transaction; and the blessing pronounced on Jacob was an evident prophecy, which was fulfilled in the history of the two nations descended from Jacob and Esau: and, indeed, the language of the original implies this, being literally, "God shall give thee,"—"the people shall serve thee," &c. It is likewise observable, that no explicit mention is made here, as elsewhere, of the promised seed and of the promised land. Perhaps Isaac was conscious that these were intended for Jacob, and confined his interpretation of the answer given Rebekah to these particulars; or he deemed that matter determined by the sale of the birthright; or he knew that Esau did not set much value on the spiritual meaning of the blessing, and therefore couched it in general terms.—Scott.

CHAP. XXVIII. Jacob's Journey.—We should not resolve the solitary journey of Jacob, on this occasion, merely into the simplicity of the times; for the servant of Abraham, when he took the same journey on a similar occasion, had a suitable retinue; and, probably, Isaac was much more wealthy than his father. We may therefore suppose, that the plan was concerted by Rebekah, in order that Jacob might set out unobserved by Esau, lest he should embrace that opportunity of murdering him; and that Esau's envy and jealousy might not be inflamed, as they would have been, had Jacob been sent away with a suitable attendance; but rather be abated by the consideration of the hardships to which he was exposed; and to show that he did not, in consequence of the birthright and blessing, advance any claim to the temporal riches of his father; chap. iv. 7.—Jacob, as a plain man, would have no objections to go unattended and obscure.—Scott.

The Ladder.—Jacob saw a ladder which reached from earth to heaven, the angels ascending and descending upon it, and God himself at the head of it. Now this represents the two things that are very comfortable to good people at all times, and in all conditions. (1.) The providence of God, by which there is a constant correspondence kept up between heaven and earth. The counsels of heaven are executed on earth, and the actions and affairs of this earth are all known in heaven, and judged there. Providence does its work gradually, and by steps; angels are employed as ministering spirits, to serve all the purposes and designs of Providence, and the wisdom of God is at the upper end of the ladder, directing all the motions of second causes to the glory of the First Cause. The angels are active spirits, continually ascending and descending; they rest not day nor night from service, according to the posts assigned them. They ascend, to give account of what they have done, and to receive orders; and then descend to execute the orders they have received. Thus we should always abound in the work of the Lord, that we may do it as the angels do it, Ps. ciii. 20, 21. This vision gave very seasonable comfort to Jacob, letting him know that he had both a good guide and a good guard, in his going out and coming in; that though he was made to wander from his father's house, yet still he was the care of a kind providence, and the charge of the holy angels. This is comfort enough, though we should not admit the notion which some have, that the tutelar angels of Canaan were ascending, having guarded Jacob out of their land, and the angels of Syria descending to take him into their custody. Jacob was now the type and representative of the whole church, which the angels are intrusted with the guardianship of. (2.) The mediation of Christ: he is this ladder, the foot on earth in his human nature, the top in heaven in his divine nature: or, the former in his humiliation, the latter in his exaltation. All the intercourse between heaven and earth, since the fall, is by this ladder. Christ is the way; all God's favours come to us, and all our services go to him, by Christ. If God dwell with us, and we with him, it is by Christ; we have no way of getting to heaven than by this ladder.—Henry.

16 And Jacob awaked out of his sleep, and he said, Surely the LORD is in this place; [b]and I knew it not.

17 And [c]he was afraid, and said, How dreadful is this place! this is none other but [d]the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven.

18 ¶ And Jacob rose up early in the morning, and took the stone that he had put for his pillows, and [e]set it up for a pillar, and [f] [g]poured oil upon the top of it.

19 And he called [g]the name of that place [†]Beth-el: but the name of that city was called Luz at the first.

20 And Jacob [h4]vowed a vow, saying, [i]If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and [k]will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on,

CHAP. XXIX.

Jacob cometh to the well of Haran, 1; Is entertained by Laban, 13. Jacob covenanteth for Rachel, 18; and is deceived with Leah, 23; but marrieth Rachel also, 28.

THEN [a]Jacob *went on his journey, and [b]came into the land of the [†]people of the east.

2 And he looked, and, behold, [c]a well in the field, and, lo, [d]there were three flocks of sheep lying by it; for out of that well they watered the flocks: and a great stone was upon the well's mouth.

3 And thither were all the flocks gathered: and they rolled the stone from the well's mouth, and watered the sheep, and put the stone again upon the well's mouth in his place.[1]

4 And Jacob said unto them, My brethren, whence be ye? And they said, [e]Of Haran are we.

5 And he said unto them, Know ye Laban the son of Nahor? And they said, We know him.

6 And he said unto them, [f]Is [‡]he well? And they said, He is well: and, behold, Rachel his daughter cometh with the sheep.

7 And he said, [g]Lo, it is [§]yet high day, neither is it time that the cattle should be gathered together: water ye the sheep, and go and feed them.

8 And they said, We cannot, [h]until all the flocks be gathered together, and till they roll the stone from the well's mouth; then we water the sheep.

9 ¶ And while he yet spake with them, [i]Rachel came with her father's sheep: for she kept them.[2]

10 And it came to pass, when Jacob saw Rachel the daughter of Laban his mother's brother, and the sheep of Laban his mother's brother, that Jacob went near, [k]and rolled the stone from the well's mouth,[3] and watered the flock of Laban his mother's brother.

11 And Jacob [l]kissed Rachel, and lifted up his voice, and wept.

12 And Jacob told Rachel that he was her father's [m]brother, and that he was Rebekah's son: [n]and she ran and told her father.

13 And it came to pass, when Laban heard the [l]tidings of Jacob his sister's son, that he [o]ran to meet him, and embraced him, and [p]kissed him, and brought him to his house. And he told Laban all these things.

14 And Laban said to him, Surely thou [q]art my bone and my flesh: and he abode with him the space *of a month.

15 ¶ And Laban said unto Jacob, Because thou art my brother, shouldest thou therefore serve me for nought? [r]tell me what shall thy wages be?

16 And Laban had two daughters: the name of the elder [s]was Leah, and the name of the younger was Rachel.

17 Leah was tender-eyed, but [t]Rachel was [u]beautiful and well-favoured.

18 And Jacob [x]loved Rachel; and said, [y]I will serve thee seven years for Rachel thy younger daughter.

19 And Laban said, [z]It is better that I give her to thee,[4] than that I should give her to another man: abide with me.

20 And Jacob served seven years for Rachel; and they seemed unto him but a few days, [a]for the love he had to her.

21 ¶ And Jacob said unto Laban, Give me my wife (for my days are fulfilled), that I may go in unto her.

22 And Laban gathered together all the men of the place, [b]and made a feast.

23 And it came to pass in the evening, that he took Leah his daughter, and [c]brought her to him: and he went in unto her.

24 And Laban gave unto his daughter Leah, [d]Zilpah his maid for an handmaid.

25 And it came to pass that in the morning, behold it was Leah: and he said to Laban, What is this thou hast done unto me? did not I serve with thee for Rachel? [e]wherefore then hast thou beguiled me?

26 And Laban said, It must not be so done in our country, to [†]give the younger before the first-born.

27 Fulfil her [f]week, and [g]we will give thee

BETHEL.—Jacob was not ignorant of God's omnipresence, or of his gracious nearness to them who fear him.—But having left his father's house under the rebukes of Providence, probably uneasy in his conscience, and fleeing from the face of enraged Esau; being removed, not only from the company of endeared friends, (of whom he had taken a sorrowful farewell,) but from the ordinances of divine worship; and having nothing before him but a long journey into a strange country, his heart was disquieted within him, and he was ready to say, "I am banished from the sight of thine eyes." Little expecting the ordinary comforts of religion, he was surprised with this extraordinary visit, and these gracious assurances, which in fact formed a prophetical revelation of the Lord's will to him: and, in a deep sense of his own unworthiness, ashamed of his unbelieving despondency, and in a thankful reverential acknowledgment of the Divine condescension, he thus expressed his mingled affections.—The vision of angels and the display of the Divine glory, with the gracious promises which he had received, induced the conviction, that JEHOVAH was present in a special manner in that place, which thus might be considered as "the house of God, and the gate of heaven;" for there He appeared, attended by his angelic retinue.—Scott.

CHAP. XXIX. RACHEL.—Here we see, 1. Rachel's humility and industry; "She kept her father's sheep," ver. 9, that is, she took the care of them, having servants under her that were employed about them. Rachel's name signifies a sheep. Note, Honest useful labour is that which nobody needs be ashamed of, nor ought it to be a hinderance to any one's preferment. 2. Jacob's tenderness and affection; when he understood that this was his kinswoman, (probably he had heard of her name before,) knowing what his errand was into that country, we may suppose it struck into his mind immediately, that this must be his wife, he being already smitten with her ingenuous and comely face, though it was, probably sun-burnt, and she was in the homely dress of a shepherdess: hence he is attentive and courteous, and peculiarly anxious to serve her, ver. 10. Hence he addresses himself to her with tears of joy and kisses of affection, ver. 11. She runs with all haste to tell her father; for she will by no means entertain her kinsman's address, without her father's knowledge and approbation, ver. 12. These mutual respects at their first interview, were good presages of their being a happy couple. 3. Providence made that which seemed contingent and fortuitous to give speedy satisfaction to Jacob's mind, as soon as ever he came to the place which he was bound for. Abraham's servant, when he came upon a like errand, met with the like encouragement. Thus God guides his people with his eye, Psal. xxxii. 8.

LABAN.—Here is, 1. The fair contract made between Laban and Jacob, during the month that Jacob spent there as a guest, ver. 14. It seems he was not idle, nor did he spend his time in sport and pastime; but, like a man of business, though he had no stock of his own, he applied himself to serve his uncle, as he had begun, (ver. 10,) when he watered his flock. Note, Wherever we are, it is good to be employing ourselves in some useful business, which will turn to a good account to ourselves or others. Laban, it seems, was so taken with Jacob's ingenuity and industry about his flocks, that he was desirous he should continue with him, and very fairly reasons thus, (ver. 15.) "Because thou art my brother, shouldest thou therefore serve me for nought?" No, what reason for that? If Jacob be so respectful to his uncle as to give him his service without demanding any consideration for it, yet Laban will not be so unjust to his nephew as to take advantage either of his necessity or of his good nature. It appears by computation that Jacob was now seventy-seven years old when he bound himself apprentice for a wife, "and for a wife he kept sheep," Hos. xii. 12. His posterity are there reminded of it long afterward, as an instance of the meanness of their original: probably Rachel was young and scarcely marriageable, when Jacob first came, which made him the more willing to stay for her till his seven years' service were expired. 2. Jacob's honest performance of his part of the bargain, ver. 20. He served seven years for Rachel: if Rachel still continued to keep her father's sheep as she did, (ver. 9,) his innocent and religious conversation with her, while they kept the flocks, could not but increase their mutual acquaintance and affection; (Solomon's song of love is a pastoral;) if she now left it off, his easing her of that care was very obliging. 3. The base cheat which Laban put upon him when he was out of his time; he put Leah into his arms instead of Rachel, ver. 23. This was Laban's sin; he wronged both Jacob and Rachel, whose affections, doubtless, were engaged to each other, and if (as some say) Leah was herein no better than an adulteress, it was no small wrong to her too. But it was Jacob's affliction, a damp to the mirth of the marriage feast, when, in the morning, behold, it was Leah, ver. 25. It is easy to observe here how Jacob was paid in his own coin. He had cheated his own father when he pretended to be Esau, and now his father-in-law cheated him. 4. The excuse and atonement Laban made for the cheat. (1.) The excuse was frivolous, ver. 26. "It must not be so done in our country." We have reason to think there was no such custom of his country as he pretends; only he banters Jacob with it, and laughs at his mistake. (2.) His compounding of the matter did but make bad worse; "We will give thee this also," ver. 27. Hereby he drew Jacob into the sin, and snare, and disquiet, of multiplying wives, which remains a blot in his escutcheon, and will be so to the end of the world. Honest Jacob did not design it, but to have kept as true to Rachel as his father had done to Rebekah; he that had lived this also, for the service which thou shalt serve with me yet seven other years.

28 And Jacob did so, and fulfilled her week: and he gave him Rachel his daughter to wife also.

29 And Laban gave to Rachel his daughter [b]Bilhah his handmaid, to be her maid.

30 And he went in also unto Rachel, and [i]he loved also Rachel more than Leah, and [k]served with him yet seven other years.

31 And when the LORD saw that Leah [l]was hated, [m]he opened her womb:[5] but Rachel was barren.

32 And Leah conceived and bare a son, and she called [n]his name [‡]Reuben: for she said, Surely the LORD hath [o]looked upon my affliction; now therefore my husband will love me.

33 And she conceived again, and bare a son; and said, [p]Because the LORD hath heard that I was hated, he hath therefore given me this son also: and she [q]called his name [§]Simeon.

34 And she conceived again, and bare a son; and said, Now this time will my husband be joined unto me, because I have born him three sons: therefore [r]was his name called [t]Levi.

35 And she conceived again, and bare a son; and she said, Now will I praise the LORD: therefore she [s]called his name [*]Judah, and [†]left bearing.

AND when [a]Rachel saw that she bare Jacob no children, [b]Rachel envied her sister; and said unto Jacob, Give me children, [c]or else I die.

2 And Jacob's [d]anger was kindled against Rachel, and he said, [e]Am I in God's stead, who hath [f]withheld from thee the fruit of the womb?

3 And she said, [g]Behold my maid Bilhah, go in unto her: and [h]she shall bear upon my knees, that I may also [*]have children by her.

4 And she gave him Bilhah her handmaid [i]to wife: and Jacob went in unto her.

5 And Bilhah conceived, and bare Jacob a son.

6 And Rachel said, [k]God hath judged me, and hath also heard my voice, and hath given me a son: therefore called she his name [†]Dan.

7 And Bilhah Rachel's maid conceived again, and bare Jacob a second son.

8 And Rachel said, With [‡]great wrestlings have I wrestled with my sister, and I have prevailed: [l]and she called his name [§]Naphtali.

9 ¶ When Leah saw that she had left bearing, she took Zilpah her maid, and gave her Jacob to wife.

10 And Zilpah Leah's maid bare Jacob a son.

11 And Leah said, A troop cometh: and [m]she called his name [t]Gad.

12 And Zilpah Leah's maid bare Jacob a second son.

13 And Leah said, [*]Happy am I, for the daughters [n]will call me blessed: [o]and she called his name [†]Asher.

14 ¶ And Reuben went in the days of wheat-harvest, and found [p]mandrakes in the field, and brought them unto his mother Leah. Then Rachel said to Leah, Give me, I pray thee, of thy son's mandrakes.[1]

15 And she said unto her, [q]Is it a small matter that thou hast taken my husband? and wouldest thou take away my son's mandrakes also? And Rachel said, Therefore he shall lie with thee to-night for thy son's mandrakes.

16 And Jacob came out of the field in the evening, and Leah went out to meet him, and said, Thou must come in unto me, for surely I have hired thee with my son's mandrakes. And he lay with her that night.

17 And [r]God hearkened unto Leah, and she conceived, and bare Jacob the fifth son.

18 And Leah said, God hath given me my hire, because I have given my maiden to my husband: [s]and she called his name [‡]Issachar.

19 And Leah conceived again, and bare Jacob the sixth son.

20 And Leah said, God hath endued me with a good dowry: [t]now will my husband dwell with me, because I have born him six sons: [u]and she called his name [§]Zebulun.

21 And afterwards she bare a daughter, [x]and called her name [t]Dinah.

22 ¶ And God [y]remembered Rachel, and God hearkened to her, [z]and opened her womb.

23 And she conceived, and bare a son; and said, God hath [a]taken away my reproach.

24 And [b]she called his name [*]Joseph;[2] and said, The LORD shall add to me another son.

25 ¶ And it came to pass, when Rachel had born Joseph, that Jacob said unto Laban, Send me away, that I may go unto mine own place, and [c]to my country.

26 Give me [d]my wives and my children, for whom I have served thee, and let me go: for [e]thou knowest my service which I have done thee.

27 And Laban said unto him, I pray thee, if I have found [f]favour in thine eyes, tarry: for I have learned by experience that [g]the LORD hath blessed me for thy sake.

Because fruitfulness proceeded from the blessing of God, who said, "Increase and multiply." 2. Because barren people seem to be excluded from the promises of God made to Abraham concerning the vast multiplication of his seed. And, 3. without a wife to the 84th year of his age, could then have been very well content with one: but Laban, to dispose of his two daughters without portions, and to get seven years' service more out of Jacob, thus imposes upon him, and draws him into such a strait by his fraud, that (the matter not being yet settled, as it was afterward by the divine law, Lev. xviii. 18, and more fully since by our Saviour, Matt. xix. 5,) he had some colourable reason for marrying them both. He could not refuse Rachel, for he had espoused her; still less could he refuse Leah; and therefore Jacob must "be content and take two talents," 2 Kings v. 23. Note, One sin is commonly the inlet of another. They that go in by one door of wickedness, seldom find the way out but by another.

LEAH.—Leah, who was less beloved, was blessed with children, when Rachel was denied that blessing, ver. 31. See how Providence, in dispensing its gifts, observes a proportion, to keep the balance even, setting crosses and comforts one over-against another, that none may be either too much elevated, or too much depressed. Rachel wants children, but she is blessed with her husband's love; Leah wants that, but she is fruitful. Thus it was between Elkanah's two wives; (1 Sam. i. 5,) for the Lord is wise and righteous. The names Leah gave her children were expressive of her respectful regards both to God and to her husband.—Henry.

CHAP. XXX. A CHILDLESS WIFE.—Under the influence of selfish and malignant passions, Rachel impatiently murmured against God, and expressed her fretfulness in very absurd language, which Jacob justly, though sharply, reproved. Instead of humbly entreating the Lord, as Isaac, and, no doubt, Rebekah had done, and waiting his time of granting her requests; she declared that her heart would break with grief and vexation, if she continued any longer childless!—She who said, "Give me children, or else I die," afterwards died in childbirth. Hannah, whose trial resembled Rachel's, but was much heavier, acted far more properly, and had several children with comfort and a blessing, 1 Sam. i. 2—28; ii. 1—11, 20. Rachel intended to adopt and nurse Bilhah's children as her own, and thus solace herself under the trial and reproach of barrenness. But had not her sister been her rival, and had she not been influenced by envy and resentment, she would have thought Leah's children nearer to her, and more entitled to her care, than Bilhah's could be. Rachel might, in some measure, be induced to this conduct by the same motives which influenced Sarah in a similar case; and Jacob doubtless supposed that he was merely imitating his illustrious progenitor: but the circumstances were in all respects so different, as to render their conduct far less excuseable.—Scott.

MANDRAKES.—Reuben, a little lad, five or six years old, playing in the field, found "mandrakes, dudaim." It is uncertain what they were, the critics are not agreed about them; we are sure they were some rarities, either fruits or flowers, that were very pleasant to the smell, Cant. vii. 13. Note, The God of nature has provided, not only for our necessities, but for our delights: there are products of the earth in the exposed fields, as well as in the planted, protected gardens, that are very valuable and useful. How plentifully is nature's house furnished, and her table spread! Her precious fruits offer themselves to be gathered by the hands of little children. It is a laudable custom of the devout Jews, when they find pleasure, suppose in eating an apple, to lift up their hearts and say, "Blessed be he that made this fruit pleasant!" Or, in smelling a flower, "Blessed be he that made this flower sweet." Some think these mandrakes were jessamine flowers; whatever they were, Rachel could not see them in Leah's hands, into which the child had brought them, but she must covet them. She cannot bear the want of these pretty flowers, but at any rate she will purchase them. Note, There may be great sin and folly in the inordinate desire of a small thing. Leah takes this advantage, (as Jacob had of Esau's coveting his red pottage,) to obtain that which was justly due to her, but which Rachel would not otherwise have consented to. Note, Strong passions often thwart one another, and those cannot but be continually uneasy that are hurried by them. Leah is overjoyed that she shall have her husband's company again, that her family might yet further be built up, which is the blessing she desires and devoutly prays for, as is intimated, ver. 17, where it is said, "God hearkened unto Leah."

CRAFT AND SELFISHNESS.—In love to himself, not to Jacob, or to his wives or children, Laban speaks fairly and gently, that he may engage him to continue his chief shepherd; entreating him, by the regard he bore him, not to leave him; "If I have found favour in thine eyes, tarry." Note, Churlish selfish men know how to give good words, when it is to serve their own ends. Laban found that his stock had wonderfully increased with Jacob's good management, and he owns it, with very good expressions of respect both to God and Jacob; "I have learned by experience that the Lord hath blessed me for thy sake." Laban owns, 1. That his prosperity was owing to God's blessing; "The Lord has blessed me." Note, Worldly men, that choose their portion in this life, are often blessed with an abundance of this world's goods. Common blessings are given plentifully to many that have no title to covenant-blessings. 2. That Jacob's piety had brought that blessing upon him; "The Lord has blessed me," not for my own sake, (let not such a man as Laban, that lives without God in the world, "think that he shall receive any thing from the Lord," Jam. i. 7,) but for thy sake.—Henry.

28 And he said, [h]Appoint me thy wages, and I will give it.

29 And he said unto him, [i]Thou knowest how I have served thee, and how thy cattle was with me.

30 For it was little which thou hadst before I came, and it is now [†]increased unto a multitude, [k]and the LORD hath blessed thee [‡]since my coming: and now [l]when shall I provide for mine own house also?

31 And he said, What shall I give thee? And Jacob said, [m]Thou shalt not give me any thing: if thou wilt do this thing for me, I will again feed and keep thy flock:

32 I will pass through all thy flock to-day,[3] removing from thence all the speckled and spotted cattle, and all the brown cattle among the sheep, and the spotted and speckled among the goats: and [n]of such shall be my hire.[4]

33 So shall my [o]righteousness answer for me [§]in time to come,[5] when it shall come for my hire before thy face: every one that is not speckled and spotted among the goats, and brown among the sheep, that shall be counted stolen with me.

34 And Laban said, Behold, [p]I would it might be according to thy word.

35 And he removed that day the he-goats, that were ring-straked and spotted, and all the she-goats that were speckled and spotted, and every one that had some white in it, and all the brown among the sheep, and gave them into [q]the hand of his sons.

36 And he set three days' journey betwixt himself and Jacob: and Jacob fed the rest of Laban's flocks.

37 ¶ And [r]Jacob took him rods of green poplar, and of the hazel and chesnut-tree; and pilled white strakes in them, and made the white appear which was in the rods.

38 And he set the rods which he had pilled before the flocks in the gutters in the watering-troughs, when the flocks came to drink;[6] that they should conceive when they came to drink.

39 And the flocks conceived before the rods, and [s]brought forth cattle ring-straked, speckled, and spotted.

40 And Jacob did separate the lambs, and set the faces of the flocks toward the ring-straked, and all the brown in the flock of Laban:[7] and he put his own flocks by themselves; and put them not unto Laban's cattle.

41 And it came to pass whensoever the stronger cattle did conceive, that Jacob laid the rods before the eyes of the cattle in the gutters, that they might conceive among the rods.

42 But when the cattle were feeble, he put them not in: so the feebler were Laban's, and the stronger Jacob's.

43 And the man [t]increased exceedingly, and had much cattle, and maid-servants, and men-servants, and camels, and asses.

AND he heard the words of Laban's sons, saying, [a]Jacob hath taken away all that was our father's; and of that which was our father's hath he gotten all this [b]glory.

2 And Jacob beheld the [c]countenance of Laban, and, behold, [d]it was not toward him as[1] *before.

3 ¶ And the LORD said unto Jacob, [e]Return unto [f]the land of thy fathers, and to thy kindred; and I will be with thee.

4 And Jacob sent and called Rachel and Leah to the field unto his flock,

5 And said unto them, [g]I see your father's countenance, that it is not toward me as before: but [h]the God of my father hath been with me.

6 And ye know that [i]with all my power I have served your father.

7 And your father hath deceived me, and changed my wages [k]ten times;[2] but [l]God suffered him not to hurt me.

8 If he said thus, [m]The speckled shall be thy wages; then all the cattle bare speckled: and if he said thus, The ring-straked shall be thy hire; then bare all the cattle ring-straked.

9 Thus [n]God hath taken away the cattle of your father, and given them to me.

10 And it came to pass at the time that the cattle conceived, that I lifted up mine eyes, and saw in [o]a dream,[3] and, behold, the [†]rams which leaped upon the cattle were ring-straked, speckled, and grizzled.

11 And the [p]angel of God spake unto me in a dream, saying, Jacob: and I said, [q]Here am I.

13 I am [t]the God of Beth-el, where thou anointedst the pillar, and where thou vowedst a vow unto me: now arise, get thee out from this land, and [u]return unto the land of thy kindred.

14 And Rachel and Leah answered, and said unto him, Is there [x]yet any portion or inheritance for us in our father's house?

[2] The cattle in Mesopotamia bred twice every year. Supposing, therefore, that for the first year Laban stood to his bargain, but seeing his son-in-law thrive exceedingly, altered the form of it in the next, and so continued to do every half-year, till the sixth year, when Jacob left him, the times of his changing his wages will be exactly ten. There is no occasion, however, for so exact a calculation, as it is usual to put a certain for an uncertain number.—STACKHOUSE.

gression of his people; and he graciously recompenses and honours their integrity and faithful industry. He convinces all, with whom they are connected, that he hath loved them, and that he blesses others on their account: so that it is not uncommon for those, who love neither them nor their religion, to value them for interested motives; and to desire to employ them in preference to others: and "all who name the name of Christ" should for the honour of his gospel, be ambitious of this distinction.—The Lord will also, in one way or other, plead the cause of the injured and oppressed; and honour those who simply trust his providence, avoid evil and the appearance of it, and walk so wisely, as to give no occasion of reproach to those who manifestly are seeking it. And, as "the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof," he hath an indisputable right to dispose of every one's property as he pleases; and who shall dare to find fault with his appointments.

CHAP. XXXI. LABAN'S SONS LIKE HIMSELF.—The last chapter began with Rachel's envying Leah; this begins with Laban's sons envying Jacob. Observe (1.) How greatly they magnify Jacob's prosperity; "He has gotten all this glory." And what was this glory that they make so much ado about? It was a parcel of brown sheep and speckled goats, (and perhaps the fine colours made them seem more glorious,) and some camels and asses, and such like trading; and that was all this glory. Note, Riches are glorious things in the eyes of carnal people, while to all those that are conversant with heavenly things, they have no glory in comparison with the glory which excelleth. Men's overvaluing worldly wealth is that fundamental error which is the root of covetousness, envy, and all evil. (2.) How basely they reflect upon Jacob's fidelity, as if what he had, he had not gotten honestly; "Jacob has taken away all that was our father's." Not all, sure. What was become of those cattle which were committed to the custody of Laban's sons, and sent "three days' journey" off? chap. xxx. 35, 36. They mean all that was committed to him; but, speaking invidiously, they express themselves thus generally. Note, 1. Those that are ever so careful to keep a good conscience, yet cannot always be sure of a good name. 2. This is one of the vanities and vexations which attend otward prosperity, that it makes a man to be envied of his neighbour; (Eccl. iv. 4.) and "who can stand before envy?" Prov. xxvii. 4. Whom heaven blesses hell curses, and all its children on earth.—Henry.

THE GOD OF BETHEL.—It has before been supposed that Jacob had some previous divine intimation, suggesting the plan which he adopted respecting the cattle; but the dream which he here relates to Rachel and Leah, seems to have taken place towards the close of his service. Thus he accounted to them for the rapid increase of his flocks, and introduced the subsequent proposal, in which he made known to them the will of God, and the justice of his cause; that by thus appealing to them, and consulting with them, he might obtain their willing acquiescence. The Lord himself pointed out the circumstance concerning the colour of the rams, that Jacob might ascribe his success to the Divine blessing, and possess his substance with a thankful heart and a quiet conscience, regardless of the unmerited anger of Laban and his sons.—The language of the passage is worthy of peculiar attention: "The angel of God spake."—"I am the God of Bethel." The supposition of some learned men, that the angel spake as an ambassador, in the name of God, is extremely unreasonable; for what ambassador, when representing his principal, ever said, "I am the king?" Would not such language be a claim to the honour due only to his sovereign? The Jewish expositors, and some others, imagine that on such occasions there was a glorious appearance of JEHOVAH, distinct from the angel; but were there two speakers in this instance? Nothing can be plainer than that he, who is called "The Angel," said "I am the God of Bethel." Repeated instances of this kind continually augment the evidence, that the speaker was no other than the Word and Son of God, who "was God, and with God," but now condescended to be the angel, or messenger, of the Father to men; as he afterwards did in human nature to "take upon him the form of a servant." Yet, in both manifestations of himself, he could say, "He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father; for I and the Father are One." The title, "the God of Bethel," would be peculiarly encouraging to Jacob.—Scott.

JACOB'S FLIGHT.—We may suppose Jacob had been long considering of it, and casting about in his mind respecting it; but when now at last God had given him positive orders to go, he made no delay, nor was he disobedient to the heavenly vision. The first opportunity that offered itself he laid hold on, when Laban was shearing his sheep, ver. 19, that part of his flock which was in the hands of his sons three days' journey off. Now, (1.) It is certain that it was lawful for Jacob to leave his service suddenly, without giving a quarter's warning. It was not only justified by the particular instructions God gave him, but warranted by the fundamental law of self-preservation, which directs us when we are in danger to shift for our own safety, as far as we can do it without wronging our consciences. (2.) It was his prudence to "steal away unawares to Laban," lest, if Laban had known he should have hindered him, or plundered him. (3.) It was honestly done to take no more than his own with him, the "cattle of his getting, ver. 18. He took what Providence gave, and was content with that, and would not take the repair of his damages into his own hands.

THE TERAPHIM.—Rachel was not so honest as her husband; she "stole her father's images," ver. 19, and carried them away with her. The Hebrew calls them Teraphim.

children's: now then, whatsoever God hath said unto thee, do.

17 ¶ Then Jacob rose up, and set his sons and his wives [a]upon camels.

18 And he [t]carried away all his cattle, and all his goods which he had gotten, the cattle of his getting, which he had gotten in Padan-aram, [b]for to go to Isaac his father in the land of Canaan.

19 And Laban went to shear his sheep: and Rachel had stolen the [‡]images[5] that were her father's.

20 And Jacob stole away [§]unawares to Laban the Syrian, in that he told him not that he fled.

21 So he fled with all that he had, and he rose up, and [c]passed over the river, and [d]set his face toward the mount [e]Gilead.

22 ¶ And it was told Laban on the [f]third day, that Jacob was fled.

23 And he took his [g]brethren with him, and pursued after him seven days' journey; and they overtook him in the mount Gilead.

24 And God came to Laban [h]the Syrian in a [i]dream by night, and said unto him, [k]Take heed that thou speak not to Jacob [l]either good or bad.

25 ¶ Then Laban overtook Jacob. Now Jacob had [l]pitched his tent in the mount: and Laban with his brethren pitched in the mount of Gilead.

26 And Laban said to Jacob, [m]What hast thou done, that thou hast stolen away unawares to me, and [n]carried away my daughters, as captives taken with the sword?

27 Wherefore [o]didst thou flee away secretly, and *steal away from me? and didst not tell me, [p]that I might have sent thee away [q]with mirth and with songs, with tabret and with harp?

28 And hast not suffered me to [r]kiss my sons and my daughters? thou hast now done [s]foolishly in so doing.

29 It is in [t]the power of my hand to do you hurt: but [u]the God of your father spake unto me yesternight, saying, [x]Take thou heed that thou speak not to Jacob either good or bad.

30 And now though thou wouldest needs be gone, because thou sore longedst after thy father's house; yet wherefore hast thou stolen [y]my gods?

31 ¶ And Jacob answered and said to Laban, [z]Because I was afraid: for I said, Peradventure thou wouldest take by force thy daughters from me.

32 With [a]whomsoever thou findest thy gods, let him not live; [b]before our brethren discern thou what is thine with me, and take it to thee: [c]for Jacob knew not that Rachel had stolen them.

33 And Laban went into Jacob's tent, and into [d]Leah's tent, and into the two maid-servants' tents; but he found them not. Then went he out of Leah's tent, and entered into Rachel's tent.

34 Now Rachel [e]had taken the images, and put them in the camels' furniture,[6] and sat upon them: and Laban [f]searched all the tent, but found them not.

35 And she said to her father, Let it not displease [g]my lord that I cannot [g]rise up before thee; for the [h]custom of women is upon me: and he searched, but found not the images.

36 ¶ And Jacob [i]was wroth, and chode with Laban: and Jacob answered, and said to Laban, What is my trespass? what is my sin, that thou hast so hotly pursued after me?

37 Whereas thou hast searched all my stuff, what hast thou found of all thy household stuff? [k]set it here before my brethren and thy brethren, that they may judge betwixt us both.

38 This [l]twenty years have I been with thee; thy [m]ewes and thy she-goats have not cast their young, and [n]the rams of thy flock have I not eaten.

39 That which was [o]torn of beasts I brought not unto thee: [p]I bare the loss of it; of my hand didst thou require it, whether stolen by day, [q]or stolen by night.

40 Thus I was, [r]in the day the drought consumed me, and the frost by night;[7] and my sleep departed from mine eyes.

41 Thus have I been twenty years in thy house; I served thee [s]fourteen years for thy two daughters, and six years for thy cattle: and thou hast changed my wages [t]ten times.

42 [u]Except the God of my father, the God of Abraham, and the [x]fear of Isaac, had been with me, surely thou hadst sent me away now empty: God [y]hath seen mine affliction, and the labour of my hands, and rebuked thee yesternight.

43 ¶ And Laban answered, and said unto Jacob, These daughters are my daughters, and these children are my children, and these cattle are my cattle, and all that thou seest is mine: and what can I do this day unto these my daughters, or unto their children which they have born?

44 Now therefore come thou, [z]let us make a covenant, I and thou; and let it be for [a]a witness between me and thee.

45 And Jacob took a [b]stone, and set it up for a pillar.[8]

46 And Jacob said unto his brethren, [c]Gather stones: and they took stones, and made an heap: and they did eat there upon the heap.[9]

47 ¶ And Laban called it [‡]Jegar-saha-dutha: but Jacob called it [§]Galeed.

Some think they were only representations of the ancestors of the family, in statues or pictures, which Rachel had a particular fondness for, and was desirous to have with her, now that she was going into another country. It should rather seem they were images for a religious use, Penates, Household-Gods, either worshipped or consulted as oracles; and we are willing to hope (with Bishop Patrick) that she did not take them away as being covetous of the rich metal they were made of, much less for her own use, or out of any superstitious fear least Laban, by consulting his Teraphim, might know which way they were gone. Jacob, no doubt, dwelt with his wives as a man of knowledge, and they were better taught than so; but she might design hereby to convince her father of the folly of his regard to those as gods, which could not secure themselves, Isa. xlvi. 1, 2. —Henry.

The Pursuit.—Had Laban known of Jacob's intentions, he would doubtless have attempted forcibly to defeat them; but Jacob "eluded his vigilance," and was actually got to a great distance before Laban heard of it. The Hebrew phrase translated, "unawares to Laban," seems to mean, that Jacob rendered his sagacity and vigilance as if he had deprived him of his understanding. Without doubt, Laban intended at least to plunder Jacob's property; if he could not have induced him, by promises or threats, to return, or have compelled him to do so. But the Lord in a dream, at this critical time, effectually deterred Laban from all such attempts. Jacob had passed the Euphrates, and crossed the spacious desert which intervened between that river and Mount Gilead, before Laban overtook him. This was a very long journey, considering the largeness of his company, and all his encumbrances.—Scott.

The Reconciliation—Galeed.—Observe here, (1.) The substance of the covenant; Jacob left it wholly to Laban to settle it. The tenor of it was, 1. That Jacob should be a good husband to his wives, that he should not afflict them, nor marry other wives beside them, ver. 50. 2. That he should never be a bad neighbour to Laban, ver. 52. It was agreed that no act of hostility should ever pass between them, that Jacob should forgive and forget all the wrongs he had received, and not remember them against Laban or his family in after-times. Note, We may have a strong perception of an injury, which yet we may not revenge. (2.) The ceremony of this covenant; it was made and ratified with great solemnity, according to the usages of those times. 1. A pillar was erected, ver. 45, and a heap of stones raised, ver. 46, to perpetuate the memory of the thing; the way of recording agreements by writing being then either not known or not used. 2. A sacrifice was offered, ver. 54, a sacrifice of peace offerings. Note, Our peace with God is that which puts true comfort into our peace with our friends. If parties contend, the reconciliation of both to Him will facilitate their reconciliation one to another. 3. They did eat bread together, ver. 46, jointly partaking of the feast upon the sacrifice, ver. 54. This was in token of a hearty reconciliation. Covenants of friendship were anciently ratified by the parties eating and drinking together. It was in the nature of a love feast. 4. They solemnly appealed to God concerning their sincerity herein. 5. They gave a new name to the place, ver. 47, 48. Laban called it in Syriac, and Jacob in Hebrew, "The heap of witness." And, ver. 49, it was called "Mizpah, a watch-tower." The name Jacob gave this heap stuck by it, Galeed, not the name Laban gave it. In all this rencounter, Laban was noisy and full of words, affecting to say much; Jacob was silent and said little; when Laban appealed to God under many titles, Jacob only "sware by the fear of his father Isaac," that is, the God whom his father Isaac feared, who had never served other gods as Abraham and Nahor had done. Two words of Jacob's were more memorable than all Laban's speeches and vain repetitions. For "the words of wise men are heard in quiet, more than the cry of him that ruleth among fools," Eccl. ix. 17. Lastly, after all this angry parley they parted friends, ver. 55. Laban very affectionately "kissed his sons and his daughters, and blessed them;" and then went back in peace. Note, God is often better to us than our fears, and strangely overrules the spirits of men in our favour beyond what we could have expected; for it is not in vain to trust in him.—Henry.

Lesson.—How particularly are the affairs of these families related, while the great events of states and kingdoms are passed over in silence, and buried in obscurity! Indeed, the Bible is intended to teach people the duties of common life; and how to serve God, enjoy comfort, and do good in their several stations and relations: and but very few are concerned in the government of empires, compared with the numbers who support the characters of parents and children, husbands and wives, masters and servants. The selfish think themselves robbed of all, which others obtain from them, however justly; and covetousness destroys even natural affection. Yet, those objects, which the men of the world count "all their glory," are so scanty, that in the pursuit or possession of them, they stand in each other's way, and every one seems to be taking from the rest; hence discontent, envy, and discord. But there are possessions of such extent, as amply to suffice for all: happy they who seek them in the first place! We may, however, thankfully receive, and cheerfully use, the portion which Providence allots us, as far as we obtain it with a clear conscience, and a testimony in the consciences of others to our fidelity and integrity: and even if men should hate and criminate us without reason, yet, when "our ways please the Lord," he will plead our cause, and "make our very enemies to be at peace with us:" he will vindicate our characters, do us justice, and overrule every event for our good. In all our removals we should have respect to the command,

This is clearly intimated, Josh. xxiv. 2: "The God of Abraham, of Nahor, and of Terah," therefore were words capable of a very ill construction. It is, in fact, little else than swearing by the idols of his Chaldean ancestors, and a virtual reproach of Jacob for having forsaken the religion of his forefathers.—BUSH.

9 ¶ And [n]Jacob said, [o][1]O God of my father Abraham, and God of my father Isaac, the LORD[p] which saidst unto me, Return unto thy country, and to thy kindred, and I will deal well with thee:

10 I am [‡]not [q]worthy of the least of all the mercies, and of all the [r]truth, which thou hast shewed unto thy servant; for with [s]my staff I passed over this Jordan, and now I am become [t]two bands.[2]

11 [u]Deliver me, I pray thee, from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esau: for I fear him, lest he will come and smite me, and [x]the mother [§]with the children.

12 And [y]thou saidst, [z]I will surely do thee good, and make thy seed as the sand of the sea, which cannot be numbered for multitude.

13 ¶ And he lodged there that same night; and took of that [a]which came to his hand, [b]a present for Esau his brother;

14 Two [c]hundred she-goats and twenty he-goats, two hundred ewes and twenty rams.

15 Thirty milch camels with their colts, forty kine and ten bulls, twenty she-asses and ten foals.

16 And he delivered them into the hand of his servants, every drove by themselves; and said unto his servants, Pass over before me, and put a space betwixt drove and drove.[3]

17 And he commanded the foremost, saying, When Esau my brother meeteth thee, and asketh thee, saying, [d]Whose art thou? and whither goest thou? and whose are these before thee?

18 Then thou shalt say, They [e]be thy servant Jacob's; it is a present sent unto my lord Esau: and, behold, also he is behind us.

19 And so commanded he the second, and the third, and all that followed the droves, saying, On this manner shall ye speak unto Esau, when ye find him.

20 And say ye moreover, Behold, thy servant Jacob is behind us: for he said, [f]I will appease him with the present that goeth before me, and afterward I will see his face: [g]peradventure he will accept [‖]of me.

21 So went the present over before him: and himself lodged that night in the company.

22 And he rose up that night, and took [h]his two wives, and his two women-servants, and his eleven sons, and passed over the ford [i]Jabbok.

23 And he took them, and [*]sent them over the brook, and sent over that he had.

24 ¶ And Jacob was left alone: and there [k]wrestled a [l]man with him, until the [†]breaking of the day.

promise, and providence of God; and if he be with us, we need not fear in the most dangerous circumstances. Indeed, so many are the perils with which we are surrounded, that nothing else can reasonably ensure our safety, or encourage our hearts.—Scott.

CHAP. XXXII. JACOB'S CONVOY.—"The angels of God met Jacob" in a visible appearance, whether in a vision by day, or in a dream by night, as when he saw them upon the ladder, (chap. xxviii. 12,) is uncertain. Note, Those that keep in a good way have always a good guard; angels themselves are ministering spirits for their safety, Heb. i. 14. Where Jacob pitched his tents, they pitched theirs about him, Ps. xxxiv. 7. They met him to bid him welcome to Canaan again; a more honourable reception this was than ever any prince had, that was met by the magistrates of a city in their formalities. They met him to congratulate him on his arrival, and particularly on his escape from Laban; for they have pleasure in the prosperity of God's servants. They had invisibly attended him all along, but now they appeared to him, because he had greater dangers before him than those he had hitherto encountered.—Henry.

JACOB'S ALARM.—Esau's success in obtaining authority, probably by conquest, in Mount Seir, had no doubt procured him from others the title of honour (my lord) which Jacob gave him. By this humble message Jacob intimated that he was well satisfied with his present possessions, the fruit of his labour; and was ready to give up all his pretensions to Isaac's substance, and to render his brother all suitable respect. Jacob doubtless understood from the messengers that Esau came towards him in a hostile manner. This appears from the narrative itself, and from Jacob's precautions, and the language of his prayer; and to suppose the contrary is to assume that both Jacob and the messengers were mistaken. Indeed, the consciousness of having deeply offended his brother might render him suspicious; yet, Esau's resentment seems actually to have revived on this occasion. And though the Lord did not restrain him by force, or in a dream prohibit him from injuring Jacob, as he had Laban; yet he influenced his heart to kindness, and blessed the means of conciliation which Jacob employed. (Prov. xvi. 7.)—Scott.

THE MYSTERIOUS COMBAT.—Observe how Jacob and the angel engaged, ver. 24. It was a single combat, hand to hand, they had neither of them any seconds. Jacob was now full of care and fear about the interview he expected, next day, with his brother; and to aggravate the trial, God himself seemed to come forth against him as an enemy, to oppose his entrance into the land of promise, and to dispute the path with him, not suffering him to follow his wives and children, whom he had sent before. Note, Strong believers must expect divers temptations, and strong ones. We are told by the prophet [illegible] "Jacob wrestled;" he "wept and made supplication;" prayers and tears were his weapons. It was not only a corporal but a spiritual wrestling, by the vigorous actings of faith and holy desire; and thus all the spiritual seed of Jacob that pray, in praying, still wrestle with God.

THE VICTORY OF FAITH.—Jacob persists in his holy importunity; "I will not let thee go except thou bless me;" whatever becomes of his family and journey, he resolves to make the best he can of this opportunity, and not to lose the advantage of his victory; he does not mean to wrestle all night for nothing, but humbly resolves he will have a blessing, and rather shall "all his bones be put out of joint," than he will go away without one. The credit of a conquest will do him no good without the comfort of a blessing. In begging this blessing, he owns his inferiority, though he seems to have the upper hand in the struggle; for "the less is blessed of the better." Note, Those that would have the blessing of Christ must be in good earnest, and be importunate for it, as those that resolve to have no denial. It is the fervent prayer that is the effectual prayer.—Henry.

ISRAEL.—This change of name, from Jacob to Israel, signified that he was no longer to be regarded as one who got the blessing by twice supplanting his elder brother, with some discredit; but, as a "prince of God," who had wrestled with him for it, and prevailed to his everlasting honour. Having power with God, he would surely also prevail with man. Thus he was, so to speak, knighted in the field. His posterity inherited his new name, but were never called from his original name; and the nation of Israel was a type of "the Israel of God," in every age and country, who wrestle and prevail with him by faith and prayer.—Scott.

PENIEL.—Jacob gives a new name to the place; he calls it "Peniel," the "face of God," ver. 30, because there he had seen the appearance of God, and obtained the favour of God. Observe, The name he gives to the place preserves and perpetuates, not the honour of his valour or victory, but only the honour of God's free grace. He does not say, "In this place I wrestled with God and prevailed," but, "In this place I saw God face to face, and my life was preserved;" not, "It was my praise that I came off a conqueror," but, "It was God's mercy that I escaped with my life."

THE SHRUNK SINEW.—Jacob "halted on his thigh," ver. 31; some think he continued to do so till his dying day, and if he did, he had no reason to complain; for the honour and comfort he obtained by this struggle were abundantly sufficient to countervail the damage, though he went limping to his grave. He had no reason to look upon it as his reproach, thus "to bear in his body the marks of the Lord Jesus," Gal. vi. 17; yet it might serve, like St. Paul's thorn in the flesh, to keep him from being lifted up with the abundance of the revelations. Notice is taken of the sun's rising upon him when he passed over Penuel; for it is sun-rise with that soul that has communion with God. The his thigh: and the hollow of Jacob's thigh was out of joint,[4] as he wrestled with him.

26 And he said, [c]Let me go, for the day breaketh. And he said, [p]I will not let thee go, except [q]thou bless me.

27 And he said unto him, [r]What is thy name? And he said, Jacob.

28 And he said, [s]Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but [‡]Israel: for as a prince hast thou [t]power with God and [u]with men, and hast prevailed.

29 And Jacob asked him, and said, Tell me, I pray thee, thy name: And he said, [x]Wherefore is it that thou dost ask after my name? and he [y]blessed him there.

30 And [z]Jacob called the name of the place [§]Peniel: for [a]I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved.

31 And as he passed over Penuel, the sun rose upon him, and [b]he halted upon his thigh.

32 Therefore the children of Israel [c]eat not of the sinew which shrank, which is upon the hollow of the thigh, unto this day: because he touched the hollow of Jacob's thigh, in the sinew that shrank.

CHAP. XXXIII.

The kindness of Jacob and Esau at their meeting, 1. Jacob buyeth a field at Shalem, and buildeth an altar, 18.

AND Jacob lifted up his eyes, and looked, and, behold, [a]Esau came, and with him four hundred men. [b]And he divided the children unto Leah, and unto Rachel, and unto the two handmaids.

2 And he put the handmaids and their children foremost, and Leah and her children after, [c]and Rachel and Joseph hindermost.

3 And he [d]passed over before them, and [e]bowed himself to the ground[1] seven times, until he came near to his brother.

4 And Esau ran to meet him, and [f]embraced him, and [g]fell on his neck, and kissed him: and they wept.

5 And he lifted up his eyes, and saw the women and the children; and said, Who are those [*]with thee? And he said, The [h]children which God hath graciously given thy servant.

6 Then the handmaidens came near, they and their children, and they bowed themselves.

7 And Leah also with her children came near, and bowed themselves: and after came Joseph near, and Rachel, and they bowed themselves.

8 And he said, [†]What meanest thou by [i]all this drove, which I met? And he said, These are to find grace in the sight of my lord.

9 And Esau said, I have enough, [k]my brother; [‡]keep that thou hast unto thyself.

A. M. 2265.—B. C. 1739.

[4] As to the true nature and scope of this transaction, although it has been much doubted among commentators whether it were a real event or a vision only, yet the words of the text seem spontaneously to yield the sense of a literal personal encounter. This interpretation is confirmed by what is said of the effect of the engagement upon Jacob's person. The hollow of his thigh was touched, and a permanent dislocation of the hip-joint ensued, which, for aught that appears, attended him through life.—Fuller.

inspired penman mentions a traditional custom which the seed of Jacob had, in remembrance of this, never to eat of that sinew or muscle, in any beast by which the hip-bone is fixed in its cup: by this observance they preserved the memorial of this story, and gave occasion to their children to inquire concerning it; they also did honour to the memory of Jacob.—Henry.

CHAP. XXXIII. Jacob and Esau—The Interview.—We have here the discourse between the two brothers at their meeting, which is very free and friendly, without the least intimation of the old quarrel. It was the best way to say nothing of it. They converse, 1. About Jacob's retinue, ver. 5—7. Eleven or twelve little ones followed Jacob close, the eldest of them not fourteen years old; "Who are these?" says Esau. Jacob speaks of his children, (1.) As God's gifts; they are a "heritage of the Lord," Ps. cxxvii. 3; cxiii. 9; cvii. 41. (2.) As choice gifts; he hath graciously given them. Though they were many, and now much his care, and as yet but slenderly provided for, yet he accounts them great blessings. 2. About the present he had sent him. Esau modestly refused it, because he had enough, and did not need it, ver. 9. Note, Those who wish to be considered men of honour, will not seem to be mercenary in their friendship: whatever influence Jacob's present had upon Esau to pacify him, he would not have it thought that it had any, and therefore refused it. His reason is, "I have enough," I have much; so the word is; so much, that he was not willing to take any thing that was his brother's. Note, (1.) Many that come short of spiritual blessings, and are out of covenant, yet have much of this world's wealth. Esau had what was promised him, the fatness of the earth, and a livelihood by his sword. (2.) It is a good thing for those that have much, to know that they have enough, though they have not so much as some others have. Jacob affectionately urges him to accept it, and prevails, ver. 10, 11. Jacob sent it through fear, (chap. xxxii. 20,) but, the fear being over, he now importunes his acceptance of it for love, to show that he desired his brother's friendship, and did not merely dread his wrath; two things he urges, The satisfaction he had in his brother's favour, which he thought himself bound to make this thankful acknowledgment of. It is a very high compliment that he passes upon him, "I have seen thy face, as though I had seen the face of God," that is, "I have seen thee reconciled to me, and at peace with me, as I desire to see God reconciled.—Henry.

Lesson.—When we have poured out our souls before the Lord in fervent prayer, we are prepared to meet dangers and difficulties with confidence and comfort, and shall soon experience the mercy and faithfulness of God. He hath various methods of making our enemies to be at peace with us; he can either bind their hands, awe their spirits, excite natural affection, or plant supernatural grace in their hearts. Yet, in all this the Lord works by suitable means; and yielding often forms the wisest method of pacifying great offences. This is done by waiving points in contest, paying all due respect, and receding from our temporal interest; and by manifesting to the consciences of our opponents, that we are satisfied with a portion earned by our labour, and neither envy nor covet their abundance; that we count it "more blessed to give than to receive;" that we consider ourselves happy in the Lord's favour, and under his protection; and that we want nothing more than to live in peace and amity, which we much desire and greatly value. Yet, in such circumstances, we must be careful that we do not carry too far our desire of pleasing, or our fear of offending, or profess more than consists with piety or sincerity; nor may we conceal, or be ashamed of our religion, when in the company of those who fear not God. It is not, therefore, desirable to be too intimate with superior ungodly relations, who will expect us to join, or at least to connive at, their vanities, though they disapprove, or perhaps deride our religion; and thus they will either be a snare to us, or offended with our conduct. It is more prudent to keep at a distance, and live among such as have less ascendancy, and where we can be more at liberty.—Scott.

CHAP. XXXIV. Jacob's Daughter.—Dinah was, for aught that appears, Jacob's only daughter, and we may suppose her therefore the mother's fondling, and the darling of the family; and yet she proves neither a joy nor a credit to them; for those children seldom prove either the best or the happiest that are most indulged. She is reckoned now but fifteen or sixteen years of age, when she here occasioned so much mischief. Observe, Her vain curiosity, which exposed her; she went out, perhaps unknown to her father, but by the connivance of her mother, "to see the daughters of the land;" ver. 1; probably, it was at a ball, or some public day. Being an only daughter, she thought herself solitary at home, having none of her own age and sex to converse with; and therefore she must needs go abroad to divert herself, to keep off melancholy, and to accomplish herself by conversation better than she could in her father's tents. Note, It is a very good thing for children to love home; it is parents' wisdom to make it easy to them, and children's duty then to be easy in it. Her pretence was, "to see the daughters of the land," to see how they dressed, and how they danced, and what was fashionable among them; she went to see, yet that was not all, she went to be seen too; she went to see the daughters of the land, but, it may be, with some thoughts of the sons of the land too. I doubt she went to get acquaintance with those Canaanites, and to learn their way. Note, The pride and vanity of young people betray them into many snares. The loss of her honour by this means; ver. 2; "Shechem, the prince of the country," but a slave to his own

5 And Jacob heard that he had defiled Dinah his daughter ([f]now his sons were with his cattle in the field); and Jacob held his peace until they were come.

6 ¶ And Hamor the father of Shechem went out unto Jacob to commune with him.

7 ¶ And the sons of Jacob came out of the field when they heard it: and the men were grieved, and they were very wroth, because he had [g]wrought folly in Israel,[1] in lying with Jacob's daughter; which [h]thing ought not to be done.

8 And Hamor communed with them, saying, [i]The soul of my son Shechem longeth for your daughter: I pray you give her him to wife.

9 And [k]make ye marriages with us, and give your daughters unto us, and take our daughters unto you.

10 And ye shall dwell with us: [l]and the land shall be before you; dwell and trade ye therein, and get you possessions therein.

11 And Shechem said unto her father, and unto her brethren, Let me find grace in your eyes, and what ye shall say unto me I will give.

12 Ask me never so much [m]dowry and gift, [2]and I will give according as ye shall say unto me: but give me the damsel to wife.

13 ¶ And the sons of Jacob answered Shechem and Hamor his father [n]deceitfully, and said, because he had defiled Dinah their sister:

14 And they said unto them, We cannot do this thing, to give our sister to one that is [o]uncircumcised; for that were a reproach unto us.

15 But in this will we consent unto you: [p]If ye will be as we be, that every male of you be circumcised;

16 Then will we give our daughters unto you, and we will take your daughters to us, and we will dwell with you, and we will become one people.

17 But if ye will not hearken unto us to be circumcised, then will we take our daughter, and we will be gone.

18 And their words pleased Hamor, [3]and Shechem Hamor's son.

19 And the young man deferred not to do the thing, [q]because he had delight in Jacob's daughter: and he was more [r]honourable than all the house of his father.

20 ¶ And Hamor and Shechem his son came unto [s]the gate[4] of their city, and communed with the men of their city, saying, 21 These men are peaceable with us, therefore let them dwell in the land, and trade therein; for the land, behold, it is large enough for them; let us take their daughters to us for wives, and let us give them our daughters.

22 Only herein [t]will the men consent unto us, for to dwell with us, to be one people, if every male among us be circumcised, as they are circumcised.

23 Shall [u]not their cattle, and their substance, and every beast of theirs be ours? only let us consent unto them, and they will dwell with us.

24 And unto Hamor and unto Shechem his son hearkened all that went out of the gate of his city: and [x]every male was circumcised, all that went out of the gate of his city.

25 ¶ And it came to pass on the third day, [5]when they were [y]sore, that two of the sons of Jacob, [z]Simeon and Levi, Dinah's brethren, took each man his sword, and came upon the city boldly, and slew all the males.

26 And they slew Hamor and Shechem his son with the [‡]edge of the sword, and took Dinah out of Shechem's house, and went out.

27 The sons of Jacob came upon the slain, and [a]spoiled the city, because [b]they had defiled their sister.

28 They took their sheep, and their oxen, and their asses, and that which was in the city, and that which was in the field,

29 And all their wealth, and all their little ones, and their wives took they captive, and spoiled even all that was in the house.[6]

30 ¶ And Jacob said to Simeon and Levi, [c]Ye have troubled me to make me [d]to stink among the inhabitants of the land, among the Canaanites and the Perizzites: [e]and I being few in number, they shall gather themselves together against me, and slay me; [f]and I shall be destroyed, I and my house.

31 And they said, [g]Should he deal with our sister as with an harlot?

lusts, took her, and lay with her, it should seem not so much by force as by surprise. Note, Great men think they may do any thing; and what more mischievous than untaught and ungoverned youth? See what came of Dinah's gadding: young women must learn to be "chaste, keepers at home."—Henry.

SHECHEM'S PROPOSAL OF MARRIAGE.—Neither Abraham nor Isaac had daughters: but both Isaac and Jacob had married the daughters of uncircumcised persons; and we have reason to conclude, that most of Jacob's sons, if not all, did the same, (Exod. vi. 15.) There was neither law nor precedent, against intermarriages with uncircumcised persons, at that time existing, as far as we know; though intermarriages with idolaters in general, and with the inhabitants of the land, by the family of Abraham, were in many ways discountenanced. Indeed, this seems to have been merely a pretence, as used by Jacob's sons; though it might have become a general opinion in his family, grounded on the covenant ratified with Abraham by circumcision, and perhaps on tradition: but religion was by no means their object in this transaction. The propriety of admitting the Shechemites, (who belonged to the devoted race of Canaan,) into the church by circumcision, upon an intelligent and suitable profession of religion, may likewise be doubted: but the very proposing the performance of this religious ordinance, as a condition of secular advantages, was as inconsistant with true piety; as the deceitful intention and subsequent conduct of Jacob's sons were with truth, justice, and humanity. Yet, alas! practices of the same nature are still shamefully common in the visible church!—Scott.

WORLDLING'S RELIGION.—Hamor and Shechem gave consent themselves to be circumcised, ver. 18, 19. To this perhaps they were moved, not only by the strong desire they had to bring about this match, but by what they might have heard of the sacred and honourable intentions of this sign in the family of Abraham, which, it is probable, they had some confused notions of, and of the promises confirmed by it; which made them the more desirous to incorporate with the family of Jacob, Zech. viii. 23. Note, 1. Many who know little of religion, yet know so much of it as makes them willing to join themselves with those that are religious. 2. If a man would take upon him a form of religion, to gain a good wife, much more should we embrace the power of it, to gain the favour of a good God; even circumcise our hearts to love him, and as Shechem here, "not defer to do the thing." They urged an argument which was very cogent, ver. 23. "Shall not their cattle and their substance be ours?" They observed that Jacob's sons were industrious thriving people, and promised themselves and their neighbours advantage by an alliance with them; it would improve ground and trade, and bring money into their country. Now, (1.) It was bad enough to marry upon this principle; yet we see covetousness the greatest match-maker in the world, and nothing designed so much, with many, as the laying of house to house, and field to field, without regard had to any other consideration. (2.) It was worse to be circumcised upon this principle. The Shechemites will embrace the religion of Jacob's family, only in hopes of interesting themselves thereby in the riches of that family. Thus there are many with whom gain is godliness, and who are more governed and influenced by their secular interest than by any principle of their religion.

LAWLESS REVENGE.—It was true that Shechem "had wrought folly in Israel," in defiling Dinah; but it ought to have been considered how far Dinah herself had been accessary to it. Had Shechem abused her in her own mother's tent, it had been another matter; but she went upon his ground, and perhaps, by her indecent carriage, had struck the spark which began the fire. 2. It is true that Shechem had done ill; but he was endeavouring to atone for it, and was as honest and honourable, ex post facto—after the deed, as the case would admit. 3. It was true that Shechem had done ill; but what was that to all the Shechemites? Does one man sin, and will they be wroth with all the town? Must the innocent fall with the guilty? This was barbarous indeed. 4. But that which, above all, aggravated the cruelty, was the most perfidious treachery that was in it. The Shechemites had submitted to their conditions, and had done that upon which they had promised to become one people with them. 5. This also added to the crime, that they made a holy ordinance of God subservient to their wicked design, so making that odious; as if it were not enough for them to shame themselves and their family, they bring a reproach upon that honourable badge of their religion; justly would it be called "a bloody ordinance."—Henry.

CHAP. XXXV. JACOB REMINDED OF HIS VOW.—God had performed his part of the bargain, and had given Jacob more than bread to eat, and raiment to put on—he had got an estate, and was become two bands; but, it should seem, he had forgotten his vow, or, at least, had too long deferred the performance of it. Seven or eight years it was now since he came to Canaan; he had purchased ground there, and had built an altar, in remembrance of God's last appearance to him, when he called him "Israel;" (chap. xxxiii. 19, 20;) but Beth-el still is forgotten. Note, Time is apt to wear out the sense of mercies, and the impressions made upon us by them; it should not be so, but so it is. God had exercised Jacob with a very sore affliction in his family, (chap. xxxiv.) to see if that would bring his vow to his remembrance, and put him upon the performance of it; but it had not that effect: therefore God comes himself, and puts him in mind of it; "Arise, go to Beth-el." Note, 1. As many as God loves, he will remind of 26 And [k]the sons of Zilpah, Leah's handmaid; Gad and Asher. These are the sons of Jacob, which were born to him in Padan-aram.

27 ¶ And [l]Jacob came unto Isaac his father, unto [m]Mamre, unto the city of Arbah (which is Hebron), where Abraham and Isaac sojourned.

28 And the days of Isaac were [n]an hundred and fourscore years.

29 ¶ And Isaac [o]gave up the ghost, and died, and was gathered unto his people, being old and full of days: and [p]his sons Esau and Jacob buried him.[4] neglected duties, one way or other, by conscience or by providences. 2. When we have vowed a vow to God, it is best not to defer the payment of it, (Eccles. v. 4,) yet better late than never. God bade him go to Beth-el and dwell there, that is, not only go himself, but take his family with him, that they might join with him in his devotions.—Henry.

Domestic Sanctification.—The "strange gods" were idols, worshipped by those who were strangers to the true God and his covenant. Probably the images which Rachel had stolen were of that number, and some might have been found among the spoils of the Shechemites. It seems that some of Jacob's household worshipped them, and that he had been aware of this; yet had timidly or indolently connived at it. It is evident that there existed rules for external purification, before the promulgation of the Mosaic law; which were designed to represent the sanctification of the Spirit, as the sacrifices prefigured the atonement of Christ's death. The abominations recorded in the foregoing chapter, as well as other evils, which prevailed in Jacob's family, greatly needed such reformation and purification, as a preparation to the solemn sacrifices and services which Jacob was about to perform. Jacob's family seem to have parted with their idols less reluctantly than he expected. The earrings were probably worn as an amulet, or charm, in token of some dependence on the strange gods; and rather from superstition than for ornament. Jacob buried them in the ground secretly, that his family might not know what he had done with them. He would not convert the metal to other uses; and perhaps he did not know how more entirely to destroy it.—Scott.

Bethel Revisited.—Jacob and his retinue being come safe to Beth-el, we are told what passed there. There he built an altar, ver. 7, and, no doubt, offered sacrifices upon it, perhaps the tenth of his cattle, according to his vow, "I will give the tenth unto thee." With these sacrifices he joined praises for former mercies, particularly that which the sight of the place brought fresh to his remembrance: and he added prayers for the continuance of God's favour to him and his family. And he called the place, that is, the altar, "El-beth-el, the God of Beth-el." As, when he made thankful acknowledgment of the honour God had lately done him in calling him Israel, he worshipped God by the name of El-elohe Israel: so, now that he was making a grateful recognition of God's former favour to him at Beth-el, he worships God by the name of El-beth-el, the God of Beth-el, because there God appeared to him. Note, The comfort which the saints have in holy ordinances, is not so much from Bethel, the house of God, as from El-beth-el, the God of the house. The ordinances are but empty things, if we do not meet with God in them.—Henry.

Rachel's Death.—The expression, "her soul was in departing," aptly describes the nature of death; which is the dissolution of the union betwixt soul and body. Rachel had rashly said, "Give me children, or else I die:" God gave her children, and she died in childbirth. Jacob, by changing the name which Rachel had given to her son, intimated that it was not proper so to indulge his sorrow, as to overlook the mercies still vouchsafed him, or neglect the duties of his station. The son of my right hand seems to mean one valued as my right hand; or, "a son, who shall be my defender in my old age, as if he were my right hand."—Scott.

Isaac's Death.—The age and death of Isaac are here recorded, though it appears, by computation, that he died not till many years after Joseph was sold into Egypt, and much about the time that he was preferred there. Isaac, a mild quiet man, lived the longest of all the patriarchs, for he was 180 years old; Abraham was but 175. Isaac lived about 40 years after he had made his will, chap. xxvii. 2. We shall not die an hour the sooner, but abundantly the better, for our timely setting of our heart and house in order. Particular notice is taken of the amicable agreement of Esau and Jacob, in solemnizing their father's funeral, ver. 29, to show how wonderfully God had changed Esau's mind, since he vowed his brother's murder immediately after his father's death, chap. xxvii. 41. Note, God has many ways of preventing bad men from doing the mischief they intended; he can either tie their hands, or turn their hearts.—Henry.

CHAP. XXXVI. Esau—Seir.—Esau removed to mount Seir, which was the country God had given him for a possession, when he reserved Canaan for the seed of Jacob. God owns it, long afterward. "I gave to Esau mount Seir," (Deut. ii. 5, Josh. xxiv. 4,) which was the reason why the Edomites must not be disturbed in their possession. Those that have not a right by promise, such as Jacob had, to Canaan, may have a very good title by providence, to their estates, such as Esau had to mount Seir. Esau had begun to settle among his wives' relations, in Seir, before Jacob came from Padan-aram, chap. xxxii. 3. Isaac, it is likely, had sent him thither, (as Abraham in his life-time had sent the sons of the concubines from Isaac his son into the east country, chap. xxv. 6,) that Jacob might have the clearer way made for him in the possession of the promised land; but, probably, during the life of Isaac, Esau had still had some effects remaining in Canaan. But, after his death, he wholly withdrew to mount Seir, took with him what came to his share of his father's personal estate, and left Canaan to Jacob; not only because he had the promise of it, but because he saw that if they should both continue to thrive as they had begun, there would not be room for both. "Thus dwelt Esau in mount Seir," ver. 8. Note, Whatever opposition may be made, God's word will be accomplished, and even those that have opposed it, will see themselves, some time or other, under a necessity of yielding to it, and acquiescing in it. Esau had struggled for Canaan, but now he tamely retires to mount Seir; for God's counsels shall certainly stand, concerning the times before appointed, and the bounds of our habitation.

Esau—Edom.—By degrees the Edomites wormed out the Horites, and got full possession of the country, and had a government of their own. 1. They were ruled by kings, who governed the whole country, and seem to have come to the throne by election, and not by lineal descent; so Bishop Patrick observes. These kings reigned in "Edom, before there reigned any king over the children of Israel," that is, before Moses' time, for "he was king in Jeshurun," ver. 3. God had lately promised "Jacob, that kings should come out of his loins," chap. xxxv. 11, yet Esau's blood becomes royal before any of Jacob's did. Note, In external prosperity and honour, the children of the covenant are often cast behind, and those that are out of covenant get the start. The triumphing of the wicked may be quick, but it is short; soon ripe, and as soon rotten: while the productions of the promise, though they are slow, are sure and lasting; "at the end they shall speak, and not lie." We may suppose it a great trial to the faith of God's Israel, to hear of the pomp and power of the kings of Edom, while they were bondslaves in Egypt; but those that look for great things from God must be content to wait for them; God's time is the best time. 2. They were afterward governed by dukes again here named, who, I suppose, ruled all at the same time in several places in the country. Either they set up this form of government in conformity to the Horites, who had used it, ver. 29, or God's providence reduced them to it, as some conjecture, to correct them for their unkindness to Israel, in refusing them a passage through their country, Num. xx. 18. Note, When power is abused, it is just with God to weaken it, by turning it into divers channels. "For the transgression of a land, many are the princes thereof." Sin brought Edom from kings to dukes, from crowns to coronets. We read of the dukes of Edom, Exod. xv. 15, yet long afterward, of their kings again.—Henry.

Lessons.—This chapter seems intended to evince the faithfulness of God in his promise to Abraham, "Nations shall come of thee;" and to show the accomplishment of his prophetical information to Rebekah, "Two nations are in thy womb;" and the blessing to Esau, "By thy sword shalt thou live." They might also be in many ways useful to the children of Israel. Yet it contains mere registers, and is very different from the [illegible] history of the heirs of promise; who have the best place and the highest [illegible] in the book of God, though not in many other books. However men may [illegible] purpose of God, his counsel will stand; they will finally be con[illegible] and he hath many ways of [illegible] them to do so. He often [illegible] [illegible] portion of this world; and, satisfied with it, they leave others to possess and enjoy spiritual blessings unenvied and unmolested. This is Esau: still the profane despiser of heavenly things, as when he sold his birthright; though not the same malicious persecutor, as when he vowed Jacob's destruction. Yet he and such as he look great, become dukes and princes, and are envied and courted; while the Israel of God are poor, obscure, and despised.—Scott.

CHAP. XXXVII. Joseph—the Darling Child.—Jacob had no son by his beloved Rachel till about seven years after his marriage, when he was far advanced in years. Benjamin was, in the more strict sense, "the son of his old age;" but he was, at the same time, very young. His other sons had in many things grieved and disgraced him; but Joseph seems to have given early indications of that wisdom and piety which adorned his maturer age. He was therefore the chief earthly comfort Jacob enjoyed after Rachel's death; and, in token of special affection, he clothed him in "a coat of colours," or "of pieces," the word many not being in the original. It was more beautiful than the garments worn by the others; but this distinction between him and his brothers seems to have been invidious and injudicious.—Scott.

His Brothers' Envy.—Joseph was hated by his brethren, 1. Because his father loved him. When parents make a difference, children soon take notice of it, and it often occasions feuds and quarrels in families. 2. Because he "brought to his father their evil report. Jacob's sons did that when they were from under his eye, which they durst not have done if they had been at home with him; but Joseph gave his father an account of their bad carriage, that he might reprove and restrain them, not as a malicious talebearer, to sow discord, but as a faithful brother, who, when he durst not admonish them himself, represented their faults to one that had authority to admonish them.—Henry.

His Dream.—Some expositors consider Joseph as faulty in disclosing his dreams, but probably he was led by a secret divine impulse to do so. It was on many accounts proper they should be known, though otherwise it would have been impolitic for him to have declared them. His brethren rightly interpreted the dream, though they abhorred the interpretation; and, while they spared no pains, and ventured upon the most atrocious crimes to defeat it, they were themselves the instruments of its accomplishment. Thus the Jews understood Christ's parables, and the intimations he gave of his kingdom; but, determining that he should not reign over them, they consulted to put him to death, and by his crucifixion they actually made way for that exaltation which they intended to prevent.—Scott.

Conspiracy against Him.—Observe, 1. How deliberate his brethren were in the contrivance of this [illegible]; when they "saw him afar off, they conspired against him," ver. 18.

4 And when his brethren saw that their father loved him more than all his brethren, they [f]hated him, and could not speak peaceably unto him.

5 And Joseph [g]dreamed a dream; and he told it his brethren: and they hated him yet the more.

6 And he said unto them, [h]Hear, I pray you, this dream which I have dreamed.

7 For, behold, we were binding sheaves in the field, and, lo, my sheaf arose, and also stood upright; and, behold, [i]your sheaves stood round about, and made obeisance to my sheaf.

8 And his brethren said unto him, [k]Shalt thou indeed reign over us? or shalt thou indeed have dominion over us? and they hated him yet the more for his dreams, and for his words.

9 And he dreamed yet [l]another dream, and told it his brethren, and said, Behold, I have dreamed a dream more; and, behold, [m]the sun and the moon and the eleven stars made obeisance to me.

10 And he told it to his father, and to his brethren: and his father rebuked him, and said unto him, What is this dream that thou hast dreamed? [n]Shall I and thy mother and thy brethren indeed come to bow down ourselves to thee to the earth?

11 And his brethren [o]envied him: but his father [p]observed the saying.

12 ¶ And his brethren went to feed their father's flock [q]in Shechem.

13 And Israel said unto Joseph, Do not thy brethren feed the flock in Shechem? [r]Come, and I will send thee unto them. And he said to him, [s]Here am I.

14 And he said to him, Go, I pray thee, [t]see whether it be well with thy brethren, and well with the flocks; and bring me word again. So he sent him out of the vale of [u]Hebron,[3] and he came to Shechem.[3]

15 ¶ And a certain man found him, and, behold, [v]he was wandering in the field: and the man asked him, saying, [x]What seekest thou?

16 And he said, I seek my brethren: [y]tell me, I pray thee, where they feed their flocks.

17 And the man said, They are departed hence: for I heard them say, Let us go to [z]Dothan. And Joseph went after his brethren, and found them in Dothan.

18 ¶ And when they saw him afar off, even before he came near unto them, they [a]conspired against him to slay him.

19 And they said one to another, Behold, [§]this dreamer cometh.

20 Come now, therefore, [b]and let us slay him, and cast him into some pit; and we will say, Some evil beast hath devoured him: [c]and we shall see what will become of his dreams.

21 And [d]Reuben heard it,[4] and he delivered him out of their hands; and said, Let us not kill him.

22 And Reuben said unto them, Shed no blood, but cast him into this pit that is in the wilderness, and lay no hand upon him; that he might rid him out of their hands, to deliver him to his father again.

23 ¶ And it came to pass when Joseph was come unto his brethren, that they [e]stript Joseph out of his coat, his coat of many [‖]colours that was on him.

24 And they took him, and cast him into a pit: and [f]the pit was empty, there was no water in it.

25 And [g]they sat down to eat bread:[5] and they lifted up their eyes and looked, and, behold, a company of [h]Ishmeelites came from [i]Gilead, with their camels bearing spicery, and balm, and myrrh, going to carry it down to Egypt.

26 And Judah said unto his brethren, [k]what profit is it if we slay our brother, and [l]conceal his blood?

27 Come, and let us [m]sell him to the Ishmeelites, and [n]let not our hand be upon him; for he is [o]our brother, and our flesh: and his brethren [*]were content.

28 Then there passed [p]by Midianites, merchantmen; and they drew and lifted up Joseph out of the pit, and [q]sold Joseph to the Ishmeelites for twenty pieces of silver: and they brought Joseph into Egypt.

29 ¶ And Reuben returned unto the pit; and, behold, Joseph was not in the pit; and [r]he rent his clothes.

30 And he returned unto his brethren, and said, [s]The child is not; and I, whither shall I go?

31 ¶ And they took [t]Joseph's coat, and killed a kid of the goats, and dipped the coat in the blood.

32 And they sent the coat of many colours, and they brought it to their father; and said, This have we found; know now whether it be [u]thy son's coat or no.

33 And he knew it, and said, It is my son's coat; an [x]evil beast hath devoured him: Joseph is without doubt rent in pieces.

34 And Jacob [y]rent his clothes, and put sackcloth upon his loins, and mourned for his son many days.

35 And all his sons and all his daughters [z]rose up to comfort him; but he refused to be comforted; and he said, [a]For I will go down into the grave unto my son, mourning. Thus his father wept for him.

36 ¶ And [b]the Midianites sold him into Egypt unto Potiphar, [†]an officer of Pharaoh's, and [‡]captain of the guard.

It was not in a heat, or upon a sudden provocation, that they thought to slay him, but from malice prepense, and in cold blood. 2. How cruel they were in their design; nothing less than his blood would satisfy them, "Come and let us slay him," ver. 20. Note, The old enmity hunts for the precious life. They are the "blood-thirsty," that "hate the upright," Prov. xxix. 10, and it is the blood of the saints that the harlot is drunk with. 3. How scornfully they reproach him for his dreams; ver. 19, "This dreamer cometh," and, ver. 20, "We shall see what will become of his dreams." This shows what it was that fretted and enraged them; they could not endure to think of doing obeisance to him, that was it which they were plotting to prevent by the murder of him. Note, Men that fret and rage at God's counsels are impiously aiming to defeat them; but they imagine a vain thing, Ps. ii. 1—3. God's counsels will stand. 4. How they agreed to keep one another's counsel, and to cover the murder with a lie; "We will say some evil beast hath devoured him:" whereas they were worse than the most evil beasts, being now engaged in consultation to devour him; for evil beasts prey not on those of their own kind, but these were tearing a piece of themselves.

Imposition upon Jacob.—Joseph would soon be missed, great inquiry would be made for him, and therefore his brethren have a further design, to make the world believe that Joseph was torn in pieces by a wild beast; and this they did (1.) To clear themselves, that they might not be suspected to have done him any mischief. Note, We have all learned of Adam to cover our transgression, Job xxxi. 33. When the devil has taught men to commit one sin, he then teaches them to conceal it with another; theft and murder, with lying and perjury; but he that covers his sin shall not prosper long. Joseph's brethren kept their own and one another's council for some time, but their villany came to light at last, and it is here published to the world, and the remembrance of it transmitted to every age. (2.) To grieve their good father; it seems designed by them on purpose to be avenged upon him for his distinguishing love of Joseph: it was contrived on purpose to create the utmost vexation to him; they sent him Joseph's coat of many colours, with one colour more than it had had, a bloody colour, ver. 32. They pretend they had found it in the fields, and Jacob himself must be scornfully asked, "Is this thy son's coat?" Now the badge of his honour is the discovery of his fate; and it is rashly inferred, from the bloody coat, that "Joseph, without doubt, is rent in pieces." Love is always apt to fear the worst concerning the person loved; there is a love that casteth out fear, but that is a perfect love. Now, let those that know the heart of a parent suppose the agonies of poor Jacob, and put their soul into his soul's stead. How strongly does he represent to himself the direful idea of Joseph's misery! Sleeping or waking, he imagines he sees the wild beasts setting upon Joseph; thinks he hears his piteous shrieks, when the lion roared against him; makes himself tremble and grow chill many a time when he fancies how the beasts sucked his blood, tore him limb from limb, and left no remains of him, but the coat of many colours, to carry the tidings. And, no doubt, it added no little to the grief, that he had exposed him, by sending him, and sending him all alone, on this dangerous journey, which proved so fatal to him. This cuts him to the heart, and he is ready to look upon himself as an accessary to the death of his son. Now, 1. Endeavours were used to comfort him; his sons basely pretended to do it, ver. 35, but miserable hypocritical comforters were they all. Had they really desired to comfort him, they might easily have done it by telling him the truth, "Joseph is alive, he is indeed sold into Egypt, but it will be an easy thing to send thither and ransom him." This would have "loosed his sackcloth, and girded him with gladness" presently. I wonder their countenances did not betray their guilt, and with what face they could pretend to condole with Jacob on the death of Joseph, when they knew he was alive. Note, The heart is strangely hardened by the deceitfulness of sin. But, 2. It was all in vain; "Jacob refused to be comforted, ver. 35. He was an obstinate mourner, resolved to go down to the grave mourning: it was not a sudden transport of passion, like that of David, "Would God I had died for thee, my son, my son!"

Joseph Sold.—His brethren sold him; a caravan of merchants very opportunely passed by, (Providence so ordering it,) and Judah made the motion that they should sell Joseph to them, to be carried far enough off into Egypt, where, in all probability, he would be lost, and never heard of more. 1. Judah moved it in compassion to Joseph, ver. 26, "what profit is it if we slay our brother? It will be less guilt and more gain to sell him." Note, When we are tempted to sin we should consider the unprofitableness of it. It is what there is nothing to be got by. 2. They acquiesced in it, because they thought that if he were sold for a slave he would never be a lord—if sold into Egypt, would never be their lord; yet all this was working towards it. Note, The wrath of man shall praise God, and the remainder of wrath he will restrain, Ps. lxxvi. 10. Joseph's brethren were wonderfully restrained from murdering him, and their selling him as wonderfully turned to God's praise: as Joseph was sold by the contrivance of Judah, for twenty pieces of silver, so was our Lord Jesus for thirty, and by one of the same name too, Judas. Reuben (it seems) was gone away from his brethren when they sold Joseph, intending to come round some other way to the pit, and to help Joseph out of it, and return him safe to his father; this was a kind project, but if it had taken effect, what had become of God's purpose concerning his preferment in Egypt?

Judah begetteth Er, Onan, and Shelah, 1. Er marrieth Tamar, 6. The trespass of Onan, 8. Judah's incest with Tamar, 12.

AND it came to pass at that time,[1] that Judah went down from his brethren, and [a]turned in to a certain [b]Adullamite, whose name was Hirah.

2 And Judah [c]saw there a daughter of a certain Canaanite, whose name was [d]Shuah; and he took her, and went in unto her.

3 And she conceived, and bare a son; and he called his name [e]Er.

4 And she conceived again, and bare a son; and she called his name Onan.

5 And she yet again conceived, and bare a son; and called his name [f]Shelah: and he was at Chezib when she bare him.

6 ¶ And Judah [g]took a wife for Er his first-born, whose name was Tamar.

7 And Er, Judah's first-born, [h]was wicked in the sight of the LORD; and the LORD slew him.[2]

8 And Judah said unto Onan, [i]Go in unto thy brother's wife, and marry her, and raise up seed to thy brother.

9 And Onan knew that the seed should not be his: and it came to pass, when he went in unto his brother's wife, that he spilled it on the ground, [k]lest that he should give seed to his brother.

10 And the thing which he did *displeased the LORD: wherefore he slew him also.[3]

11 Then said Judah to Tamar his daughter-in-law, Remain a widow at thy father's house, [l]till Shelah my son be grown; (for he said, Lest peradventure he die also as his brethren did:) and Tamar went and dwelt in her father's house.

12 ¶ And [†]in process of time, the daughter of Shuah, Judah's wife, died: and Judah was [m]comforted, and went up unto his [n]sheep-shearers[4] to Timnath, he and his friend Hirah the Adullamite.

13 And it was told Tamar, saying, Behold, thy father-in-law goeth up to [o]Timnath,[5] to shear his sheep.

14 And she put her widow's garments off from her, and covered her with a veil, and wrapped herself, [p]and sat in [‡]an open place, which is by the way to Timnath: for she saw [q]that Shelah was grown, and she was not given unto him to wife.

15 When Judah saw her, he thought her to be an harlot: because she had covered her face.

16 And he turned unto her by the way, and said, Go to, I pray thee, let me come in unto thee (for he knew not that she was his daughter-in-law): and she said, [r]What wilt thou give me that thou mayest come in unto me?

17 And he said, [s]I will send thee [$]a kid from the flock. And she said, [t]Wilt thou give me a pledge, till thou send it?

18 And he said, What pledge shall I give thee? And she said, [u]Thy signet, and thy bracelets, [6] and thy staff that is in thine hand: and he [x]gave it her, and came in unto her, and she conceived by him.

19 And she arose, and went away, and laid by her veil from her, and put on the [y]garments of her widowhood.

20 ¶ And Judah sent the kid by the hand of [z]his friend the Adullamite, to receive his pledge from the woman's hand: but he found her not.

21 Then he asked the men of that place, saying, Where is the harlot that was [‖]openly by the way-side? And they said, There was no harlot in this place.

22 And he returned to Judah, and said, I cannot find her; and also the men of the place said that there was no harlot in this place.

23 And Judah said, Let her take it to her, [a]lest we *be shamed:[7] behold, I sent this kid, and thou hast not found her.

24 And it came to pass about three months after, that it was told Judah, saying, Tamar thy daughter-in-law hath [b]played the harlot; and also, behold, she is with child by whoredom: and Judah said, Bring her forth, and [c]let her be burnt.

25 When she was brought forth, she sent to her father-in-law, saying, By the man whose these are, am I with child: and she said, [d]Discern, I pray thee, whose are these, the signet, and bracelets, and staff.

26 And Judah acknowledged them, and said, [e]She hath been more righteous than I; [f] [g]because that I gave her not to Shelah my son; [g]and he knew her again no more.

27 ¶ And it came to pass in the time of her travail, that, behold, twins were in her womb.

28 And it came to pass when she had travailed, that the one put out his hand; and the midwife took and bound upon his hand a scarlet thread, saying, This came out first.

29 And it came to pass as he drew back his hand, that, behold, his brother came out; and she said, [†]How hast thou broken forth? this breach be upon thee; therefore [h]his name was called [‡]Pharez.

30 And afterward came out his brother, that had the scarlet thread upon his hand; [i]and his name was called Zarah.[9] merchants, no doubt) to Potiphar, ver. 36. Jacob was lamenting the loss of his life; had he known all he would have lamented, though not so passionately, the loss of his liberty. Shall Jacob's free-born son exchange the best robe of his family for the livery of an Egyptian lord, and all the marks of servitude? How soon was the land of Egypt made a house of bondage to the seed of Jacob! Note, It is the wisdom of parents not to bring up their children too delicately, because they know not what hardships and mortifications Providence may reduce them to before they die. Jacob little thought that ever his beloved Joseph should be thus bought and sold for a servant.—Henry.

CHAP. XXXVIII. JUDAH'S MARRIAGE.—The inspired historian here breaks off his narration to relate some other occurrences which had taken place in Jacob's family, and were doubtless an additional cause of great grief to the aged patriarch. Though Judah and his brethren so strenuously opposed the marriage of Dinah with an uncircumcised person, yet he, and probably all the rest, married the daughters of those who were not circumcised. The marriages of Israelitish women with uncircumcised persons were by the law virtually forbidden; because, when a Gentile embraced the religion of Israel he was circumcised. But if the daughters of uncircumcised persons were converted to the worship of the true God, not being capable of circumcision, they might become the wives of Israelites without violating any statute; and indeed this seems to have been allowed in some other cases, (Deut. xxi. 10—14; Judg. xiv. 2—4; Ruth i. 4, iii. 9—13, iv; Matt. i. 5.) It does not, however, appear that Judah was more careful in this respect than Esau had been. He must have been very young when he married, which probably took place before Joseph was sold into Egypt; yet he seems to have acted without Jacob's consent, by the advice of his Canaanitish friend. Adullam was not far from Ephrath, and, it is generally supposed, to the north of Hebron. Probably Judah at this time left his father's house for some other residence. Shuah was the name of Judah's wife's father, and not that of his wife.—Scott.

SIN AND FEAR OF DETECTION.—Judah was taken in the snare, and though it was ignorantly that he was guilty of incest with his daughter-in-law, (not knowing who she was,) yet he was wilfully guilty of fornication; whoever she was, he knew she was not his wife, and therefore not to be touched: nor was his sin capable in the least of such a charitable excuse as some take for Tamar, that though the action was bad, the intention possibly might be good. Observe, 1. Judah's sin began in the eye; ver. 15, "he saw her." Note, Those have eyes and hearts full of adultery, (as it is, 2 Pet. ii. 14,) that catch at every bait that presents itself to them, and are as tinder to every spark. We have need to make a covenant with our eyes, and to turn them from beholding vanity, lest the eye infect the heart. 2. It added to the scandal, that the hire of a harlot (than which is nothing more infamous) was demanded, offered, and accepted; "a kid from the flock," a goodly price at which her chastity and honour was valued! Nay, had the consideration been thousands of rams, and ten thousand rivers of oil, it had not been a valuable consideration. The favour of God, the purity of the soul, the peace of conscience, and the hope of heaven, are too precious to be exposed to sale at any such rates; the topaz of Ethiopia cannot equal them: what are those profited that lose their souls to gain the world? 3. It turned to the reproach of Judah that he left his jewels in pawn for a kid. He lost his jewels by the bargain; he sent the kid, according to his promise, to redeem his pawn, but the supposed harlot could not be found. He sent it by his friend, (who was indeed his back friend, because he was aiding and abetting in his evil deeds,) the Adullamite, who came back without the pledge. It is a good account (if it be but true) of any place, which they here give, that "there is no harlot in this place;" for such sinners are the scandals and plagues of any place. Judah sits down, content to lose his signet and his bracelets, and forbids his friend to make any further inquiry after them, giving this reason, "lest we be shamed," ver. 23. Either, 1. Lest his sin should come to be known publicly and be talked of. Fornication and all uncleanness have ever been looked upon as scandalous things, and the reproach and shame of those that are convicted of them. Nothing will make those blush that are not ashamed of these. Or, 2. Lest he should be laughed at as a fool for trusting a strumpet with his signet and his bracelets. He expresses no concern about the sin, to get that pardoned, only about the shame to prevent that. Note, There are many who are more solicitous to preserve their reputation with men, than to secure the favour of God and a good conscience; lest we be ashamed goes further with them than lest we be damned.

EXPOSURE.—Judah was ashamed when it was made to appear that he was the adulterer; she produced "the ring and the bracelets" in court, which justified the fathering of the child upon Judah, ver. 25, 26. Note, The wickedness that has been most secretly committed and most industriously concealed, yet sometimes is strangely brought to light to the shame and confusion of those who have said, "No eye sees." A bird of the air may carry the voice; however, there is a discovering day coming, when all will be laid open. Some of the Jewish writers observe, that as Judah had said to his father, "See, is this thy son's coat?" chap. xxxvii. 32, so it was now said to him, "See, are these thy signet and bracelets?" Judah being convicted by his own conscience, confesses his sin. "She has been more righteous than I."—Henry.

CHAP. XXXIX. JOSEPH'S PROSPERITY.—Though Joseph was a slave, he was had in

AND Joseph [a]was brought down to Egypt: and Potiphar, an officer of Pharaoh, captain of the guard,[1] an Egyptian, bought him of the hands of [b]the Ishmeelites, which had brought him down thither.

2 And [c]the LORD was with Joseph, and he was a prosperous man: and he was in the [d]house of his master the Egyptian.

3 And his master [e]saw that the LORD was with him, and that the LORD made all that he did to [f]prosper in his hand.

4 And Joseph [g]found grace in his sight, and he served him: and he made him [h]overseer[2] over his house, and all that he had he put into his hand.

5 And it came to pass from the time that he had made him overseer in his house, and over all that he had, that the LORD blessed the Egyptian's house [i]for Joseph's sake: and the blessing of the LORD was upon all that he had, in the house, and in the field.

6 And he left all that he had in Joseph's [k]hand; and he knew not ought he had, save the bread which he did eat: and Joseph was [l]a goodly person, and well-favoured.

7 ¶ And it came to pass after these things, that his master's wife [m]cast her eyes upon Joseph; and she said, [n]Lie with me.

8 But he [o]refused, and said unto his master's wife, Behold, my master wotteth not what is with me in the house, and he hath committed all that he hath to my hand.

9 There is [p]none greater in this house than I; neither hath he kept back any thing from me, but thee, because thou art his wife: [q]how then can I do this great wickedness, and [r]sin against God?

10 And it came to pass as she spake to Joseph day by day, that he hearkened not unto her, to lie by her, [s]or to be with her.

11 And it came to pass about this time, that Joseph went into the house to do his business; and there was [t]none of the men of the house there within.

12 And she [u]caught him by his garment, saying, Lie with me: [x]and he left his garment in her hand, and fled, and got him out.

13 And it came to pass, when she saw that he had left his garment in her hand, and was fled forth, 14 That she called unto the men of her house, and spake unto them, saying, See, he hath brought in [y]an Hebrew unto us to mock us: [z]he came in unto me to lie with me, and I cried with a *loud voice.

15 And it came to pass, when he heard that I lifted up my voice and cried, that he left his garment with me, and fled, and got him out.

16 And she [a]laid up his garment by her until his lord came home.

CHAP. XL.

The butler and baker of Pharaoh are imprisoned, 1; Joseph hath charge of them, 4; he interpreteth their dreams, 5.

AND [a]it came to pass after these things, that [b]the butler of the king of Egypt and his baker had offended their lord the king of Egypt.

2 And Pharaoh was [c]wroth against two of his officers, against [d]the chief of the butlers, and against the chief of the bakers.

3 And he put them in ward in the [1]house of the captain of the guard, into the prison, [e]the place where Joseph was bound.

4 And [f]the captain of the guard charged Joseph with them, and he served them; and they continued [g]a season in ward.

5 ¶ And [h]they dreamed a dream both of them, each man his dream in one night, each man according to the interpretation of his dream; the butler and the baker of the king of Egypt, which were bound in the prison.

6 And Joseph came in unto them in the morning, and looked upon them, [i]and, behold, they were sad.

7 And he asked Pharaoh's officers that were with him in the ward of his lord's house, saying, [k]Wherefore *look ye so sadly to-day?

8 And they said unto him, We have dreamed a dream, and there is no interpreter of it. And Joseph said unto them, [l]Do not interpretations belong to God? tell me them, I pray you.

9 And the chief butler told his dream to reputation; and, being diligent in his business, he became a favourite with his master, who greatly countenanced and confided in him. Potiphar, no doubt, would hear from Joseph (who, it is evident, avowed his religion, and refused to join in idolatry) many things concerning JEHOVAH, the God whom he worshipped; and, finding all his affairs prospered, and that Joseph ascribed this to the Lord's special blessing, he might be convinced, (as Laban had been concerning Jacob,) that the Lord blessed him for Joseph's sake; indeed, it seems to have been evident to all concerned.—Scott.

HIS TEMPTATION.—The temptation Joseph was assaulted with was very strong; never was a more violent onset made upon the fort of chastity than this recorded here. 1. The sin he was tempted to was uncleanness, which, considering his youth, his beauty, his single state, and his plentiful living at the table of a ruler, was a sin which, one would think, might most easily beset him and betray him. 2. The tempter was his mistress, a person of quality, whom it was his place to obey, and his interest to oblige, whose favour would contribute more than any thing to his preferment, and by whose means he might arrive at the highest honours of the court. On the other hand, it was at his utmost peril if he slighted her and made her his enemy. 3. Opportunity makes a thief, makes an adulterer; and that favoured the temptation. The tempter was in the house with him; his business led him to be, without any suspicion, where she was; none of the family were within, ver. 11; there appeared no danger of its being ever discovered, or, if it should be suspected, his mistress would protect him. 4. To all this was added importunity, frequent, constant importunity, to such a degree that, at last, she laid violent hands on him.—Henry.

HIS VICTORY.—Comparing Joseph's conduct with that of Judah, Reuben, and the other sons of Jacob, it must be allowed that he had justly the preference in his father's esteem. Nor was his refusal more worthy of admiration than the manner of it. The calmness of his spirit, the force of his arguments, the generosity and delicacy, as well as piety, of his sentiments, are most beautiful. His master's kindness to him, the honourable station which he held in his family, the peculiar relation in which his tempter stood to his generous benefactor, the greatness of the injustice and ingratitude to him; but, above all, the greatness of the wickedness in the sight of God, whose authority and displeasure he was not ashamed to mention to this adulterous woman; these were the topics on which he insisted; and had not her vile passions stupified and heardened her heart, surely she must have been reclaimed, or even converted to his God and to his religion, which he so adorned and recommended by his conduct!—Scott.

UNJUST PUNISHMENT.—Joseph was wronged by his master. He [illegible] the accusation, and either Joseph durst not make his defence by telling the truth, [illegible] too much upon his mistress, or his master would not hear it, or would not believe it, and there is no remedy, he is condemned to perpetual imprisonment, ver. 19, 20. God restrained his wrath, else he had put him to death; and that wrath which imprisoned him God made to turn to his praise, in order to which, Providence so disposed, that he should be shut up among the king's prisoners, the state-prisoners. Potiphar, it is likely, chose that prison because it was the worst; for there the irons entered into the soul, Ps. cv. 18, but God designed to pave the way to his enlargement. He was committed to the king's prison, that from thence he might be preferred to the king's person.—Henry.

CHAP. XL. JOSEPH IN PRISON.—Joseph at first was not only closely confined, but severely treated, in the prison. (Ps. cv. 18.) After some time, however, Potiphar's resentment seems to have cooled; and, considering the whole of Joseph's prudent and excellent conduct, he perhaps began to suspect that he had been maliciously accused. He, however, connived at the kindness shown to Joseph, and, being sensible of his abilities, was not unwilling he should be trusted, and prove serviceable in that situation. Being thus employed, he gave the king's butler and baker, as prisoners of rank, all the attendance required.—"On how many little incidents, of which the parties at the time think nothing, do some of the greatest events depend! If they had gone to another prison, Joseph might have died where he was, and no provision been made for the seven years of famine; and Jacob and his family, with millions of others, have perished for want; and so all the promises of their becoming a great nation, and of the Messiah springing from among them, and all nations being blessed in him, would have been frustrated. But he that appoints the end, appoints all the means which shall lead to it."—[Fuller.]—Scott.

THE DREAMS.—We may mark the verifying of Joseph's interpretation of the dreams, on the very day prefixed. The chief butler and baker were both advanced, one to his office, the other to the gallows, and both at the three days' end. Note, Very great changes, both for the better, and for the worse, often happen in a very little time; so sudden are the revolutions of the wheel of nature. The occasion of giving judgment severally upon their case was, the solemnizing of Pharaoh's birth-day, on which, all his servants being obliged by custom to attend him, these two came to be inquired after, and the cause of their commitment looked into. The [illegible] of the birth-days of princes has been an ancient piece of respect done them; and if it be not always [illegible] boam's was, (Hos. vii. 5,) and Herod's, (Mark vi. 21,) it [illegible] we may all profitably take notice [illegible] our birth, [illegible]

Joseph, and said to him, In my dream, behold, [m]a vine was before me.

10 And in the vine were three branches: and it was as though it budded, and her blossoms shot forth; and the clusters thereof brought forth ripe grapes.

11 And Pharaoh's cup was in my hand: and I took the grapes, and pressed them into Pharaoh's cup, and I gave the cup into Pharaoh's hand.

12 And Joseph said unto him, [n]This is the interpretation of it: [o]The three branches are three days.

13 Yet within three days [p]shall Pharaoh [†]lift up thine head, and restore thee unto thy place: and thou shall deliver Pharaoh's cup into his hand, after thy former manner when thou wast his butler.

14 But [‡]think [q]on me when it shall be well with thee, [r]and shew kindness, I pray thee, unto me; and make mention of me unto Pharaoh, and bring me out of this house:

15 For indeed I was [s]stolen away out of the land of [t]the Hebrews:[2] and here also have I [u]done nothing that they should put me into the dungeon.

16 When [x]the chief baker saw that the interpretation was good; he said unto Joseph, I also was in my dream, and, behold, I had three [§]white baskets on my head.

17 And in the uppermost basket there was of all manner of [‖]bake-meats[3] for Pharaoh; and the birds did eat them out of the basket upon my head.

18 And Joseph answered, and said, This is the interpretation thereof: [y]The three baskets are three days.

19 Yet [z]within three days shall Pharaoh [*]lift up thy head from off thee, and shall [a]hang thee on a tree; [b]and the birds shall eat thy flesh from off thee.

20 ¶ And it came to pass the third day, which was Pharaoh's [c]birth-day, that he made a feast unto all his servants: and he [†]lifted up the head of the chief butler, and of the chief baker, among his servants.

21 And he restored the chief butler unto his butlership again; and he [d]gave the cup into Pharaoh's hand:

22 But he [e]hanged the chief baker: as Joseph had interpreted to them.

23 ¶ Yet did not the chief butler remember Joseph, [f]but forgat him.

AND it came to pass at the end of two full years, [a]that Pharaoh dreamed, and, behold, he stood by [b]the river.

2 And, behold, [c]there came up out of the river seven well-favoured kine, and fat-fleshed; and they fed in a meadow.

3 And, behold, seven other kine came up after them out of the river, ill-favoured and lean-fleshed; and stood by the other kine upon the brink of the river.

4 And the ill-favoured and lean-fleshed kine did eat up the seven well-favoured and fat kine. So Pharaoh awoke.

5 And he slept and dreamed the second time: and, behold, seven ears of corn came up upon one stalk, *rank and good.[1]

6 And, behold, seven thin ears and [d]blasted with the east wind [2]sprung up after them.

7 And the seven thin ears devoured the seven rank and full ears: and Pharaoh awoke, and, behold, it was a dream.

8 And it came to pass in the morning, that [e]his spirit was troubled; and he sent and called for all the [f]magicians of Egypt, and all [g]the wise men thereof: and Pharaoh told them his dreams; but [h]there was none that could interpret them unto Pharaoh.

9 ¶ Then spake the chief butler unto Pharaoh, saying, [i]I do remember my faults this day.

10 Pharaoh was wroth with his servants, and put me in ward in the captain of the guard's house, both me, and the chief baker.

11 And we [k]dreamed a dream in one night, I and he: we dreamed each man according to the interpretation of his dream.

12 And there was there with us a young man, an Hebrew, [l]servant to the captain of the guard; and we told him, and he [m]interpreted to us our dreams: to each man according to his dream he did interpret.

13 And it came to pass, as he interpreted to us, so it was: [n]me he restored unto mine office, and him he hanged.

14 ¶ Then Pharaoh [o]sent and called Joseph, [p]and they [†]brought him hastily [3]out of the dungeon; and [q]he shaved himself, and changed his raiment, and came in unto Pharaoh.

15 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, I have dreamed a dream, and there is none that can interpret it: and [r]I have heard say of thee, [‡]that thou canst understand a dream, to interpret it.

16 And Joseph answered Pharaoh, saying, [s]It is not in me: God shall give Pharaoh an answer of peace.

17 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, [t]In my dream, behold, I stood upon the bank of the river.

better than the day of our birth. On Pharaoh's birth-day, he lifted up the head of these two prisoners, that is, arraigned and tried them, (when Naboth was tried he was set on high among the people, 1 Kings xxi. 9,) and "he restored the chief butler," and "hanged the chief baker." If the butler was innocent, and the baker guilty, we must own the equity of Providence in clearing up the innocence of the innocent, and making the sin of the guilty to find him out. If either both were equally innocent, or equally guilty, it is an instance of the arbitrariness of such great princes as pride themselves in that power which Nebuchadnezzar set up for, (Dan. v. 19, "whom he would, he slew, and whom he would, he kept alive,") forgetting that there is a higher than they to whom they are accountable.

INGRATITUDE.—Joseph's expectation from the chief butler was disappointed; he "remembered not Joseph, but forgat him," ver. 23. 1. See here an instance of base ingratitude; Joseph had deserved well at his hands, had ministered to him, sympathized with him, helped him to a favourable interpretation of his dream, had recommended himself to him as an extraordinary person upon all accounts; and yet he forgat him. We must not think it strange if, in this world, we have hatred shown us for our love, and slights for our respects. 2. See how apt those that are themselves at ease are to forget others in distress. Perhaps it is in allusion to this story, that the prophet speaks of those that "drink wine in bowls, and are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph," Amos vi. 6. Let us learn hence to cease from man. Joseph, perhaps, depended too much upon his interest in the chief butler, and promised himself too much from him; he learned by his disappointment to trust in God only. We cannot expect too little from man, nor too much from God.—Henry.

CHAP. XLI. PROVIDENCE.—Joseph must have been a considerable time in prison before he would be so far trusted as to have the two state prisoners under his charge; they were confined for some time, and yet two years more elapsed without any tokens of approaching deliverance! Surely, he would often be ready to say, "Lord, how long?" —But it was the will of God that his servant should receive liberty, and preferment also, not as an obligation conferred on an indigent person; but for the benefit of others, and in the character of a benefactor to the king and people of Egypt.—The scene of Pharaoh's dreams is laid at the river Nile, the annual overflowing of which caused the fertility of Egypt; but the failure of it was followed by famine, at least scarcity. The fat cattle and full ears of corn were apt emblems of plenty; the lean cattle and blighted ears, of scarcity. "The kine" seem to bear an allusion to the grass for the use of cattle, and "the corn" to the corn for the food of man. The circumstances of Pharaoh's dreams were strange and unnatural,—yet they seemed very significant; and they impressed his mind, as a presage of some great events to himself or his kingdom: and God so ordered it, to forward Joseph's advancement, that the magicians and wise men could not so much as make a plausible conjecture at the meaning of them.—Scott.

JOSEPH'S PRESENTATION TO PHARAOH.—The king's business required haste; Joseph is sent for out of the dungeon with all speed; Pharaoh's order discharged him, both from his imprisonment, and from his servitude, and made him a candidate for some of the highest trusts at court. The king can scarcely allow him time, but that decency required it, to shave himself, and to change his raiment, ver. 14. It is done with all possible expedition, and Joseph is brought in perhaps almost as much surprised as Peter was, Acts xii. 9. So suddenly is his captivity brought back, that he is as one that dreams. Ps. cxxvi. 1. Pharaoh, immediately, without inquiring who or whence he was, tells him his business, that he expected he should interpret his dream, ver. 15. To which Joseph makes him a very modest, decent reply, ver. 16, in which, 1. He gives honour to God: "It is not in me, God must give it." Note, Great gifts then appear most graceful and illustrious, when those that have them, use them humbly, and take not the praise of them to themselves, but give it to God. To such God gives more grace. 2. He shows respect to Pharaoh, and hearty good will to him and his government, in supposing that the interpretation would be an answer of peace. Note, Those that consult God's oracles may expect an answer of peace. If Joseph be made the interpreter, hope the best.

THE ROYAL DREAMS.—The two dreams signified the same thing, but the repetition was to denote the certainty, the nearness, and the importance, of the event, ver. 32. Thus has God often showed "the immutability of his counsel by two immutable things," Heb. vi. 17, 18. The covenant is sealed with two sacraments: and in the one of them there are both bread and wine, wherein the dream is one, and yet it is doubled, for the thing is certain. 2. Yet the two dreams had a distinct reference to the two things wherein we most experience plenty and scarcity, namely grass and corn. The plenty and scarcity of grass for the cattle were signified by the fat kine and the lean ones; the plenty and scarcity of herb for the service of man, by the full ears and the thin ones. 3. See what changes the comforts of this life are subject to. After great plenty may come great scarcity; how strong soever we may think our mountain stands, if God speak the word, it will soon be moved. We cannot be sure that "to-morrow shall be as this day," next year as this, and "much more abundant," Isa. lvi. 12. We must learn how to want, as well as how to abound. 4. See the goodness of God, in sending the seven years of plenty before those of famine, that provision might be made accordingly. Thus he "sets the one over against the other," Eccl. vii. 14. Great variety of seasons there have been, and 18 And, behold, there came up out of the river seven kine, [u]fat-fleshed and well-favoured; and they fed in a meadow.

19 And, behold, seven other kine came up after them, poor and very ill-favoured, and lean-fleshed, such as I never saw in all the land of Egypt for badness.

20 And the lean and the ill-favoured kine did eat up the first seven fat kine.

21 And when they had [t]eaten them up, it could not be known that they had eaten them, [t]but they were still ill-favoured, as at the beginning. So I awoke.

22 And I saw in my dream, and, behold, seven ears came up in one stalk, full and good.

23 And, behold, seven ears [t]withered, thin, [s]and blasted with the east wind, sprung up after them.

24 And the thin ears devoured the seven good ears: and I told this unto the magicians; but there was none that could declare it to me.

25 ¶ And Joseph said unto Pharaoh, The dream of Pharaoh is one: [y]God hath shewed Pharaoh what he is about to do.

26 The seven good kine are seven years; and the seven good ears are [z]seven years: [a]the dream is one.

27 And the seven thin and ill-favoured kine that came up after them, are seven years; and the seven empty ears blasted with the east wind, shall be seven years of famine.

28 This is the thing which I have spoken unto Pharaoh: [b]What God is about to do, he sheweth unto Pharaoh.

29 Behold, there come seven years of great plenty, throughout all the land of Egypt.

30 And there shall arise after them [c]seven years of famine, and all the plenty [d]shall be forgotten in the land of Egypt: and the famine shall [e]consume the land.[5]

31 And the plenty shall not be known in the land, by reason of that famine following: for it shall be very *grievous.

32 And for that the dream was [f]doubled unto Pharaoh twice; [g]it is because the thing is [†]established by God, and God will shortly bring it to pass.[6]

33 Now [h]therefore let Pharaoh [i]look out a man discreet and wise, and set him over the land of Egypt.

34 Let Pharaoh do this, and let him appoint [‡]officers over the land, [k]and take up the fifth part of the land of Egypt in the seven plenteous years.

35 And let them [l]gather all the food of those good years that come, and lay up corn under the hand of Pharaoh, and let them keep food in the cities.

36 And that food shall be for store to the land against the seven years of famine, which shall be in the land of Egypt; [m]that the land [§]perish not through the famine.

37 ¶ And [n]the thing was [o]good in the eyes of Pharaoh, and in the eyes of all his servants.

38 And Pharaoh said unto his servants, Can we find such a one as this is, a man [p]in whom the Spirit of God is?

39 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, Forasmuch as [q]God hath shewed thee all this, there is none so discreet and wise as thou art.

40 Thou [r]shalt be over my house, and according unto thy word shall all my people [‖]be ruled: only in the throne will I be greater than thou.

41 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, [s]See, I have set thee over all the land of Egypt.

42 And Pharaoh took off [t]his ring from his hand, and put it upon Joseph's hand, and arrayed him in vesture of *fine linen, and put [u]a gold chain about his neck.[7]

43 And he made him to ride in the second chariot which he had; and they cried before him, [†]Bow the knee: and he made him [x]ruler over all the land of Egypt.

44 And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, I am Pharaoh, and without thee shall no man [y]lift up his hand or foot in all the land of Egypt.

45 And Pharaoh called Joseph's name [‡]Zaphnath-paaneah; and he gave him to wife Asenath the daughter of Poti-pherah [§]priest of On: and Joseph went out over all the land of Egypt.

46 ¶ And Joseph was [z]thirty years old when [a]he stood before Pharaoh king of Egypt. And Joseph went out from the presence of Pharaoh, and went throughout all the land of Egypt.

47 And in the seven plenteous years the earth brought forth by [b]handfuls.

48 And [c]he gathered up all the food of the seven years which were in the land of Egypt, and laid up the food in the cities: the food of the field which was round about every city, laid he up in the same.

49 And Joseph gathered corn [d]as the sand of the sea, very much, until he left numbering: for it was without number.

50 ¶ And [e]unto Joseph were born two sons before the years of famine came: which [f]Asenath, the daughter of Poti-pherah [‖]priest of On, bare unto him.

51 And Joseph [g]called the name of the first-born *Manasseh; for God, said he, hath made me forget all my toil, and all my father's house.

52 And the name of the second [h]called he [†]Ephraim: for God hath caused me to be fruitful in [‖]the land of my affliction.

53 ¶ And [k]the seven years of plenteous-

[f] It is observed by Pliny (lib. v. Nat. Hist. cap. 9), that when Nile rose only twelve cubits, a famine followed; when thirteen, great scarcity; when fourteen, they had a good year; when fifteen, a very good; and if it rose sixteen, it made delicias, luxuriant plenty; and the greatest increase they ever knew, was to eighteen cubits. Now, that this river should overflow so largely for seven years together, as to make vast plenty, and then for the next seven years not to overflow its banks at all, or very little, and so make a sore and long famine, could be ascribed to nothing but an extraordinary hand of God, it being quite out of the course of nature.—PATRICK.

the produce of the earth is sometimes more and sometimes less; yet, take one time with another, what was miraculous concerning the manna, is ordinarily verified in the common course of Providence. 5. See the perishing nature of our worldly enjoyments. The great increase of the years of plenty was quite lost and swallowed up in the years of famine; and the overplus of it, which seemed very much, yet did but just serve to keep men alive, ver. 29—31.

JOSEPH'S COUNSEL.—The good advice that Joseph gave to Pharaoh was, 1. That in the years of plenty he should lay up for the years of famine; buy up corn when it was cheap, that he might both enrich himself, and supply the country, when it would be dear and scarce. Note, 1. Fair warning should always be followed with good counsel. Therefore the prudent man foresees the evil that he may hide himself. 2. Because that which is every body's work, commonly proves nobody's work; he advises Pharaoh to appoint officers who should make it their business, and to pitch upon some one person to preside in the affair, ver. 33. Probably, if Joseph had not advised this, it had not been done; Pharaoh's counsellors could no more improve the dream, than his magicians interpret it; therefore, it is said of him, (Ps. cv. 22,) that he "taught the senators wisdom."

JOSEPH'S PROMOTION.—Pharaoh gave him an honourable testimony; he is "a man in whom the Spirit of God is;" and that puts a great excellency upon any man; such men ought to be valued, ver. 38. He is a nonsuch for prudence, "There is none so discreet and wise as thou art," ver. 39. 2. He puts him into an honourable office; not only employed him to buy up corn, but made him prime-minister of state, comptroller of the household, "Thou shalt be over my house," Chief Justice of the kingdom, "according to thy word shall all my people be ruled," or "armed," as some read it, and then it bespeaks him General of the forces. His commission was very ample, "I have set thee over all the land of Egypt," ver. 41; "without thee shall no man lift up his hand or foot," ver 44; all the affairs of the kingdom must pass through his hand. Nay, ver. 40, "Only in the throne will I be greater than thou." 3. He put upon him all the marks of honour imaginable, to recommend him to the esteem and respect of the people, as the king's favourite, and one whom he delighted to honour. (1.) He gave him his own ring as a ratification of his commission, and in token of peculiar favour; or it was like delivering him the great seal. (2.) He put fine clothes upon him, instead of his prison garments. For they that are in kings' palaces, must wear soft clothing; he [illegible] the morning, was dragging his fetters at him, before night, was adorned with a [illegible] chain of gold. (3.) He made him "ride in the second chariot" next his own, and ordered [illegible] to him: "Bow the knee, [illegible]." (4.) He gave him a [illegible] his authority over him, and yet such a name as bespoke the value he had for him, "Zaphnath-paaneah—a revealer of secrets." 5. He married him honourably to a prince's daughter. Where God had been liberal in giving wisdom and other merits, Pharaoh was not sparing in conferring honours.—Henry.

JOSEPH'S HOUSEHOLD.—Joseph's family was increased by the birth of two sons, Manasseh and Ephraim, ver. 50—52. In the names he gave them, he owned the Divine Providence giving this happy turn to his affairs. 1. He was made to "forget his misery," Job xi. 16. We should bear our afflictions when they are present, as those that know not but Providence may so outweigh them by after-comforts, as that we may even forget them when they are past. But could he be so unnatural as to "forget all his father's house?" He means the unkindness he received from his brethren, or perhaps the wealth and honour he expected from his father, with the birthright. The robes which he now wore, made him forget the coat of divers colours which he wore in his father's house. 2. He was made "fruitful in the land of his affliction;" it had been the land of his affliction, and in some sense it was still so, for it was not Canaan, the land of promise. His distance from his father was still his affliction. Note, Light is sometimes sown for the righteous in a barren and unlikely soil; and yet if God sow it, and water it, it will come up again. The afflictions of the saints promote their fruitfulness. Ephraim signifies Fruitfulness, and Manasseh, Forgetfulness, for these two often go together; when Jeshurun waxed fat, he "forgat God his Maker."—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATION.—Important trusts, however unexceptionably obtained and managed, are an encumbrance rather than an advantage to the possessor; who might be more comfortable, though not so useful, in a more obscure situation. Indeed, all worldly prosperity, like the years of plenty, is fleeting away, and will soon be forgotten and swallowed up, in the afflictions which are coming upon the wicked. In Joseph, however, we still see a bright example of fidelity, activity, and equity; and an instance of the extensive good, which, in some circumstances, may be done by one man, when called forth, qualified, and prospered by the Lord.—The knowledge of future temporal events might in some instances be useful, yet would seldom be pleasant; but the knowledge of the future state and eternal world will be both useful and pleasant; if we do but "labour for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of man shall give unto us; for him hath God the Father sealed." He is the great [illegible]-type of Joseph, [illegible] ascended, and exalted on the throne of glory, all power is vested in him as [illegible] is the Revealer of secrets, and the [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] ness, that was in the land of Egypt, were ended.

54 And [l]the seven years of dearth began to come, [m]according as Joseph had said: [n]and the dearth was in all lands; but in all the land of Egypt there was bread.

55 And when all the land of Egypt was [o]famished, the people cried to Pharaoh for bread: and Pharaoh said unto all the Egyptians, [p]Go unto Joseph;[8] what he saith to you, do.

56 And the famine was over all [q]the face of the earth: and Joseph opened all the [‡]storehouses, and [r]sold unto the Egyptians; and the famine waxed sore in the land of Egypt.

57 And [s]all countries came into Egypt to Joseph for to buy corn; because that the famine was so sore [t]in all lands.

CHAP. XLII.

Jacob sendeth his ten sons to buy corn in Egypt, 1; they are imprisoned by Joseph for spies, 6; their remorse, 21.

NOW [a]when Jacob [b]saw that there was corn in Egypt,[1] Jacob said unto his sons, [c]Why do ye look one upon another?

2 And he said, Behold, I have heard that there is corn in Egypt: [d]get you down thither, and buy for us from thence; [e]that we may live, and not die.

3 ¶ And Joseph's [f]ten brethren went down to buy corn in Egypt.

4 But [g]Benjamin, Joseph's brother, Jacob sent not with his brethren; for he said, [h]Lest peradventure mischief befall him.

5 And the sons of Israel came to buy corn among those that came: [i]for the famine was in the land of Canaan.

6 ¶ And Joseph was the [k]governor over the land, [l]and he it was that sold to all the people of the land: and Joseph's brethren came, and [m]bowed down themselves before him, with their faces to the earth.

7 And Joseph saw his brethren, and he knew them, but made himself strange unto them, and spake [*]roughly unto them; and he said unto them, Whence come ye? And they said, From the land of Canaan to buy food.

8 And Joseph knew his brethren, [n]but they knew not him.

9 And Joseph [o]remembered the dreams which he dreamed of them, and said unto them, [p]Ye are spies;[2] to see the [q]nakedness of the land ye are come.

10 And they said unto him, Nay, [r]my lord, but to buy food are thy servants come.

11 We are all one man's sons: we are [s]true men, thy servants are no spies.

12 And he said unto them, Nay, but to see the nakedness of the land ye are come.

14 And Joseph said unto them, [x]That is it that I spake unto you, saying, Ye are spies.

15 Hereby ye shall be proved: [y]by the life of Pharaoh[3] ye shall not go forth hence, [z]except your youngest brother come hither.

16 Send one of you, and let him fetch your brother, and ye shall be [†]kept in prison, [*]that your words may be proved, whether there be any truth in you: or else by the life of Pharaoh surely ye are spies.

17 And he [‡]put them altogether into [b]ward, three days.

18 And Joseph said unto them the third day, This do, and live: for [c 5]I fear God.

19 If ye be true men, let one of your brethren be bound in [d]the house of your prison: go ye, [e]carry corn for the famine of your houses.

20 But [f]bring your youngest brother unto me: so shall your words be verified, and ye shall not die. [g]And they did so.

21 ¶ And [h]they said one to another, We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that [i]we saw the anguish of his soul, when he besought us; and we would not hear: therefore is [k]this distress come upon us.

22 And Reuben answered them, saying, [l]Spake I not unto you, saying, Do not sin against the child; and ye would not hear? therefore, behold, also [m]his blood is required.[5]

23 And they knew not that Joseph understood them; for [§]he spake unto them by an interpreter.

24 And he turned himself about from them, and [n]wept; and returned to them again, and communed with them, and took from them [o]Simeon, and bound him before their eyes.

25 ¶ Then Joseph [p]commanded to fill their sacks with corn, and to restore every man's money into his sack, and [q]to give them provision for the way: [r]and thus did he unto them.

26 And they laded their asses with the corn, and departed thence.

27 And as one of them opened his sack to give his ass provender in [s]the inn, he espied his money: for, behold, it was in his sack's mouth.

28 And he said unto his brethren, My money is restored; and, lo, it is even in my sack: and [t]their heart [u]failed them, and they were afraid, saying one to another, [u]What is this that God hath done unto us?

29 ¶ And they came unto Jacob their father, unto the land of Canaan, and told him all that befell unto them, saying, hear ye him;" "Go to Jesus, and, what he bids you, do." Attending to this voice, and applying to him, he will open his treasures, and satisfy the hungry soul, of every age and nation, yea, "without money and without price." But, they who slight this provision must starve; and they who bow not the knee before him, and "will not that he should reign over them," will be inevitably destroyed as enemies to him and his cause.—Scott.

CHAP. XLII. JOSEPH AND HIS BRETHREN.—He showed himself very rigorous and harsh with them; the very manner of his speaking, considering the post he was in, was enough to frighten them; for "he spake roughly to them," ver. 7. He charged them with bad designs against the government, ver. 9, treated them as dangerous persons, "Ye are spies," protesting "by the life of Pharaoh" that they were so, ver. 16. Some make that an oath, others make it no more than a vehement asseveration, like that, "As thy soul liveth;" however, it was more than yea, yea, and nay, nay, and therefore came of evil. Note, bad words are soon learned by converse with those that use them, but not so soon unlearned. Joseph, by being much at court, got the courtier's oath, "By the life of Pharaoh;" perhaps designing hereby to confirm his brethren in their belief that he was an Egyptian, and not an Israelite; they knew this was not the language of a son of Abraham; when Peter would prove himself no disciple of Christ, he cursed and swore. Now, why was Joseph thus hard upon his brethren? We may be sure it was not from a spirit of revenge, that he might trample upon them now, who had formerly trampled upon him; he was not a man of that temper. But, (1.) It was to enrich his own dreams, and complete the accomplishment of them. (2.) It was to bring them to repentance. (3.) It was to get out of them an account of the state of their family, which he longed to know; they would have discovered him, if he had asked as a friend, therefore he asks as a judge. Not seeing his brother Benjamin with them, perhaps he began to suspect that they had made away with him too, and therefore gives them occasion to speak of their father and brother. Note, God in his providence sometimes seems harsh with those he loves, and speaks roughly to those whom yet he has great mercy in [illegible].—Henry.

[illegible] OR JOSEPH'S CONDUCT.—It is evident that Joseph did not behave thus from [illegible] in the whole transaction he exceedingly denied himself, and put a force on [illegible] affections. No doubt he was unwilling to augment his father's grief, and [illegible] rejoiced to set his heart at ease by an immediate message; yet, his [illegible] had a contrary tendency. It is most probable that the whole [illegible] advancement, to Jacob's descent into Egypt, was contrived by Joseph, in order to accomplish his purposes respecting Jacob and his posterity. It would not indeed have been proper for Joseph immediately to have received his brethren into favour till it appeared that they were sensible of their guilt, and showed some symptoms of remorse. Now, by being concealed, he had a fair opportunity of discovering the real state of their mind, from time to time; and by virtue of his authority, he was able not only to make strict trial of them, but to employ means exactly suited to produce that state of mind which he wished to see; by exciting a beneficial remorse of conscience, and repressing their pride and stoutness of heart. By his own experience he knew the good effects of severe and long-continued troubles, and was willing to try the same remedy upon them. At the same time he seems to have been very solicitous to obtain information concerning the state of the family; especially as he did not see Benjamin among his other brethren.

CONSCIENCE.—Joseph's brethren at length felt keen remorse, though perhaps insensible before, or at least not deeply convinced of their heinous crime: and considering how the fear of God influenced an Egyptian, as they supposed, their unrelenting malice to their brother recurred to their remembrance: and they were unable any longer to conceal their convictions, but began to speak their thoughts one to another on the subject. The anguish of Joseph, and his earnest and pathetic entreaties for mercy, when his brethren were about to sell him for a slave, or to kill him, are not mentioned in the narrative, but are here introduced with great effect; and they were ready to conclude, that God was about to take vengeance upon them for that cruelty. Reuben had remonstrated at the time with his brethren, but they would not hear, and now he reproached them, and seemed to denounce their doom. Thus will conscience at length reproach and torture those who at present neglect its warnings.—Scott.

THE REPORT TO JACOB.—We may notice the report which Jacob's sons made to their father, of the great distress they had been in in Egypt; how they had been suspected, and threatened, and obliged to leave Simeon a prisoner there, till they should bring Benjamin with them thither. Who would have thought of this when they left home? When we go abroad, we should consider how many sad accidents, that we little think of may befall us before we return home. "We know not what a day may bring forth," we ought therefore to be always ready for the worst. 1. The deep impression this made upon the good man. The very bundles of money which Joseph returned, in kindness to his father, frightened him, ver. 35; for he concluded it was done with some mischievous design, or perhaps suspected his own sons to have committed some offence, and so to have run themselves into a præmunire—a penalty; which is intimated in what he says, ver. 36, "Me have ye bereaved." He seems to lay the fault upon them; knowing their characters, he [illegible] had provoked the Egyptians, and perhaps forcibly, or 8 And Judah said unto Israel his father, Send the lad[2] with me, and we will arise and go; [f]that we may live, and not die, both we, and thou, and [g]also our little ones.

9 I [h]will be surety for him; [i]of my hand shalt thou require him: if I bring him not unto thee, and set him before thee, then let me bear the blame for ever.

10 For except we had [k]lingered, surely now we had returned [l]this second time.

11 And their father Israel said unto them, [l]If it must be so now, do this; take of the best fruits in the land in your vessels, and [m]carry down the man a present, [n]a little balm, and a little honey, [o]spices, and myrrh, nuts, and almonds.

12 And take [p]double money[3] in your hand: and the money that was brought again in the [q]mouth of your sacks, carry it again in your hand; peradventure it was an oversight.

13 Take also your brother, and arise, go again unto the man.

14 And [r]God Almighty give you mercy before the man, that he may send away your other brother, and Benjamin. *If I be bereaved of my children, I am bereaved.

15 ¶ And the men took that present, and they took double money in their hand, and Benjamin: and rose up, and went down to Egypt, and stood before Joseph.

16 And when Joseph saw Benjamin with them, he said to [s]the ruler of his house, Bring these men home, and [†]slay, and make ready:[4] for these men shall [‡]dine with me at noon.

17 And the man did as Joseph bade: and the man brought the men into Joseph's house.

18 And [t]the men were afraid, because they were brought into Joseph's house, and they said, Because of the money that was returned in our sacks at the first time, are we brought in; that he may [§]seek occasion against us, and fall upon us, and take us for bondmen, and our asses.

19 And they came near to the steward of Joseph's house, and they communed with him at the door of the house; fraduleutly, brought home their money. Jacob is here much out of temper, 2. He has very melancholy apprehensions concerning the present state of his family; "Joseph is not, and Simeon is not;" whereas Joseph was in honour, and Simeon in the way to it. Note, We often perplex ourselves with our own mistakes, even in matters of fact. True griefs may arise from false intelligence and suppositions, 2 Sam. xiii. 31. Jacob gives up Joseph for gone, and Simeon and Benjamin as being in danger; and concludes, "All these things are against me." It proved otherwise, that all these were for him, were working together for his good, and the good of his family; yet here he thinks them all against him. Note, Through our ignorance or mistake, and the weakness of our faith, we often apprehend that to be against us, which is really for us.—Henry.

20 And said, O sir, [‖]we came indeed down at the first time to buy food.

CHAP. XLIII. Jacob's Policy.—Jacob's prudence and justice appeared in three things. 1. He sent back the money which they had found in the sacks' mouths, with this discreet construction of it, "Peradventure it was an oversight." Note, Honesty obliges us to make restitution, not only of that which comes to us by our own fault, but of that which comes to us by the mistakes of others. 2. He sent double money, as much again as they took the time before, upon the supposition that the price of corn might be risen; or that, if it should be insisted upon, they might pay a ransom for Simeon, or his prison fees; or, to show a generous spirit, that they might be the more likely to find generous treatment with "the man, the lord of the land." 3. He sent a present of such things as the land afforded, and as were scarce in Egypt, "balm and honey," &c., ver. 11, the commodities that Canaan exported, chap. xxxvii. 25. Note, (1.) Providence dispenses its gifts variously. Some countries produce one commodity, others another, that commerce may be preserved. (2.) Honey and spice will never make up the want of bread-corn. The famine was sore in Canaan, and yet they had balm and myrrh, &c. We may live well enough upon plain food without dainties, but we cannot live upon dainties without plain food.

Joseph's Brethren—The Second Visit.—Jacob's sons, having got leave to take Benjamin with them, were observant of the orders their father had given them, and went down the second time into Egypt to buy corn. Now here we have an account of what passed between them and Joseph's steward, who, some conjecture, was in the secret, and knew them to be Joseph's brethren, and helped to humour the thing; I rather think not, because no man must be present when Joseph afterward made himself known to them, chap. xlv. 1. 1. Joseph's steward has orders from his master (who was busy selling corn, and receiving money) to take them to his house, and make ready for their entertainment. 2. Even this frightened them; ver. 18; "They were afraid, because they were brought into Joseph's house." The just challenges of their own consciences, and Joseph's violent suspicions of them, forbade them to expect any favour, and suggested to them, that this was done with a bad design upon them. Note, Those that are guilty and timorous are apt to make the worst of every thing. Now they thought they should be reckoned with about the money in the sacks' mouths, and should be charged as cheats, and men not fit to be dealt with, who had taken advantage of the hurry of the market to carry off their corn unpaid for. They therefore laid the case before the steward, that he, being apprised of it, might stand between them and danger. 3. The steward encouraged them; ver. 23, "Peace be to you, fear not;" though he knew not what his master drove at, yet he was aware these were men whom he meant no harm to, while he thus amused them; and therefore he directs them to look at the Divine Providence in the return of their money; "Your God, and the God of your father, has given you treasure in your sacks."

Joseph's Sympathies.—It was great kindness that Joseph showed to them, while they little thought it was a brotherly kindness. There is, 1. His kind inquiry concerning Jacob, "Is he yet alive?" a very fit question to be asked concerning any, especially concerning old people; for we are dying daily; it is strange that we are yet alive. Jacob had said, many years before, "I will go to the grave to my son;" but "he is yet alive:" we must not die when we will. 2. The kind notice he took of Benjamin, his own brother. (1.) He put up a prayer for him, ver. 29, "God be gracious unto thee, my son." Joseph's favour, though he was "the lord of the land," would do him little good, unless God were gracious to him. Many seek the ruler's favour, but he directs him to seek the favour of the Ruler of rulers. (2.) He shed some tears for him, ver. 30. Note, Tears of tenderness and affection are no disparagement at all, even to great and wise men. Gracious weepers should not proclaim their tears; "My soul shall weep in secret," says the prophet, Jer. xiii. 17. "Peter went out and wept bitterly;" see Matt. xxvi. 75. 3. His kind entertainment of them all; when his weeping had subsided, so that he could refrain himself, he sat down to dinner with them, treated them nobly, and yet contrived every thing to amuse them. (1.) He ordered three tables to be spread, one for his brethren, another for the Egyptians that dined with him, (for so different were their customs, that they did not care to eat together,) another for himself, who durst not own himself a Hebrew, and yet would not sit with the Egyptians.—Henry.

Benjamin's Mess.—The five times larger mess was a token of respect customary in those days, which should not be judged of by modern manners. Joseph tried whether his brethren would envy Benjamin this distinction, as they had envied him his coat of many colours.—The words rendered, were merry, sometimes mean, were intoxicated:

in our hands to buy food: we cannot tell who put our money in our sacks.

23 And he said, [y] [5]Peace be to you, fear not: your God, and the God of your father, hath given you treasure in your sacks: *I had your money. [z] And he brought Simeon out unto them.

24 And the man brought the men into Joseph's house, and [a] gave them water, and they washed their feet, and he gave their asses provender.

25 And [b] they made ready the present against Joseph came at noon: for they heard that they should eat bread there.

26 ¶ And when Joseph came home, they brought him the present which was in their hand into the house, and [c] bowed themselves to him to the earth.

27 And he asked them of †their welfare, and said, ‡Is your father well, [d] the old man of whom ye spake? Is he yet alive?

28 And they answered, Thy servant our father is in good health, he is yet alive: [e] And they bowed down their heads, and [f] made obeisance.

29 And he lifted up his eyes, and saw his brother Benjamin, his [g] mother's son, and said, Is this your younger brother, [h] of whom ye spake unto me? And he said, God be gracious unto thee, [i] my son.

30 And Joseph made haste; for [k] his bowels did yearn upon his brother: and he sought where to weep; and he entered into his chamber, and [l] wept there.

31 And he washed his face, and went out, and [m] refrained himself, and said, Set on bread.

32 And they set on for him by himself, and for them by themselves, and for the Egyptians, which did eat with him, by themselves: because the Egyptians might not eat bread with the Hebrews; for that is [n] an abomination[6] unto the Egyptians.

33 And they [o] sat before him, the first-born according to his birthright, and the youngest according to his youth: and the men marvelled one at another.

34 And he took and sent [p] messes unto them from before him. But Benjamin's mess [q] was five times so much as any of theirs. And they drank, and [s] were merry with him.

CHAP. XLIV.

Joseph's policy to stay his brethren.

AND he commanded *the steward of his house, saying, [a] Fill the men's sacks with food, as much as they can carry, and put every man's money in his [1] sack's mouth.

2 And put my [b] cup, the silver cup, in the sack's mouth of the youngest, and his corn money: and he did according to the word that Joseph had spoken.

3 As soon as the morning was light, the men were sent away, they and their asses.

4 And when they were gone out of the city, and not yet far off, Joseph said unto his steward, Up, follow after the men; and when thou dost overtake them, say unto them, [c] Wherefore have ye rewarded evil for good?[2]

5 Is not this it in which my lord drinketh, and whereby indeed he †divineth?[3] Ye have done evil in so doing.

6 ¶ And he overtook them, and he spake unto them these same words.

7 And they said unto him, [d] Wherefore saith my lord these words? God forbid that thy servants should do according to this thing.

8 Behold, [e] the money, which we found in our sacks' mouths, we brought again unto thee out of the land of Canaan: [f] how then should we steal out of thy lord's house silver or gold?

9 With whomsoever of thy servants it be found, [g] both let him die, [h] and we also will be my lord's bondmen.

10 And he said, Now also let it be according unto your words: [i] he with whom it is found shall be my servant; and ye shall be blameless.

11 Then they speedily took down every man his sack to the ground, and opened every man his sack.

12 And he searched, and [k] began at the eldest, and left at the youngest: [l] and the cup was found in Benjamin's sack.

13 Then they [m] rent their clothes, and laded every man his ass, and returned to the city.

14 ¶ And Judah and his brethren came to Joseph's house, (for [n] he was yet there,) and they [o] fell before him on the ground.

15 And Joseph said unto them, [p] What deed is this that ye have done? [q] wot ye not that such a man as I can certainly ‡divine?

16 And [r] Judah said, [s] What shall we say unto my lord? what shall we speak? or how shall we clear ourselves? [t] God hath found out the iniquity of thy servants:[4] behold, we are my lord's servants, both we, and he also with whom the cup is found.

17 And he said, [u] God forbid that I should do so: but the man in whose hand the cup is found, [x] he shall be my servant; and as for you, get you up [y] in peace unto your father.

18 ¶ Then Judah [5] came near unto him, and said, O my lord, [z] let thy servant, I pray thee, speak a word in my lord's ears, and let

[1] There are two sorts of sacks noticed in the history of Joseph, which ought not to be confounded: one for the corn, the other for the baggage, &c. Through all Asia, as far as to the Indies, every thing is carried upon beasts of burden, in sacks of wool, covered in the middle with leather, down to the bottom, the better to resist water. They inclose in them their things, done up in large parcels. Of this kind of sacks we are to understand what is said here, and through this history; and not of the sacks in which they carried their corn.—Chardin.

This was a crime which would have been highly offensive at any time, but pre-eminently so after the generous treatment they had now received.—Bush.

but they seem to be properly translated; for we cannot suppose, either, that in such circumstances they would drink to excess, or that Joseph would have countenanced them in so doing.—Scott.

CHAP. XLIV. The Pursuit.—It may be supposed, that this silver cup had been used at the entertainment, (xliii. 32—34.)—Joseph seems to have been desirous of ascertaining beyond doubt, how his brethren stood affected to Benjamin, Jacob's present favourite, and to their father on his account. Had they envied and hated Benjamin, (the other son of Rachel, Leah's rival,) as they had done him; and, had they been influenced by the same unfeeling indignation against Jacob as they were formerly, they would on this occasion have discovered it: for when the cup was found upon Benjamin, they would have had a plausible pretence for leaving him to be a slave, and returning home without him. In this case Joseph no doubt would have acted very differently than he did, when the event proved them to be so affectionately disposed both towards Benjamin and their father. At the same time this trial was exceedingly calculated to increase their humiliation. The abruptness of this unexpected address, ver. 4—6, was well suited to surprise and confuse, and to favour the design. Joseph probably meant that by "divination" he had discovered who had stolen his cup, ver. 15; which he could not have done, had he divined by means of the cup: the words might be rendered, "that about which he hath used divination." It is not, however, certain that divination is meant; as the original word is used sometimes for accurate investigation or diligent observation. (Chap. xxx. 27; 1 Kings xx. 33, Heb.) Probably, Joseph expected that his brethren, conscious of their innocence, would make use of such language as is recorded in verse 9; which favoured his design of proving how they stood affected towards Benjamin. Their money had before been put into their sacks, they knew not how, and they might have suspected somewhat similar on this occasion: their confidence therefore was very imprudent.—Scott.

Judah's Pleading.—Judah addressed himself to Joseph with a great deal of respect and deference; calls him his "lord," himself and his brethren his "servants," begs his patient hearing, ascribes sovereign authority to him; "'Thou art even as Pharaoh,' whose favour we desire, and whose wrath we dread, as we do Pharaoh's." Religion does not destroy good manners, and it is prudence to speak obligingly to those at whose mercy we lie: titles of honour, to those that are entitled to them, are not flattering titles. He represented Benjamin as one well worthy of his compassionate consideration; ver. 20; he was "a little one," compared with the rest of them; the youngest, not acquainted with the world, nor ever inured to hardship, having always been brought up tenderly with his father, it made the case the more pitiable, that he alone was left of his mother, and his brother was dead, namely, Joseph; little did Judah think what a tender point he touched upon now. Judah knew that Joseph was sold, and therefore had reason enough to think that he was alive; however, he could not be sure that he was dead, but they had made their father believe he was dead; and now they had told that lie so long, that they had forgotten the truth, and begun to believe the lie themselves. He urged it very closely, that Joseph had himself constrained them to bring Benjamin with them, had expressed a desire to see him, ver. 21, and had forbidden them his presence, unless they brought Benjamin with them, ver. 23,26, all which intimated that he designed him some kindness, and must he be brought with so much difficulty to the preferment of a perpetual slavery. Was he not brought to Egypt in obedience, purely in obedience, to the command of Joseph; and would he not show him some mercy? Some observe, that Jacob's sons, in reasoning with their father, had said, "We will not go down, unless Benjamin go with us," chap. xliii. 5, but that, when Judah comes here to relate the story, he expresses it more decently, "'We cannot go down,' with any expectation to speed well." Indecent words, spoken in haste to our superiors, should be recalled and amended. The great argument he insists upon was, the insupportable grief it would be to his aged father, if Benjamin should be left behind in servitude; "His father loved him," ver. 20. This they had pleaded against Joseph's insisting on his coming down, ver. 22, "'If he should leave his father, his father would die;' much more if now he be left behind, never more to return to him." This the old man, of whom they spake, had pleaded against his going down, ver. 29, "If mischief befall him, ye shall bring down my gray hairs," that crown of glory, "with sorrow to the grave." This, therefore, Judah presses with a great deal of earnestness, "His life is bound up in the lad's life."—Henry.

Lessons.—In many cases, undissembled narrations form the most conclusive and affecting arguments. Such addresses to the tender passions, as are grounded upon evident reason, truth, and fact, and carry with them internal testimony of disinterestedness, generosity, and relative affection, are almost irresistible: and the glow of filial affection, through manly sense and fortitude, has a peculiar beauty and energy.—How careful should children be not to grieve their parents, lest by imbittering their infirm age, they should shorten their days, and be indicted now at the bar of their own consciences, or hereafter at the judgment-seat of God, for the horrible crime of parricide; which many are guilty of, who never suspect themselves, or are suspected by others!—True penitents will show, that a total revolution has taken place in their principles and practice: were it possible, they would undo their former misconduct, and therefore they will endeavour to make amends for it, and prevent any further ill effects, though in the not thine [a]anger burn against thy servant: for thou art even [b]as Pharaoh.

19 My lord [c]asked his servants, saying, Have ye a father or a brother?

20 And we said unto my lord, [d]We have a father, an old man, and [d]a child of his old age, a little one: [e]and his brother is dead, and [f]he alone is left of his mother, and his father loveth him.

21 And thou saidst unto thy servants, [g]Bring him down unto me, that I may set mine eyes upon him.

22 And we said unto my lord, The lad cannot leave his father; for if he should leave his father, [h]his father would die.

23 And thou saidst unto thy servants, [i]Except your youngest brother come down with you, ye shall see my face no more.

24 And it came to pass, when we came up unto thy servant my father, [k]we told him the words of my lord.

25 And our father said, [l]Go again, and buy us a little food.

26 And we said, [m]We cannot go down: if our youngest brother be with us, then will we go down; for we may not see the man's face, except our youngest brother be with us.

27 And thy servant my father said unto us, Ye know that [n]my wife bare me two sons:

28 And [o]the one went out from me, [r]and I said, [p]Surely he is torn in pieces; and I saw him not since.

29 And if [q]ye take this also from me, and mischief befall him, ye shall bring down my gray hairs with sorrow to the grave.

30 Now therefore [r]when I come to thy servant my father, and the lad be not with us; (seeing that [s]his life is bound up in the lad's life:)

31 It shall come to pass, [t]when he seeth that the lad is not with us, that he will die: and thy servants [u]shall bring down the gray hairs of thy servant our father with sorrow to the grave.

32 For thy servant became [x]surety for the lad unto my father, saying, If I bring him not unto thee, then I shall bear the blame to my father for ever.

33 Now therefore, [y]I pray thee, let thy servant abide, instead of the lad, a bondman to my lord; [s]and let the lad go up with his brethren.

34 For how shall I go up to my father, and the lad be not with me? [z]lest peradventure I see the evil that shall [*]come on my father.

6 For these [h]two years hath the famine been in the land; and yet there are five years, in the which there shall neither be [i]earing nor harvest.

7 And God sent me before you, [§]to preserve you a posterity in the earth, and [k]to save your lives by a great deliverance.

8 So now [l]it was not you that sent me hither, but God: and he hath made me a [m]father to Pharaoh,[2] and lord of all his house, and a ruler throughout all the land of Egypt.

9 Haste ye, and go up to my father, and say unto him, [n]Thus saith thy son Joseph, God hath made me lord of all Egypt; [o]come down unto me, tarry not.

10 And thou shalt dwell [p]in the land of Goshen, [q]and thou shalt be near unto me, thou, and thy children, and thy children's children, and thy flocks, and thy herds, and all that thou hast.

11 And there [r]will I nourish thee (for yet there are five years of famine;) lest thou, and thy household, and all that thou hast, come to poverty.

12 And, behold, [s]your eyes see, and the eyes of my brother Benjamin, that it is my mouth that speaketh unto you.

13 And ye shall tell my father of all [t]my glory in Egypt, and of all that ye have seen: and ye shall haste, and [u]bring down my father hither.

14 ¶ And he [x]fell upon his brother[3] Benjamin's neck, and wept; and Benjamin wept upon his neck.

15 Moreover [y]he kissed all his brethren, and wept upon them: and after that his brethren talked with him.

16 ¶ And the fame thereof was heard in Pharaoh's house, saying, Joseph's brethren are come: and [‖]it pleased Pharaoh well, and his servants.

most self-denying manner: and this will evidence that their sins are pardoned, and prepare the way for their receiving the comfort of forgiveness.—Scott.

CHAP. XLV. JOSEPH'S DISCLOSURE OF HIMSELF.—The name of Joseph might have led his brethren to a recollection of his features and voice; yet, the mention of their having sold him was necessary, (though painful,) both to remove all doubts of his being their brother, and also to introduce the kind attempt which he intended to make, to obviate their fears, and to inspire confidence and comfort. Perhaps he called them near to him, lest the Egyptians should overhear this part of the conversation. Every passion has its proper boundaries, which it ought not to exceed. The skilful physician aims to produce an effect; yet, having produced it, he often sees occasion to check, and even sometimes to counteract, his first intention, lest it prove excessive, and expose the patient to the opposite danger. Joseph had designed to humble and to reprove his brethren, to bring their sin to remembrance, to fill them with remorse for it, and to evince that they really repented, and were not disposed to repeat the crime. But he now perceived, from their confusion and dismay, that they were in danger of being overwhelmed by over much sorrow, and of sinking under despondency, and therefore he endeavoured to comfort and encourage them. Not only would the authority of one whom they had so grossly injured affright them, but the excellency of his character, the reputation which he had acquired, and the accomplishment of those dreams, as divine predictions, which they had contemptuously opposed, would make their crime appear more horrid than before; and all together might induce them to conclude, that they had sinned beyond the reach of forgiveness. Though the merciful purpose of God, in sending him into Egypt, in no degree excused their sin, and therefore ought not to prevent their humiliation and repentance; yet, it might very properly abate their anguish of spirit, and encourage their hope of pardon from so gracious a God; and it might assure them of Joseph's forgiveness, who clearly saw the wisdom, and richly experienced the goodness of God in that event.—Scott.

PHARAOH'S BENEVOLENCE.—We may notice the kindness of Pharaoh to Joseph, and to his relations for his sake; he bade his brethren welcome, ver. 16, though it was a time of scarcity, and they were likely to be a charge to him. Nay, because it pleased Pharaoh it pleased his servants too, at least they pretended to be pleased because Pharaoh was. He engaged Joseph to send for his father down to Egypt, and promised to furnish them with all conveniences, both for his removal hither and his settlement there. If "the good of" all "the land of Egypt" (as it was now better stocked than any other land, thanks to Joseph under God) would suffice him, he was welcome to it all, it was all his own, even "the fat of the land," ver. 18, so that they need not "regard their stuff," ver. 20. What they had in Canaan he reckoned but stuff, in comparison with what he had for them in Egypt; and therefore if they should leave some of that behind them, let them not be discontented; Egypt would afford them enough to make up the losses of their remove.

GOOD FOR EVIL.—Joseph was respectful to his father and brethren in duty, because they were his near relations, though his brethren had been his enemies, and his father long a stranger. 1. He furnished them for necessity, ver. 21. He gave them waggons and provisions for the way, both going and coming; for we never find that Jacob was very rich, and at this time, when the famine prevailed, we may suppose he was rather poor. 2. He furnished them for ornament and delight. To his brethren he gave two suits a piece of good clothes, to Benjamin five suits, and money besides in his pocket, ver. 22. To his father he sent a very handsome present of the varieties of Egypt, ver. 23. 3. He dismissed them with a seasonable caution, ver. 24, "See that ye fall not out by the way." He knew they were but too apt to be quarrelsome; and what had lately passed, which revived the remembrance of what they had done formerly against their brother, might give them occasion to quarrel. Joseph had observed them contend about it, chap. xlii. 22. To one they would say, "It was you that first upbraided him with his dreams;" to another, "It was you that said, Let us kill him;" to another, "It was you that stript him of his fine coat;" to another, "It was you that threw him into the pit," &c. Now, Joseph having forgiven them all, lays this obligation upon them, not to upbraid one another. This charge our Lord Jesus has given us, "that we love one another," that we live in peace, that whatever occurs, or whatever former occurrences are remembered, we "fall not out."—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—In endeavouring to render men sensible of their faults, we should be careful not needlessly to expose them. True excellency does not consist in being devoid of passions, but in having them all under the government of reason and conscience; so as to know how to restrain them, and how to yield to them with prudence and expediency: and true wisdom discovers itself in being able to suit our conduct and conversation to the persons with whom we have to do, and to the circumstances in which they are placed. In speaking to men about the concerns of their souls, two grand objects should always be kept in view, namely, to awaken the careless conscience to an adequate sense of guilt and danger, and to inspire the burdened and desponding heart with the hope of pardon and peace. It is very profitable for us to observe the footsteps of Providence, and to denote how infinite wisdom and goodness deduce the most beneficial effects from the crimes and follies of men; especially we should study the history of our own lives with this design: we shall not then want proof, that the only wise God beasts, and go, get you unto the land of Canaan;

18 And take your father, and your households, and come unto me: and I will give you the good of the land of Egypt, and ye shall eat [a]the fat of the land.

19 Now thou art commanded, this do ye; take you waggons out of the land of Egypt [b]for your little ones, and for your wives, and bring your father, and come.

20 Also [*]regard not your [c]stuff; for [d]the good of all the land of Egypt is yours.

21 ¶ And the children of Israel did so: and Joseph gave them [e]waggons, according to the [†]commandment of Pharaoh, and gave them provision for the way.

22 To all of them he gave [f]each man changes of raiment: but [g]to Benjamin he gave three hundred pieces of silver, and five changes of raiment.

23 And to his father he sent after this manner; ten asses [‡]laden with the good things of Egypt, and ten she-asses laden with corn and bread and meat for his father by the way.

24 So he sent his brethren away, and they departed: and he said unto them, [h]See that ye fall not out by the way.[4]

25 ¶ And they went up out of Egypt, and came into the land of Canaan unto Jacob their father;

26 And told him, saying, [i]Joseph is yet alive, [k]and he is governor over all the land of Egypt. [l]And [§]Jacob's heart fainted,[5] [m]for he believed them not.

27 And they told him all the words of Joseph, which he had said unto them: and when he saw the waggons which Joseph had sent to carry him, [n]the spirit of Jacob their father revived.

28 And Israel said, [o]It is enough; Joseph my son is yet alive: I will go and see him before I die.

CHAP. XLVI.

Jacob is comforted by God at Beer-sheba, 1; he goeth into Egypt, 5; the number of his family, 8; Joseph meeteth him, 28.

AND Israel took his journey with all that he had, and came to [a]Beer-sheba, [b]and offered sacrifices [c]unto the God of his father Isaac.

2 And God spake unto Israel [d]in the visions of the night, and said, [e]Jacob, Jacob: and he said, Here am I.

3 And he said, I am God, the God of thy father: [f]fear not to go down into Egypt; for [g]I will there make of thee a great nation.

4 I [h]will go down with thee into Egypt; [i]and will also surely bring thee up again: and [k]Joseph shall put his hand upon thine eyes.

5 ¶ And Jacob rose up from Beer-sheba: and the sons of Israel carried Jacob their father, and their little ones, and their wives, [l]in the waggons which Pharaoh had sent to carry him.

6 And they took their cattle, and their goods[1] which they had gotten in the land of Canaan, and came into [m]Egypt, Jacob, and all his seed with him:

7 His sons and his sons' sons with him, his daughters, and his sons' daughters, and all his seed brought he with him into Egypt.

8 ¶ And these are [n]the names of the children of Israel, which came into Egypt, Jacob and his sons: [o]Reuben, Jacob's firstborn.

9 And the sons of Reuben; Hanoch, and Phallu, and Hezron, and Carmi.

10 ¶ And the sons of [p]Simeon; [*]Jemuel, and Jamin, and Ohad, and [†]Jachin, and [‡]Zohar, and Shaul the son of a Canaanitish woman.

11 ¶ And the sons of [q]Levi; [§]Gershon, Kohath, and Merari.

12 ¶ And the sons of [r]Judah; Er, and Onan, and Shelah, and Pharez, and Zarah: but Er and Onan died in the land of Canaan. And the sons of Pharez were Hezron, and Hamul.

13 ¶ And the sons of [s]Issachar; Tola, and Phuvah, and Job, and Shimron.

14 ¶ And the sons of [t]Zebulun; Sered, and Elon, and Jahleel.

15 These be the sons of [u]Leah, which she bare unto Jacob in Padan-aram, [x]with his daughter Dinah: all the souls of his sons and his daughters were thirty and three.

16 ¶ And the [y]sons of Gad; [‖]Ziphion, and Haggi, Shuni, and [*]Ezbon, Eri, and [†]Arodi, and Areli.

17 ¶ And the sons of [z]Asher; Jimnah, and Ishuah, and Isui, and Beriah, and Serah their sister: and the sons of Beriah; Heber, and Malchiel.

18 These are the sons of [a]Zilpah, whom Laban gave to Leah his daughter; and these she bare unto Jacob, even sixteen souls.

19 The sons of [b]Rachel, Jacob's wife; [c]Joseph, and Benjamin.

20 ¶ And unto Joseph in the land of Egypt were born [d]Manasseh and Ephraim, which Asenath the daughter of Potipherah [‡]priest of On bare unto him.

21 ¶ And [e]the sons of Benjamin were Belah, and Becher, and Ashbel, Gera, and Naaman, [f]Ehi, and Rosh, [g]Muppim, and [h]Huppim, and Ard.

22 These are the sons of Rachel, which were born to Jacob: all the souls were fourteen.

23 ¶ And the sons of [i]Dan; [k]Hushim.

hath overruled many of our mistakes and sins to our important good; and thus we may also perceive the outlines of his plan, "who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." This review, if duly made, cannot reasonably lead us to entertain a slighter sense of the evil of sin, or better thoughts of ourselves; it cannot encourage us to go on in disobedience, or lessen our humiliation and self-abasement; but, on the contrary, it will convince us the more deeply of our own ignorance and folly, and render us more ashamed of offending against so kind a benefactor. But it will prevent our despairing of forgiveness; check that sorrow which unfits the mind for duty, and damps our gratitude; and excite that admiration, love, and confidence, which produce cheerful obedience.—Scott.

CHAP. XLVI. Jacob's Piety.—Perhaps Jacob chose Beersheba for his solemn sacrifices, as frequently the scene of his father's communion with God, or, as the last place in Canaan, which he was now leaving never to see again. He spoke at first with rapture of going to see Joseph; but it had been revealed to Abraham, that his posterity would be durably oppressed in Egypt; and Isaac had been forbidden to go thither. Perhaps recollecting these things, Jacob hesitated about leaving Canaan till he had sought direction and protection from God. Nothing is recorded concerning sacrifices, from this time till Israel's deliverance from Egypt.—Scott.

God's Covenant Promise.—God promises Jacob comfort in the remove. 1. That he should multiply in Egypt; "'I will there,' where thou fearest that thy family will sink, and be lost, 'make it a great nation.' That is the place Infinite Wisdom has chosen for the accomplishment of that promise." 2. That he should have God's presence with him; "I will go down with thee into Egypt." Note, Those that go whither God sends them, shall certainly have God with them; and that is enough to secure them wherever they are, and to silence their fears; we may safely venture into Egypt, if God go down with us. 3. That neither he nor his should be lost in Egypt; "I will surely bring thee up again." Though Jacob died in Egypt, yet this promise was fulfilled, (1.) In the bringing up his body to be buried in Canaan, about which it appears he was very solicitous, chap. xlix. 29—32. (2.) In the bringing up of his seed to be settled in Canaan. Whatever low or darksome valley we are called into at any time, we may be confident, if God "go down" with us into it, that he will surely "bring us up again." If he go with us down to death, he will surely bring us up again to glory. 4. That, living and dying, his beloved Joseph should be a comfort to him; "Joseph shall put his hand upon thine eyes." This is a promise that Joseph should live as long as he lived, that he should be with him at his death, close his eyes with all possible tenderness and respect, as the nearest relation used to do.

The Journey.—Old Jacob is here flitting; little did he think of ever leaving Canaan; he expected, no doubt, "to die in his nest," and to leave his seed in actual possession of the promised land: but Providence orders it otherwise. It is good to be ready, not only for the grave, but for whatever may happen betwixt us and the grave. Observe, 1. How Jacob was conveyed; not in a chariot, though chariots were then used, but in a waggon, ver. 5. Jacob had the character of a plain man, who did not affect any thing stately or magnificent; his son rode in a chariot, chap. xli. 43, but a waggon would serve him. 2. The removal of what he had with him; (1.) His effects, ver. 6, "cattle and goods;" these he took with him, that he might not wholly be beholden to Pharaoh for a livelihood, and that it might not afterwards be said of them, "that they came beggars to Egypt." (2.) His family, "all his seed," ver. 7. It is probable that they had continued to live together in common with their father; and therefore, when he went, they all went; which perhaps they were the more willing to do, because, though they had heard that the land of Canaan was promised them, yet, to this day, they had none of it in possession.—Henry.

Jacob's Family.—The marginal references show, that several of the persons named were Benjamin's grandchildren. Benjamin was evidently born after Dinah had been defiled, and she was about Joseph's age: supposing her therefore but in her fourteenth year at that time, Benjamin could not now be more than twenty-five or twenty-six years old, so that it is scarcely conceivable he could have several grandchildren.—It is therefore most probable, that the historian mentions some born in Egypt during Jacob's lifetime, who afterwards became heads of families in Israel, as it was before intimated. —Scott.

Joseph's Filial Love.—He went in his chariot to meet Jacob, and, in the interview, showed, 1. How much he honoured him; he "presented himself unto him." Note, It is the duty of children to reverence their parents, yea, though Providence, as to outward condition, has advanced them above their parents. 2. How much he loved him; time did not wear out the sense of his obligations, but his tears, which he shed abundantly upon his father's neck, for joy to see him, were real indications of the sincere and strong affection he had for him. See how near sorrow and joy are to each other in this world, when tears serve for the expressions of both: in the other world, weeping will be restrained to sorrow only; in heaven, there is perfect joy, but no tears of joy; all tears, even those, shall there be wiped away, because the joys there are, as no joys here are, without any alloy. It was observed, when Joseph embraced Benjamin, that he "wept upon his neck," but, when he embraced his father, he "wept upon his neck a good while:" his brother Benjamin was dear, but his father Jacob must be dearer.—Henry.

5 And Pharaoh spake unto Joseph, saying, Thy father and thy brethren are come unto thee:

6 The land of Egypt [h]is before thee; in the best of the land make thy father and brethren to dwell; in the land of Goshen let them dwell: and if thou knowest any men of activity among them, then make them [i]rulers over my cattle.[1]

7 ¶ And Joseph brought in Jacob his father, and set him before Pharaoh: [k]and Jacob blessed Pharaoh.

8 And Pharaoh said unto Jacob, [l]How old art thou?

9 And Jacob said unto Pharaoh, [l]The days of the years of my pilgrimage are [m]an hundred and thirty years: few and evil have the days of the years of my life been, and [n]have not attained unto the days of the years of the life of my fathers,[2] in the days of their pilgrimage.

Practical Observations.—In those events and undertakings which appear most joyful, there are probable consequences involved, which may remind us to "rejoice with trembling;" and warn us not to proceed without seeking counsel, assistance, and a blessing from the Lord. Attending on his ordinances, and receiving the pledges of his covenant-love, we may expect his presence, and that peace which it confers: and when we are satisfied that we are his people, and in the path which he marks out to us, being assured of his supports and consolations, we may not only enter into the iron furnace of bondage and oppression, but into the fiery furnace of persecution.—In all our removals, we need to be reminded of our removal out of this world: and, though it is desirable to be surrounded at the eve of life with our beloved friends and children; yet, nothing can encourage us to fear no evil, when "passing through the valley of the shadow of death," but the presence of Jesus Christ to receive our souls.—Be our families ever so large, God's providence can with perfect ease support them: and be repenting sinners ever so numerous, the unsearchable riches of Christ are sufficient, and in heaven there is room enough for them all.—However generous our friends may be, it is prudent to be modest, and not to give them any ground to suspect us of encroaching, or to complain that we are burdensome. In general, the further from courts, the nearer to Canaan; and however obscure and despised our lot be, if it prove advantageous to our souls, and favourable to communion with God, we ought to be thankful for it. Our lives are in the Lord's hands, whatever we wish and desire; and though we should be willing to die, yet we should be also willing to wait his time. In the mean while, if even the abhorrence of the world keep us separate from it, we have cause to rejoice and be glad on that account.—Scott.

Chap. XLVII. The Question and Answer.—Pharaoh observed somewhat peculiarly venerable in the aspect of Jacob: and perhaps conceiving that he was older than indeed he was, (to which appearance his various hardships and trials might contribute,) he was curious to know his age. We have, in ver. 9, a very uncommon answer given to a very common question; but it is an answer full of pertinent instruction and admonition. Jacob calls his life a pilgrimage; that is, the sojourning of a stranger in a foreign country, or his journey home to his own country; intimating, that he was not at home on earth; and that his habitation, his inheritance, and his treasures were in heaven, whither he was daily journeying, in the bent and desires of his heart, and the tenor of his conduct. "For they which say such things confess that they seek a [illegible], that is, a heavenly country." Again, he numbers his life "by the days of his years," in few years, each year composed of a few days: one day goes, and another, and [illegible]; and thus year after year imperceptibly glides away, till life, with its many sorrows and scanty pleasures, comes to an end; just as a wearisome journey gradually is finished, and we arrive at home. Though Jacob had now lived an hundred and thirty years, yet, he counted them but few, in comparison of the lives of his forefathers, and as nothing compared with eternity. They were evil also; not only as the lives of others are, but in that he had an uncommon share of troubles.—Such an answer, from so venerable a person, could not fail to impress the mind of Pharaoh, and almost extort the reluctant sigh, by reminding him of the insufficiency, and short continuance of all human prosperity and felicity; and that, after a life of vanity and vexation, man goes down into the grave, from the throne as well as from the cottage; and that nothing can make him happy, but the prospect of an everlasting home in heaven, after the close of his short weary pilgrimage on earth.—Scott.

Famine.—It was great extremity that Egypt, and the parts adjacent, were reduced to by the famine. There was no bread, and they fainted, ver. 13, they were ready to die, ver. 15, 19. 1. See here what a dependence we have upon God's providence; if that suspend its usual favours but for a while, we die, we perish, we all perish. All our wealth would not keep us from starving, if the rain of heaven were but withheld for two or three years. See how much we lie at God's mercy, and let us keep ourselves always in his love. 2. See how much we smart by our own improvidence: if all the Egyptians had done for themselves in the seven years of plenty, as Joseph did for Pharaoh, they had not been now in these straits; but they regarded not the warning they had of the years of famine, concluding that to-morrow shall be as this day, next year as this, and much more abundant.—Henry.

Joseph's Policy.—Adverting to the words of the people, Joseph says, "I have bought you;" but it is evident he took no advantage of this part of the agreement. It does not appear, that their political liberty was materially abridged in consequence; but they held their lands, either their former estates, or others assigned to them, by a new tenure; on condition of paying one-fifth of the clear produce as a constant tax to Pharaoh: and this was made a law, which remained in force when Moses wrote his history, probably above two hundred years after. This service seems to have been made instead of all other taxes: and it does not appear to have been at all oppressive; it is indeed evident that the people did not consider it as a hardship, but the contrary.—The absurd opinion, that Joseph reduced the Egyptians to personal slavery, is contrary to the whole tenor of the narration, and not the least trace of it can be discovered in subsequent history. But it seems to have [illegible] who are prudent to quarrel with approved [illegible] unto him the second year, and said unto him, [a]We will not hide it from my lord, how that our money is spent; my lord also hath our herds of cattle; there is not ought left in the sight of my lord, but our bodies and our lands.

19 Wherefore shall we die before thine eyes, both we and our land? [a]Buy us and our land for bread,[4] and we and our land will be servants unto Pharaoh: [b]and give us seed, that we may live and not die, that the land be not desolate.

20 And Joseph bought all the land of Egypt for Pharaoh; for the Egyptians sold every man his field, because the famine prevailed over them: so the land became Pharaoh's.

21 And as for the people, he removed them [c]to cities, from one end of the borders of Egypt, even to the other end thereof.

22 Only the land of the [5]priests bought he not:[5] [d]for the priests had a portion assigned them of Pharaoh, and did eat their portion which Pharaoh gave them; wherefore they sold not their lands.

23 ¶ Then Joseph said unto the people, Behold, I have [e]bought you this day and your land for Pharaoh: lo, [f]here is seed for you, and ye shall sow the land.

24 And it shall come to pass in the increase, that ye shall give [g]the fifth part unto Pharaoh, and four parts shall be your own, for seed of the field, and for your food, and for them of your households, and for food for your little ones.

25 And they said, [h]Thou hast saved our lives: [i]let us find grace in the sight of my lord, and we will be Pharaoh's servants.

26 And Joseph made it a law over the land of Egypt unto this day, that Pharaoh should have the fifth part; [k]except the land of the [l]priests only, which became not Pharaoh's.

27 And Israel dwelt in the land of Egypt, in the country of Goshen; and they had possessions therein, and [l]grew, and multiplied exceedingly.

28 ¶ And Jacob lived in the land of Egypt [m]seventeen years: so *the whole age of Jacob was an hundred forty and seven years.

29 And the time drew nigh that Israel [n]must die: and he called his son Joseph, and said unto him, If now I have found grace in thy sight, [o]put, I pray thee, thy hand under my thigh, and [p]deal kindly and truly with me; [q]bury me not, I pray thee, in Egypt.

30 But I will [r]lie with my fathers, and thou shalt carry me out of Egypt, and bury me in their burying-place. And he said, I will do as thou hast said.

31 And he said, Swear unto me. And he sware unto him. [s]And Israel bowed himself upon the bed's head.

[4] The lands, thus voluntarily sold by the people, he farmed to the occupiers again, at the moderate and fixed crown rent of a fifth part of the produce. If we consider them in some or other of these views, Pharaoh might think, that they had not too much to support the stations they were to act in, and for that reason he ordered, that no tax should be laid upon them.—SHUCKFORD.

Joseph visiteth his sick father, 1. Jacob repeateth the promise, 3; and prophesieth their return, 21.

AND it came to pass after these things, that one told Joseph, Behold, [a]thy father is sick: and he took with him [b]his two sons, Manasseh and Ephraim.[*]

2 And one told Jacob, and said, Behold, thy son Joseph cometh unto thee: and Israel [c]strengthened himself, and sat upon the bed.

3 And Jacob said unto Joseph,[1] [d]God Almighty [e]appeared unto me at [f]Luz[2] in the land of Canaan, and blessed me,

4 And said unto me, Behold, [g]I will make thee fruitful, and multiply thee, and I will make of thee a multitude of people, and will give this land to thy seed after thee for an [h]everlasting possession.

5 And now thy [i]two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, which were born unto thee in the land of Egypt, before I came unto thee into Egypt, [k]are mine: as [l]Reuben and Simeon, they shall be mine.[3]

6 And thy issue which thou begettest after them, shall be thine, and shall be called after the name of their brethren in their inheritance.

7 And as for me, when I came from Padan, [m]Rachel died by me in the land of Canaan, in the way, when yet there was but a little way to come unto [n]Ephrath: and I buried her there in the way of Ephrath; the same is Beth-lehem.

8 ¶ And Israel beheld Joseph's sons, and said, Who are these?[4]

9 And Joseph said unto his father, They are [o]my sons, whom God hath given me in this place. And he said, Bring them, I pray thee, unto me, and I will [p]bless them.

10 Now [q]the eyes of Israel were *dim for age, so that he could not see. And he brought them near unto him; and he [r]kissed them, and embraced them.

11 And Israel said unto Joseph, [s]I had not thought to see thy face: and, lo, God hath shewed me also thy seed.

12 And Joseph brought them out from between his knees, and he [s]bowed himself with his face to the earth.

13 And Joseph took them both, Ephraim in his right hand toward Israel's left hand, and Manasseh in his left hand toward Israel's right hand, and brought them near unto him.

the arguments which demonstrate it to be divinely inspired.—Joseph was raised up by the Lord for this very service, and he is everywhere commended in it, and nowhere censured: the friends of revealed truth should, therefore, be cautious how they start objections to his conduct, of which at this distance of time and place they cannot be competent judges. The customs and maxims of different regions and ages are vastly dissimilar. No doubt the government of Egypt, both before and after this transaction, was far more arbitrary than Britons would approve.—But it is manifest, that the Egyptians were entirely satisfied with Joseph's management, both at the time and long after; and regarded him with the warmest gratitude as a public benefactor. And, though we may not perceive the reason of some arrangements; yet, the whole transaction is strongly marked with equity, benevolence, disinterestedness, and impartiality, which have seldom, if ever, been equalled. Joseph acted between Pharaoh and his subjects in the fear of God; and without any undue attachment to the interests of his brethren, or even of his own children.—It was also necessary that the corn should be sold, not given; nay, that it should be sold at a high price; otherwise it would have been improvidently used; and in that case a destructive famine must have followed, before the end of the seven years; and to complete the misery, the seed to sow the land might not have been reserved. Raising of the price of corn, in a real scarcity, by increasing the difficulty of obtaining it, reduces a nation to short allowance, and so preserves the inhabitants from destruction.—Joseph, by giving the Egyptians seed, encouraged them to cultivate their land, and sanctioned, (in his prophetical character,) their expectation of a crop.—In Egypt the harvest follows the seed-time much nearer than in this country; so that hope now dawned on the afflicted inhabitants.—Scott.

JACOB'S CHOICE OF A SEPULCHRE.—He would be buried in Canaan; this he resolved on, not from mere humour, because Canaan was the land of his nativity, but in faith, because it was the land of promise, (which he desired thus, as it were, to keep possession of till the time should come when his posterity should be masters of it,) and because it was a type of heaven, that better country, which he that said these things declared plainly that he was in expectation of, Heb. xi. 14. He aimed at a good land, which would be his rest and bless on the other side death.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The kindness of liberal benefactors, so far from encouraging us to encroach upon them, should remind us to show them all proper attention and deference; and in attending to some peculiar relative duties, we should look round upon the whole circle, and so proportion them as not to entrench upon others.—When Joseph selected five from his eleven brethren to present before Pharaoh, he doubtless had good reasons for his conduct, though not made known to us, nor probably to them. Thus the Lord Jesus, in dispensing his special benefits as he sees good, acts in perfect wisdom, though we are not acquainted with the grounds of his distinguishing grace; and thus, neither despising our meanness, nor ashamed even in his highest exaltation "to call us brethren," nor resenting our past misconduct, however base, he presents us, when we submit and believe in him, for acceptance before his Father's throne.—Industry in any honest employment is always creditable; and indeed all, who are not in some way diligent, are worthless encumbrances on the community. Nor ought a man, in compliance with fashion or prevalent notions, to be ashamed of the lowest useful occupations: for nothing that is not sinful is disgraceful in the sight of God, or of wise and good men.—Scott.

CHAP. XLVIII. JOSEPH'S SONS.—Jacob adopted Ephraim and Manasseh, that, being numbered with his own sons, they might, as heads of distinct tribes, have a proportionable share in the inheritance of Canaan. This he spake by the spirit of prophecy.—Considering Joseph's rank and prospects in Egypt, a carnal mind would have regarded this remote inheritance, with the rest of Jacob's sons, as a very inconsiderable matter. But it does not appear that Joseph either purchased estates, or amassed wealth in Egypt for his sons; not only because he was disinterested, but because he was a believer, and was unwilling to attach his children to Egypt; but desired to lead their thoughts to Canaan, and to the inheritance of the children of Israel, as their proper portion. Jacob also wished them to consider, that to be numbered with his sons, as the heir of the promises made to Abraham and Isaac; and as named Israel, because he had prevailed with God, and would certainly prevail with man, was far more honourable and desirable than to be the richest of Pharaoh's courtiers.—Scott.

DIVINE SOVEREIGNTY.—"Jacob crossed hands" in blessing Joseph's sons. Note, 1. God in bestowing his blessings upon his people, gives more to some than to others, more gifts, graces, and comforts, and more of the good things of this life. 2. He often gives most to those that are least likely. "He chooses the weak things of the world;" raises the poor out of the dust. Grace observes not the order of nature, nor does God prefer those whom we think fittest to be preferred, but as it pleases him. It is observable, how often God, by the distinguishing favours of his covenant, advanced the younger above the elder; Abel above Cain; Shem above Japheth; Abraham above Nahor and Haran; Isaac above Ishmael; Jacob above Esau; Judah and Joseph were preferred before Reuben; Moses before Aaron; David and Solomon before their elder brethren.—Henry.

THE ANGEL REDEEMER.—Jacob here called "God, before whom Abraham and Isaac had walked" and who had "fed him all his life long," "the Angel." As God does not 16 The [b]Angel which [c]redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads; and let [d]my name be named on them, and the name of my fathers Abraham and Isaac: and let them [e]grow into [f]a multitude in the midst of the earth.

17 And when Joseph saw that his father laid his right hand upon the head of Ephraim, it [g]displeased him: and he held up his father's hand, to remove it from Ephraim's head unto Manasseh's head.

18 And Joseph said unto his father, [h]Not so, my father: [i]for this is the first-born; put thy right hand upon his head.

19 And his father refused, and said, [k]I know it, my son, I know it; he also shall become a people, and he also shall be great: but truly his younger brother shall be greater than he, and his seed shall become [l]a multitude of nations.

20 And he blessed them that day, saying, In thee shall [m]Israel bless, saying, God make thee as Ephraim and as Manasseh: [n]and he set Ephraim before Manasseh.

21 ¶ And Israel said unto Joseph, [o]Behold, I die: but [p]God shall be with you, and bring you again unto the land of your fathers.

22 Moreover, I have [q]given to thee one portion above thy brethren, which I took out of the hand of [r]the Amorite with my sword and with my bow.

give his glory to the creatures, we may be sure that such things were not spoken of a created angel. This is one proof among many, that he who is by Malachi called "the Messenger," or Angel, "of the Covenant," even Jesus Christ, was known as distinct from, yet one with, the Father, by the patriarchs; and that as such he manifested himself to them, and was worshipped by them. Jacob, now closing his eyes in death, joyfully considered himself as "redeemed from all evil;" and therefore expected henceforth good, and nothing but good.—He prayed for his grandsons, that they might stand in the place, inherit the privileges, and walk in the steps of their progenitors, but especially, that his new name, ISRAEL, "might be named on them;" Rev. ii. 17; iii. 12. This would be a NAME of nobler import than Egypt could afford.—Scott.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The death-beds of eminent believers often afford most instructive lessons. "This is the end of all men, and the living will lay it to heart;" and such scenes, with the prayers and counsels of dying persons, are so suited to make serious impressions on the young, the gay, and the prosperous, that we do well in taking our children with us on these occasions, when it can be done with propriety.—It is very desirable, if the Lord please, to bear our dying testimony to the truths of God, to his faithfulness, and to the pleasantness of his ways. One would wish to be strengthened at such a solemn season, to render our last service to our survivors; and we should have regard to this, in our whole conduct, that we may so live, as to give energy and weight to our dying exhortations: yet, after all, the Spirit dispenseth in this matter severally, as he will. Abraham and Isaac died in faith and in peace, yet we have no record of their dying testimony: but Jacob spoke with great copiousness and energy. All true believers are blessed at their death; but all do not depart equally full of spiritual consolation, nor are all alike edifying to the spectators.—Scott.

CHAP. XLIX. JACOB'S VALEDICTORY BLESSING.—All Jacob's sons were still living; and now at his command they collected round his bed, perhaps with their children, to hear his dying words. The repetition of this call might intimate his desire, that they should keep together, and live in harmony as one family, without intermingling with the Egyptians. This address should not all be considered as the expression of his private affection, resentment, or partiality; but as the language of the Holy Spirit, declaring the purpose of God respecting the character, circumstances, and situation of the several tribes descended from them, in the "last times," or in "after ages;" for the prophecy evidently looks forward beyond the coming of Christ; and some of it [illegible] yet [illegible], in this, and in some other passages, such as Moses' blessing, and [illegible] concerning the tribes, there is no large extent of prediction [illegible] words, that brevity will allow us to adduce but a small part, of what may properly be said by way of elucidating them. It many instances we have only the scriptural history to proceed upon, if we attempt to illustrate the prophecy by its accomplishment: and this mentions but little concerning several of the tribes. Had we a more particular account of the distinguishing character, situation, and success of each tribe, we should probably perceive a more striking exactness in all than we now discern in any of them.

FATES AND FORTUNES OF THE TWELVE PATRIARCHS.—Reuben being Jacob's eldest son, might expect the precedency; as "the excellency of dignity, and the excellency of power;" the larger portion of the inheritance, and the principal authority among his brethren properly belonged to him. But he had incurred a forfeiture, and therefore his father, as it were, arrayed him with the insignia of royalty, that he might the more solemnly and judiciously degrade him. Simeon and Levi, the next in seniority, were degraded also, and with still deeper abhorrence of the crime which they had committed. They were brethren, not only descended from the same parents, but as being of the same fierce and untractable disposition. The swords, those "instruments of cruelty" with which they massacred the Shechemites, remained in their houses, as monuments of their odious crime; or rather, "Their deceitful compacts are the instruments of cruelty;" for thus the clause may be rendered, perhaps more properly than it is either in the text or in the margin of our version. The sentence in Levi's case was not reversed, but converted into a blessing, in consequence of the service which his descendants performed, in their zeal against the worshippers of the golden calf; so, that being consecrated to God, as the priestly tribe, they were honourably and profitably divided and scattered in that character throughout Israel. "Judah" signifies Praise. Leah thus called her son, as expressing her admiring gratitude to God for his goodness; but Jacob alluded to the name with reference to Judah himself, chap. xxix. 35. There was nothing praiseworthy in the former part of Judah's life; but he acted most nobly and disinterestedly in his conduct before Joseph respecting Benjamin, and was entitled to the praises of all his brethren. Yet, not Judah personally, but his descendants were principally intended, especially Christ, whom all his brethren shall praise for ever. The word here translated "sceptre," verse 10, properly signifies a rod or staff, though sometimes it is rendered a tribe, and is simply denotes the exercise of dominion or authority, of which the rod or sceptre was the badge. Judah was at this time merely the head of a family; for Israel, properly speaking, was no more divided into tribes than governed by kings: but it was prophetically intimated that Judah would shortly possess [illegible] tribe, but likewise over his brethren. [illegible] authority; but plainly [illegible]

24 But [r]his bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands [s]were made strong, by the hands of [t]the mighty God of Jacob: (from thence is [u]the shepherd, [x]the stone of Israel):

25 Even by [y]the God of thy father, who shall help thee; and by [z]the Almighty, who shall bless thee, with [a]blessings of heaven above, blessings of the deep that lieth under, blessings of the breasts and of the womb.

26 The blessings of thy father [b]have prevailed above the blessings of thy progenitors, unto the utmost bound of the [c]everlasting hills: they shall be on the head of Joseph, and on the crown of the head of him that [d]was separate from his brethren.

The mourning for Jacob, 1; his funeral, 7. Joseph prophesieth to his brethren of their return, 24; his death, 26.

AND Joseph [a]fell upon his father's face, and [b]wept upon him, and kissed him.

2 And Joseph commanded his servants the physicians to embalm[1] his father: and the physicians [c]embalmed Israel.

3 And forty days were fulfilled for him (for so are fulfilled the days of those which are embalmed): and the Egyptians *mourned for him [d]threescore and ten days.

4 ¶ And when [e]the days of his mourning were past, [f]Joseph spake unto the house of Pharaoh, saying, If now I have found grace in your eyes, speak, I pray you, in the ears of Pharaoh, saying,

5 My father [g]made me swear, saying, [h]Lo, I die: in my grave which [i]I have digged for me in the land of Canaan, there shalt thou [k]bury me. Now therefore [l]let me go up, I pray thee, and bury my father, and I will come again.

6 And Pharaoh said, Go up, and bury thy father, according as he made thee swear.

7 ¶ And Joseph went up to bury his father: [m]and with him went up all the servants of Pharaoh, the elders of his house, and all the elders[2] of the land of Egypt,

8 And all the house of Joseph and his brethren, and his father's house: [n]only their little ones, and their flocks, and their herds, they left in the land of Goshen.

9 And there went up with him both [o]chariots and horsemen: and it was a very great company.

10 And they came to the thrashing-floor of Atad,[3] which is beyond Jordan, and there they mourned with a great and very sore lamentation: and he made a mourning for his father [p]seven days.

11 And when the inhabitants of the land, [q]the Canaanites, saw the mourning in the floor of Atad, they said, This is a grievous mourning to the Egyptians; wherefore the name of it was called *Abel-mizraim, which is [r]beyond Jordan.

12 And his sons did unto him [s]according as he commanded them:

13 For his sons carried him into the land of Canaan, and buried him in [t]the cave of the field of Machpelah, which Abraham bought with the field, for a possession of a burying-place, of Ephron the Hittite, before Mamre.

14 ¶ And Joseph returned into Egypt, he, and his brethren, and all that went up with him to bury his father, after he had buried his father.

15 ¶ And when Joseph's brethren saw that [u]their father was dead, they said, [x]Joseph will peradventure hate us, and will certainly requite us all the evil which we did unto him.[4]

16 And they [†]sent a messenger unto Joseph, saying, Thy father did command before he died, saying,

17 So shall ye say unto Joseph, [y]Forgive, I pray thee now, the trespass of thy brethren, and their sin; for [z]they did unto thee evil: and now, we pray thee, forgive the trespass of the [a]servants of the God of thy father. And Joseph [b]wept[5] when they spake unto him.

18 And his brethren also went and [c]fell down before his face: and they said, Behold, we be thy servants.

within that generation, according to his express predictions, Jerusalem was destroyed, the whole civil and ecclesiastical state was subverted, all distinctions among the poor, harassed remnant were confounded; they were scattered abroad over the face of the earth; and to this day, after almost 1800 years, they have been more destitute of sceptre and lawgiver than even during the Babylonish captivity. According to this prediction, verse 13, the tribe of Zebulun had a portion assigned to it, which extended nearly, if not entirely, from the sea of Galilee to the Mediterranean sea, on which some think it had seaports. The maritime situation in which this tribe was placed, tended greatly to enrich it, both by fisheries and commerce, Deut. xxxiii. 18, 19, and its inheritance reached to the borders of that country, of which Zidon was the capital. Issachar is described under the emblem of a strong ass, as Judah had been under that of a fierce lion. This implied that the tribe of Issachar would be industrious and unambitious; bearing labour, or tribute, peaceably, of which burdens others grievously complained. Dan signifies judgment; and Jacob foretold, that, though he was the son of one of his concubines, and the first of them whom he mentions, he should be the head of a separate tribe, and have a share in public affairs, even as if he had been descended from Leah or Rachel. Samson was of this tribe, who unexpectedly buried the Philistines in the ruins of the temple of Dagon, as the viper which lies on the sandy road causes the horse to throw his rider. Gad signifies a troop, and both the character and situation of this tribe are here described. The Gadites were renowned for valour, 1 Chron. xii. 8; and, having their inheritance beyond Jordan eastward, they lay open to incursions from troops of Ammonites, Moabites, Syrians, and others, by whom, doubtless, they were frequently annoyed. Asher signifies the blessed; and Jacob, by the spirit of prophecy, assigned him a plentiful country, yielding abundance for himself and others; even royal dainties to supply the tables of kings, at home and abroad. His inheritance bordered on Carmel, which was fruitful to a proverb, Jos. xix. 24—26; Isa. xxxv. 2. This may be considered as a sketch of the character of the tribe of Naphtali, as unlike the laborious ox and ass, affecting ease and liberty, insinuating and affectionate, active but volatile, more noted for despatch than for steady labour and perseverance; and more disposed to exult in national blessings than to fight in defence of them. Part of what Jacob says concerning his beloved Joseph is historical, and relates to his past life, though much is prophetical. He is here called "a fruitful bough," or young tree planted by the water side; he had no more than two sons, who should from strong two very numerous tribes; but his prosperity was preceded by [illegible] afflictions. "The archers," or such as were most skilful in the [illegible] grieved him, shot at him, and hated him." His brethren [illegible] and enmity, had aimed his life only to sell him for a slave. Potiphar's wife tempted and then slandered him; Potiphar condemned and imprisoned him; and though we do not read of it, it is a singular case indeed, if some of the Egyptians did not revile and envy him. This part may likewise be considered as prophetical of the terrible wars which his descendants waged, especially with the kingdom of Judah. His weapons, however, in this warfare failed him not, as a broken or weakened bow would have done; and his hands and arms, notwithstanding the most fatiguing exertions, were strengthened to use it by the power of the God of Jacob. According to the emblem used, ver. 27, the character of the tribe of Benjamin would be fierceness and cruelty; which especially appears in the history of the Levite's concubine; when after the wickedness was committed, the Benjamites singly withstood all the other tribes, and had the advantage in two battles; nor did they yield until almost entirely destroyed. Ehud, the second judge, and Saul, the first king, were of this tribe. In the former part of the history, we read frequently of the Benjamites as a warlike people; and in the latter times they joined themselves to the tribe of Judah, and thus divided the spoil and shared with them in their privileges.—Scott.

CHAP. L. EMBALMING OF JACOB.—The Egyptians were eminent for the art of preserving dead bodies from putrefaction, by the skilful use of spices and drugs. Several of these bodies remain to this day, and are called Egyptian mummies, being preserved as great curiosities; and some of them have probably continued in this state above 2000 years. The same persons who were consulted as physicians for the living, embalmed the dead bodies; and at least forty days were requisite to complete the process. These physicians were generally retained as servants in the courts of princes and the families of great men; and Joseph, in his high station, had several of them in his household. As, therefore, the custom was not sinful, and as in the case of Jacob's body, which was to be buried at a distance, it was very expedient, Joseph complied with it on this occasion; and for similar reasons the survivors afterwards embalmed his body.—Scott.

HIS FUNERAL.—1. It was a stately funeral: he was attended to the grave, not only by his own family, but by the courtiers, and all the great men of the kingdom, who, in token of their gratitude to Joseph, showed this respect to his father for his sake, and did him honour at his death. There went abundance of chariots and horsemen, not only to attend them a little way, but to go through with them. Note, the decent solemnities of funerals, according to a man's situation, are very commendable; and we must not say of them, "To what purpose is this waste?" 2. It was a sorrowful funeral; ver. 10, 11, standers-by took notice of it as a grievous mourning. Note, The death of good men is a great loss to any place, and ought to be greatly lamented. # THE SECOND BOOK OF MOSES,

CALLED

EXODUS.

THIS book hath been, by the Greek interpreters, called Exodus—that is to say, the coming forth; because the chief subject thereof is, the history of the miraculous coming forth of God's children out of Egypt, where they had been detained, after the death of Joseph, in long and cruel slavery and oppression, until the very instant of time appointed by God's promises and predictions for their deliverance, to bring them into the land of Canaan promised to their forefathers. And just then, the Lord, by the hands of Moses and Aaron, set the people in full liberty, after he had with many terrible plagues broken and tamed Pharaoh's pride and obstinacy, causing them to pass dry foot through the Red Sea, where he drowned Pharaoh and all his host that pursued them. That the people after that time might not have, nor acknowledge any other God or Lord but the everlasting Son of God, who had manifested himself unto them by a new, glorious, and most singular name, which he revealed unto Moses; and had instituted the new sacrament of the passover, for a remembrance of this miraculous deliverance; after which he himself conducted them through the desert, even to Mount Sinai, where he more particularly and solemnly renewed his covenant with them, not only giving them his law restored to its original light, fulness, and majesty, together with many ordinances, ceremonies, and statutes, as well ecclesiastical as politic, to consecrate and appropriate them altogether to himself, and to sever them from all intermixture with profane nations; but especially by the pledges, sacraments, and figures of the propitiation and remission of sins, which was to be accomplished in its due time by the promised Saviour; upon whom, as head and chief of the everlasting covenant, God would have his people continually to fix their minds and faith: appointing also to the same end the order of the priesthood, and ordinary service of God amongst his people, and a holy tabernacle in manner of a moveable temple, with all its ornaments and parts: amongst which the ark of the covenant held the first place, over which the Son of God appeared present in grace and power, as true God, king, and sovereign oracle of his people: who, on their parts, performing very ill the reciprocal conditions of this covenant, did (through their frequent murmurings, rebellions, and idolatries, severely punished, yet still pardoned by God) cause this truth to burst forth, that this was a covenant of mere grace, grounded upon God's mere goodwill and mercy in Christ Jesus, their Head and Mediator, by whose only propitiation and intercession, represented and sealed by the Levitical priesthood, they were always preserved by God, notwithstanding their disloyalties and transgressions. Now, this history, as it is expounded in divers places of the New Testament, containeth an excellent representation and figure of the spiritual deliverance of the Church from the devil's tyranny, and from the slavery of the world, to pass through the sea of Christ's blood, applied in holy baptism, into the long and troublesome course of her vocation in this life, still making towards the heavenly Canaan and Jerusalem. In which course she had for her guide the light and comfort of God's Spirit; and for her sustenance, the manna of his grace and word; and for the consolation and comfort of her conscience, a perpetual communion in the benefits of her only High Priest; and for a rule of living, her sovereign King's laws and commandments, against which sinning but too often, she is, for her great faults and transgressions, chastised with a fatherly severity; but still held up, and restored, by virtue of the eternal satisfaction and everlasting intercession of her Saviour and Redeemer, whose presence never forsaketh her, and continually directeth her towards the end of her everlasting vocation in heaven.—DIODATI.

Moses proceeds in this book in such an order, as was most natural to a writer, relating the different occurrences which took place exactly as they took place. The history is perpetually interrupted with exact details of the laws, as they were occasionally delivered, with minute, and even tedious, though necessary descriptions of the materials and work of the tabernacle and its furniture, of the altar, the ark, the dress of the priests, and the mode of offering the sacrifices: these are detailed in the most inartificial manner, if we consider the book as intended for a regular and finished composition. The description of the method in which these things should be formed is spread through near six chapters, chap. xxv.—xxx., then the history proceeds for five more; and then succeeds a relation of the fact, that each particular directed to be made was made according to the direction given, in most cases word for word the same as the direction; and this extended through five long chapters, xxxvi.—xl. The measures of the curtains, and the boards, and the borders, the number and size of the rings and the loops, of the tenons, and the pillars, and the sockets, of the curtains and the hangings, are enumerated with such exactness, as proves the detail was not at all designed to display in strong and glowing colours the magnificence of the objects described; for such a purpose it is totally unfit, but it is exactly such as was necessary to instruct the workmen in the making of them. All this is just and natural if Moses was really the author of Exodus, and if he detailed the circumstances at the time when they occurred; because he conceived the formation of all this work, according to a particular model, chap. xxv. 3, 9, and 40, as a matter of important obligation, and worthy a peculiar record, when he tells us, "that according to all that the Lord commanded Moses, so the children of Israel made all the work, and Moses blessed them" (chap. xxxix. 42). But such an enumeration would have been utterly irrational and unnatural in any other writer, or for any other purpose.—DR GRAVES.

yet devout men make great lamentations for him. The solemn mourning for Jacob gave a name to the place, "Abel-mizraim, The mourning of the Egyptians;" which served for a testimony against the next generation of the Egyptians, who oppressed the posterity of this Jacob to whom their ancestors showed such respect.—Henry.

SUSPICIONS LULLED.—A deep conviction of their criminality, in their conduct to him, rendered Joseph's brethren unreasonably suspicious; but their fears and submissions were calculated still more to humble and soften them, as well as to accomplish the purposes of God. They first sent messengers to Joseph. Perhaps Benjamin was one; and probably Manasseh and Ephraim along with him. But afterwards they were encouraged to go in person. They did not say, "our father," but, more pathetically, "thy father." They urged the dying words of Jacob, who doubtless had given them some injunction to this purpose, in order to render them more deeply sensible of their guilt; and they pleaded with Joseph for pardon, in the character of the servants of Jacob's God.

JOSEPH'S FAITH.—"By faith Joseph, when he died, made mention of the departure of the children of Israel, and gave commandment concerning his bones." He fully expected that the promise of God would be verified; and desired to have his lot beyond the grave with the Israelites, and not with the Egyptians. It is probable that he required, not only his brethren, but the chief persons in their several families, to take this oath: yet he did not order his body to be carried directly to Canaan for burial, but to remain in Egypt until God should visit them. It was therefore embalmed, and kept in a coffin in Egypt, most likely by the Israelites; and this circumstance would keep alive the expectation of a speedy departure from Egypt, and preserve Canaan continually in their mind. It would also tend to attach Joseph's posterity to their brethren, and to prevent them from incorporating with the Egyptians.—Scott.

HIS DEATH.—We have in conclusion, the death of Joseph, and the reservation of his body for a burial in Canaan, ver. 26. He was "put in a coffin in Egypt," but not buried till his children had received their inheritance in Canaan, Josh. xxiv. 32. Note, (1.) If the separate soul, at death, do but return to its rest with God, the matter is not great, though the deserted body find not at all, or not quickly, its rest in the grave. (2.) Yet care ought to be taken of the dead bodies of the saints, in the belief of their resurrection; for there is a covenant with the dust, which shall be remembered, and a commandment is given concerning the bones.—Henry.

CHAP. I. INCREASE OF ISRAEL IN EGYPT.—Here are four words used to express it; they "were fruitful," and "increased abundantly," like fishes or insects, so that they "multiplied;" and, being generally healthful and strong, they "waxed exceeding mighty," so that they began almost to outnumber the natives, for the land was in all places filled with them, at least Goshen, their own allotment. Observe, 1. Though no doubt they increased considerably before, yet, it should seem, it was not till after the death of Joseph that it began to be taken notice of as extraordinary. Thus, when they lost the benefit of his protection, God made their numbers their defence, and they became better able than they had been to shift for themselves. If God continue our friends and relations to us when we most need them, and remove them when they can be better spared, let us own that he is wise, and not complain that he is hard upon us. After the death of Christ, our Joseph, his Gospel-Israel began most remarkably to increase; his death had an influence upon it, it was like the sowing of a corn of wheat, which, if it die, bringeth forth much fruit, John xii. 24. 2. This wonderful increase was the fulfilment of the promise long before made unto the fathers: from the call of Abraham, when God first told him he would make of him a great nation, to the d liverance of his seed out of Egypt, it was 430 years, during the first 215 of which they were increased but to seventy, but, in the latter half, those seventy multiplied to 600,000 fighting men.—Henry.

NEW KING.—This must have been some years after Joseph's death, perhaps not less than sixty. Whether this king sprang from another family, or was a descendant of Joseph's patron; having no personal knowledge of him, he had no regard to his memory, esteem for his excellency, or sense of the benefits which Egypt had received from him: and therefore, he preferred his own supposed political interests to the claims of honour and gratitude, after the too general maxims of kings and rulers.—Scott.

SLAVERY.—The Egyptians not only made the Israelites "serve," which was sufficient for Pharaoh's profit, but they made them "serve with rigour," so that their lives became bitter to them; intending thereby, 1. To break their spirits, and rob them of every thing in them, that was ingenious and generous. 2. To ruin their health, and shorten their days, and so diminish their numbers. 3. To discourage them from marrying since their children would be born to slavery. 4. To oblige them to desert the Hebrews, and incorporate themselves with the Egyptians. Thus he hoped to cut off the name of Israel, that it might be no more in remembrance.—[Henry.] Many have supposed, that, besides the useful works here mentioned, the Israelites were employed in building those enormous piles called the pyramids, which remain to this day, and probably will continue till the end of the world; monuments, not so much of the greatness and wisdom, as of the folly, caprice, exorbitant power, and cruel tyranny of the monarchs who projected them. It cannot indeed be denied that the skill, by which they were planned, equals the vastness of the labour with which they were completed: but then, it is evident that they never could be useful, in any degree adequate to the toil and expense with which they

7 ¶ And the children of Israel were [d] fruitful, and increased abundantly, and multiplied, and waxed exceeding mighty; and the land was filled with them.

8 ¶ Now there arose up [e] a new king over Egypt, which knew not Joseph.

9 And he said unto his people, Behold, [f] the people of the children of Israel are more and mightier than we.[1]

10 [g] Come on, let us deal [h] wisely with them: lest they multiply, and it come to pass, that when there falleth out any war, they join also unto our enemies, and fight against us, and so get them up out of the land.

11 Therefore they did set over them task-masters, [i] to afflict them with their [k] burdens. And they built for Pharaoh treasure-cities, [2] Pithom and [l] Raamses.

12 But [†] the more they afflicted them, the more they multiplied and grew. And they were [m] grieved because of the children of Israel.

13 And the Egyptians made the children of Israel to serve with rigour.

14 And they made [n] their lives bitter with hard bondage, [o] in mortar, and in brick, and in all manner of service in the field: all their service wherein they made them serve, [p] was with rigour.

15 ¶ And the king of Egypt spake to the Hebrew midwives, (of which the name of the one was Shiphrah, and the name of the other Puah:)

16 And he said, When ye do the office of a midwife to the Hebrew women, and see them upon the stools, if it be a son, [q] then ye shall kill him, but if it be a daughter, then she shall live.

17 But the midwives [r] feared God, and did not as the king of Egypt commanded them, but saved the men-children alive.

18 And the king of Egypt called for the midwives, and said unto them, [s] Why have ye done this thing, and have saved the men-children alive?

19 And the midwives [t] said unto Pharaoh, Because the Hebrew women are not as the Egyptian women: for they are lively, and are delivered ere the midwives come in unto them.

20 Therefore [u] God dealt well with the midwives: and the people multiplied, and waxed very mighty.

21 And it came to pass, because the midwives feared God, that he [x] made them houses.

22 ¶ And Pharaoh charged all his people, saying, [y] Every son that is born ye shall cast into the river, and every daughter ye shall save alive.

Moses is born, and put into the flags, 1; he is found and brought up by Pharaoh's daughter, 5; he fleeth into Midian, 15.

AND there went a man [a] of the house of Levi,[1] and took to wife a daughter of Levi.

2 And the woman conceived, and bare a son: and when [b] she saw him that he was a goodly child, she hid him three months.

3 And when [c] she could not longer hide him, she took for him [d] an ark of bulrushes,[2] and daubed it [e] with slime and with pitch, and put the child therein; and she laid it in the flags by the river's brink.

4 And [f] his sister stood afar off, to wit what would be done to him.

5 ¶ And the daughter of Pharaoh came down to wash herself at the river,[3] and her maidens walked along by the river's side: and [g] when she saw the ark among the flags, she sent her maid to fetch it.

6 And when she had opened it, she saw the child: and, behold, the babe wept. And [h] she had compassion on him, and said, This is one of the Hebrews' children.

7 Then said his sister to Pharaoh's daughter, Shall I go, and call to thee a nurse of the Hebrew women, that she may nurse the child for thee?

8 And Pharaoh's daughter said to her, [i] Go. And the maid went and called the child's mother.

9 And Pharaoh's daughter said unto her, Take this child away, and nurse it for me, and I will give thee thy wages. And the woman took the child, and nursed it.

10 And the child grew, and she brought him unto Pharaoh's daughter, [k] and he became her son.[4] And she called his name * Moses: and she said, [l] Because I drew him out of the water.

11 ¶ And it came to pass in those days, when [m] Moses was grown, that he went out unto his brethren, and looked on their [n] burdens: and he spied an Egyptian smiting an Hebrew, one of his brethren.

12 And [o] he looked this way and that way, and when he saw that there was no man, he slew the Egyptian, and hid him in the sand.

13 And when he went out the second day, behold, two men of the Hebrews strove together: [p] and he said to him that did the wrong, Wherefore smitest thou thy fellow?

14 And he said, [q] Who made thee [†] a prince and a judge over us? Intendest thou to kill me, as thou killedst the Egyptian? And [r] Moses feared, and said, Surely this thing is known.

15 Now when Pharaoh heard this thing, he sought to slay Moses. But Moses [s] fled were erected. The supposition, however, is entirely groundless: for the Israelites were employed in making bricks, while it is well known that the pyramids were built of hewn stone.—Scott.

[1] The name of the father of Moses was Amram; and his mother's name was Jochebed, (chap. vi. 20). They were both of the tribe of Levi. Aaron, his elder brother, was three years older than he; and Miriam, his sister, probably seven or eight years older than Aaron.—CALMET.

CRUELTY.—Two bloody edicts were signed for the destruction of all the male children that were born to the Hebrews. The midwives were commanded to murder them. Observe, The orders given them, ver. 15, 16. It added much to the barbarity of the intended executions, that the midwives were appointed to be the executioners; for it was to make them not only bloody, but perfidious, and to oblige them to betray a trust, and to destroy those whom they undertook to save and help. Could he think that their sex would admit such cruelty, and their employment such base treachery? Note, Those who are themselves barbarous, think to find, or make, others as barbarous. Pharaoh's project was, secretly to engage the midwives to stifle the men-children as soon as they were born, and then to lay it upon the difficulty of the birth, or some mischance common in that case, Job iii. 11.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The very titles of these first two books in the Bible remind us, that the history of man is little more than a narrative of his beginning and of his departure. Thus one generation is swept away after another, and nothing remains except the names of a very few, and some of them covered with infamy! Happy they, whose names are written in the book of Life; and enrolled there as true Israelites, and heirs of heaven!—How soon may the sun of prosperity be darkened, by the deepest cloud of adversity; and the place of our refuge become the scene of our misery! our best friends succeeded by enemies, and our best services repaid with ingratitude! We should therefore trust the Lord alone: for as nothing can hasten the accomplishment of his purpose, before the appointed time; so nothing can retard it, when that season arrives.—For the space of about two hundred years, while Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and their families, lived at liberty, in peace, and in prosperity and affluence, they only increased to seventy persons; but afterwards in about the same number of years, under much oppression and cruel bondage, they multiplied into a large nation! nor did their most rapid increase commence, till after the death of Joseph, their chief friend; for, God will secure to himself the glory of fulfilling his own promises. Thus was the Christian church more especially increased after the death of Jesus: and thus hath vital religion, in all ages, most prospered under the pressure of severe persecutions. By this the Lord covers his enemies with confusion, and teaches his people "not to fear them who kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do."—Scott.

CHAP. II. BIRTH OF MOSES.—Miriam, Moses' sister, must have been at least ten years older than he, as it is evident from the history of this chapter: and Aaron was three years older than Moses: but it does not appear that his preservation was attended with any peculiar difficulty; and from this we may infer, with some degree of probability at least, that the last bloody edict was not then enacted. Aaron was born eighty-three years before the exodus, and Joseph died about a hundred and forty-five years before that event: the edict therefore could not be passed less than sixty two years after the death of Joseph. But it is not known, how long that prince, "who knew not Joseph," had reigned before the edict was made.—Moses when born appeared to be a goodly child: and the notice taken of this in several places, indicates that something extraordinary was observed in him, which was considered as an intimation of his future greatness.

HIS EXPOSURE.—It is probable that the mother of Moses had received some intimation that she was discovered, and expected that the executioners would come and murder the child in the house before her eyes. She therefore took for him an ark, or a small basket, formed of rushes, and made water-proof, by being coated with a kind of bitumen and pitch within and without. Expecting some providential interposition in his behalf, and under the secret guidance of the Lord, she placed Moses in this ark, concealed it among the flags on the side of the river, and set his sister to watch it. This expedient did not seem likely to answer for any time; as the infant must at length have perished, or been devoured by the crocodiles with which the Nile abounds, if Pharaoh's servants had not found him. But she acted in faith, and the Lord answered her expectation.

HIS SAFETY.—Had any other persons found the exposed infant, they would scarcely have dared to preserve its life, even if they had been disposed to do so: but Pharaoh's daughter, with her attendants, passing near that part of the river, in going to some convenient place for bathing, (which was customary, not only for refreshment, but as a religious observance,) she discovered the ark, and sent for it. The beautiful babe weeping, excited her compassion, so that she determined to bring him up: and when his sister, (probably after some delay, and observing that the company was at a loss how to proceed,) offered to fetch a Hebrew woman to nurse the child, she was sent for one: thus his own mother was employed to nurse him, and well rewarded for her pains!

HIS FAITH.—During forty years Moses seems to have lived as an Egyptian, and as men of high rank generally do, and not particularly to have regarded his oppressed brethren: but at this time "it came into his heart to visit them," under a firm persuasion that "God by his hand would deliver them;" and supposing they would have thus understood it. He likewise deliberately purposed to renounce the honours, wealth, and from the face of Pharaoh, and dwelt in the land of [t]Midian; [u]and he sat down by a well.

16 ¶ Now the [‡]priest of Midian had seven daughters: and [x]they came and drew water, and filled the troughs to water their father's flock.

17 And [y]the shepherds came and drove them away: but Moses stood up and helped them, and watered their flock.

18 And when they came to [z]Reuel their father, he said, How is it that you are come so soon to-day?

19 And they said, [a]An Egyptian delivered us out of the hands of the shepherds, [b]and also drew water enough for us, and watered the flock.

20 And he said unto his daughters, And where is he? Why is it that ye have left the man? [c]Call him, that he may eat bread.

21 And Moses was [d]content to dwell with the man: and he gave Moses [e]Zipporah his daughter.

22 And she bare him a son, and he called his name [§]Gershom: [f]for he said, I have been a stranger in a strange land.

23 ¶ And it came to pass [‖]in process of time, that [h]the king of Egypt died; and the children of Israel [i]sighed by reason of the bondage, and they cried; and their [k]cry came up unto God, by reason of the bondage.

24 And [l]God heard their groaning, and God [m]remembered his covenant with Abraham, with Isaac, and with Jacob.

25 And God [n]looked upon the children of Israel, and God [o]had respect unto them.

CHAP. III.

Moses keepeth Jethro's flock, 1. God appeareth unto him in a burning bush, 2; he sendeth him to deliver Israel, 9.

NOW Moses [a]kept the flock[1] of Jethro [b]his father-in-law, the priest of Midian: and he led the flock to the backside of the desert, and came to [c]the mountain of God, even to [d]Horeb.[2]

2 And the [e]angel of the LORD appeared unto him in a flame of fire out of the midst a bush: and he looked, and, behold, the bush [f]burned with fire, and the bush was not consumed.

3 And Moses said, I will now turn aside, [g]and see this great sight, why the bush is not burnt.

4 And when the LORD saw that he turned aside to see, God called unto him out of the midst of the bush, and said, [h]Moses, Moses. And he said, Here am I.

5 And he said, [i]Draw not nigh hither: [k]put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground.

6 Moreover, he said, [l]I am the God of thy father, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. And Moses [m]hid his face:[3] for he was afraid to look upon God.

7 ¶ And the LORD said, [n]I have surely seen the affliction of my people which are in Egypt, and have heard their cry, by reason of their taskmasters: for I know their sorrows.

8 And I [o]am come down to [p]deliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians, and to bring them up out of that land, [q]unto a good land and a large, unto a land flowing with milk and honey; unto the place of the [r]Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites.

9 Now therefore, behold, the cry of the children of Israel is come unto me: [s]and I have also seen the oppression wherewith the Egyptians oppress them.

10 Come now therefore, [t]and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people the children of Israel out of Egypt.

11 ¶ And Moses said unto God, [u]Who am I, that I should go unto Pharaoh, and that I should bring forth the children of Israel out of Egypt?

12 And he said, [x]Certainly I will be with thee; and this shall be a [y]token unto thee, that I have sent thee; when thou hast brought forth the people out of Egypt, [z]ye shall serve God upon this mountain.

13 And Moses said unto God, Behold, when I come unto the children of Israel, and shall say unto them, The God of your fathers hath sent me unto you; and they shall say to me, [a]What is his name? what shall I say unto them?

14 And God said unto Moses, I AM THAT I AM: and he said, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, [b]I AM hath sent me unto you.

15 ¶ And God said moreover unto Moses, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, [c]The LORD God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath sent me unto you: [d]this is my name for ever, and this is my [e]memorial unto all generations.

16 Go, and gather the [f]elders of Israel together, and say unto them, The LORD God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob, appeared unto me, saying, I have surely [g]visited you, and seen that which is done to you in Egypt.

17 And I have said, [h]I will bring you up out of the affliction of Egypt, [i]unto the land of the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the pleasures of his rank among the Egyptians; to cast his lot among Abraham's seed, and to participate in their privileges, especially their relation to the promised Saviour; for the sake of which he was willing to share in the reproach and affliction, which they endured as the people of God.—Scott.

HIS FLIGHT.—The affront given him thus far proved a kindness to him; it gave him to understand that his killing of the Egyptian was discovered, and so he had time to make his escape, otherwise the wrath of Pharaoh might have surprised him, and taken him off. Information was brought to Pharaoh (and it is well if it were not brought by the Hebrew himself whom Moses reproved) of his killing the Egyptian; warrants are presently out for the apprehending of Moses; which obliged him to shift for his own safety, by flying into the land of Midian, ver. 15. Moses did this out of a prudent care of his own life.

MOSES IN MIDIAN.—Egypt accomplished him for a scholar, a gentleman, a statesman, a soldier, all which accomplishments would be afterward of use to him; but yet lacketh he one thing, in which the court of Egypt could not befriend him. He that was to do all by divine revelation, must know, by long experience, what it was to live a life of communion with God; and in this he would be greatly furthered by the solitude and retirement of a shepherd's life in Midian. By the former he was prepared to rule in Jeshurun, but by the latter he was prepared to converse with God in Mount Horeb, near which mount he had spent much of his time.—Henry.

CHAP. III. THE BUSH.—"God called to him out of the midst of the bush;" and he said, I AM THAT I AM. With what propriety can this language be used, in a revelation expressly intended to instruct men in the knowledge and worship of the true God, and to withdraw them from idolatry of every kind; if we do not allow the doctrine of the co-equality and deity of the Son of God, and that he is the speaker in this place?—Fire is a scriptural emblem of the divine holiness and justice; of that vengeance which, in his righteous indignation, God inflicts on sinners; of the afflictions and trials by which he proves and purifies his people, whether immediately, or by instruments; and even of that baptism of the Holy Ghost, by which the dross of sinful affections is consumed, and the soul transformed into its own nature and image.—This fire was seen in a bush, not in a cedar. A bramble or thorn bush is prickly, and useless except for fuel, but easily and speedily burnt; yet the bush was not consumed! The emblem was immediately intended to describe the state of Israel in Egypt; their meanness and worthlessness, their extreme distress, and their marvellous preservation by the power and presence of God; but Israel was in this a type of the church, exposed to persecutions; that of a believer, grievously harassed by temptations and afflictions. It has also been thought, that the fire in the bush represented the manner in which the law would be given from the adjacent mountain; the nature of that law as given to sinners: and the deliverance of the people from the destruction to which they were thus exposed.—Scott.

THE COMMISSION.—The commission he gives to Moses in order hereunto, is given us, ver. 10. He is not only sent as a prophet to Israel, to assure them that they should speedily be delivered, (even that had been a great favour,) but he is sent as an ambassador to Pharaoh, to treat with him, or rather as a herald at arms, to demand their discharge, and to denounce war in case of refusal; and he is sent as a prince to Israel, to conduct and command them: thus is he taken from "following the ewes great with young," to a pastoral office much more noble, as David, Psal. lxxviii. 71. Note, God is the Fountain of power; and the powers that be are ordained of him as he pleases. The same hand that now fetched a shepherd out of a desert, to be the planter of a Jewish church, afterward fetched fishermen from their ships, to be the planters of the Christian church, "That the excellency of the power might be of God."—Henry.

THE GREAT NAME.—I AM THAT I AM; (or I WILL BE THAT I WILL BE,) signifies, I am he that exists, and implies, self-existence, independence, unchangeableness, incomprehensibility, eternity and consummate perfection. "I am, and there is none else beside me." All else have their being from God, and are entirely dependent on him.—There is a majestic simplicity and expressive dignity in this language, which disgraces beneath contempt the high-sounding pompous titles, which mortals have been proud to arrogate to themselves.—JEHOVAH, (a name of similar signification,) thus distinguished himself from the idols of the nations, which are nothing in the world; and from all creatures, which have only a derived, dependent, mutable, existence in him and from him. Thus he proposed himself as the only object of his people's worship, the sure foundation of their hopes, and the all-sufficient fountain of their felicity. I AM THAT I AM. Not I was, but I am, and will be. With him past, present, and to come, are all one. Let us not forget him, whom the apostle declares to be, "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever:" whom another apostle introduces saying, "I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last;" and who dwelling in human flesh, said, with a noble disregard to the rules of human language, "Before Abraham was I AM." This evident assumption of this title, I AM THAT I AM, the unbelieving Jews at that day fully understood, and for it attempted to stone him; though modern unbelievers cannot, or will not, perceive it. There is no doubt, however, but the speaker is the same in both places; for "no man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him."—When the Lord explained "I AM," as all that exists,

AND Moses answered, and said, But, behold, [a]they will not believe me, nor hearken unto my voice: for they will say, The LORD hath not appeared unto thee.

2 And the LORD said unto him, What is that in thine hand? And he said, [b]A rod.[1]

3 And he said, Cast it on the ground; and he cast it on the ground, and [c]it became a serpent: and Moses fled from before it.

4 And the LORD said unto Moses, [d]Put forth thine hand, and take it by the tail. [e]And he put forth his hand, and caught it, and it became a rod in his hand.

5 That [f]they may believe that [g]the LORD God of their fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath appeared unto thee.

6 ¶ And the LORD said furthermore unto him,[2] Put now thine hand into thy bosom; and he put his hand into his bosom; and when he took it out, behold, his hand was [h]leprous as snow.[3]

7 And he said, Put thine hand into thy bosom again: and he put his hand into his bosom again, and plucked it out of his bosom, and, behold, [i]it was turned again as his other flesh.

8 And it shall come to pass, [k]if they will not believe thee, neither hearken to the voice of the first sign, that [l]they will believe the voice of the latter sign.

9 And it shall come to pass, if they will not believe also these two signs, neither hearken unto thy voice, that thou shalt take of the water of the river, and pour it upon the dry land: and the water, which thou takest out of the river, *shall become [m]blood upon the dry land.

10 ¶ And Moses said unto the LORD, O my Lord, I am not [†]eloquent, neither [‡]heretofore, nor since thou hast spoken unto thy servant: but I am slow [n]of speech, and of a slow tongue.[4]

11 And the LORD said unto him, [o]Who hath made man's mouth? or who maketh the dumb, or deaf, or the seeing, or the blind? have not I the LORD?

12 Now therefore go, and [p]I will be with thy mouth, and teach thee what thou shalt say.

13 And he said, O my Lord, [q]send, I pray thee, by the hand of him whom thou [§]wilt send.

14 And [r]the anger of the LORD was kindled against Moses; and he said, Is not Aaron the Levite thy brother? I know that he can speak well. And also, behold, [s]he cometh forth to meet thee: and when he seeth thee, he will be glad in his heart.

15 And thou shalt speak unto him, [t]and put words in his mouth: [u]and I will be with thy mouth and with his mouth, and [x]will teach you what ye shall do.

16 And he shall be thy spokesman unto the people: and he shall be, even [y]he shall be to thee instead of a mouth, and thou shalt be to him instead of God.

17 And thou shalt take [z]this rod in thine hand, wherewith thou shalt do signs.

18 ¶ And Moses went and returned to [‖]Jethro his father-in-law, and said unto him, [a]Let me go, I pray thee, and return unto my brethren which are in Egypt, [b]and see whether they be yet alive. And Jethro said to Moses, [c]Go in peace.

19 And the LORD said unto Moses in Midian, Go, return into Egypt: [d]for all the men are dead which sought thy life.

20 And Moses took his wife, and his sons, and set them upon an ass, and he returned to the land of Egypt. And Moses took [e]the rod of God in his hand.

21 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, When thou goest to return into Egypt, see that thou do all those wonders before Pharaoh, which I have put in thine hand: but [f]I

[3] It was necessary that Moses should be furnished with all these powers, because he came with an unusual commission, which would not have been credited unless confirmed by such extraordinary proof. All the prophets after him did not work miracles, which were necessary only when some great change was to be effected in the world; and this was the case now at the deliverance of the Israelites from Egypt. After this, they were to be put into a new form and order by a body of peculiar laws, both civil and religious. And when these laws were notoriously violated, God was pleased, by such wonders as Moses wrought, to turn their hearts back again, as he did in the days of Elijah. (1 Kings xviii. 37).—PATRICK.

you" it was intended to give authority to the message, and to ensure the accomplishment of his purpose, by his incomprehensible power and perfection.

COMPENSATION.—The Israelites were directed to borrow, or rather to ask, of the Egyptians, their richest furniture and ornaments; and he who is the great proprietor of all things, and giveth to all men as he pleases, seeing the Egyptians enriched by oppressing the Israelites, thus constrained them to refund, and to pay them the wages which their labour justly deserved.—The word borrowed suggests the idea of fraud in the transaction; which the original word does not imply. It means to ask, whether as a gift, or a loan.—Scott.

CHAP. IV. THE MIRACLE.—The rod in his hand is made the subject of a miracle, a double miracle; it is but thrown out of his hand, and it becomes a serpent; he resumes it, and it becomes a rod again, ver. 2—4. Now, 1. Here was a divine power manifested in the change itself, that a dry stick should be turned into a living serpent, a lively one, so formidable a one, that Moses himself, on whom, it should seem, it turned in some threatening manner, "fled from before it," though we may suppose, in that desert, serpents were no strange things to him; but what was produced miraculously was always the best and strongest of the kind, as the water turned to wine: and then that this living serpent should be turned into a dry stick again, this was the Lord's doing. 2. Here was an honour put upon Moses, that this change was wrought, upon his throwing it down and taking it up, without any spell, or charm, or incantation. There was a direct tendency in it to convince the children of Israel that Moses was indeed sent of of God to do what he did, ver. 5. Miracles were for signs to them that believe not, 1 Cor. xiv. 22. His hand itself is next made the subject of a miracle; he puts it once into his bosom, and takes it out leprous; he puts it again into the same place, and takes it out well, ver. 6, 7. This signified, 1. That Moses, by the power of God, should bring sore diseases upon Egypt, and that, at his prayer, they should be removed. 2. That whereas the Israelites in Egypt had become leprous, polluted by sin, and almost consumed by oppression, (a leper is "as one dead," Num. xii. 12,) by being taken into the bosom of Moses, they should be cleansed and cured, and all their grievances redressed. 3. That Moses was not to work miracles by his own power, nor for his own praise, but by the power of God, and for his glory: the leprous hand of Moses does for ever exclude boasting.—Henry.

RELUCTANCE.—Moses supposed that great eloquence would be requisite, both to persuade Israel and to plead before Pharaoh; and he objected that in the Egyptian court he had, at all former times, been defective in the gift of a ready and graceful elocution; and that even since the Lord had spoken to him, he had experienced no alteration in this respect. We read, however, that he "was mighty 'in words,'" as well as deeds: and so was St. Paul, though he affected no eloquence, and was deemed by some "in speech contemptible." They both could speak with energy and to the purpose, though not with the enticing words and delusive charms of human oratory.—Scott.

AARON JOINED WITH MOSES.—God joins Aaron in commission with him: he promises that Aaron should meet him opportunely, and that he would be glad to see him, they having not seen one another (it is likely) for many years, ver. 14. He directs him to make use of Aaron as his "spokesman," ver. 16. God might have laid Moses wholly aside, for his backwardness to be employed; but he considered his frame, and ordered him an assistant. Observe, 1. That two are better than one, Eccl. iv. 9. God will have his "two witnesses," Rev. xi. 3, that out of their mouths every word may be established. 2. Aaron was the brother of Moses, divine wisdom so ordering it, that their natural affection one to another might strengthen their union in the joint execution of their commission. The tongue of Aaron, with the head and heart of Moses, would make one completely fit for this embassy.—Henry.

DANGER OF MOSES AT THE INN.—Either the Lord appeared to his servant, by some external token of his presence, as if about immediately to slay him; or, as some suppose, he inflicted on him a sudden and very dangerous disease. Moses seems, however, to have understood that he was rebuked for neglecting to circumcise his son; probably from regard to Zipporah, who was averse to it. It is supposed that circumcision was in use among the Midianites, as descended from Abraham; and that Zipporah had merely induced Moses to defer the performance of it beyond the appointed time, on account of the journey, or on some other pretence. But he was raised up for an extraordinary service, and it was proper he should set an example of exact obedience in his own conduct, and therefore he was thus sharply rebuked. As he was either under great perturbation of mind, or dangerously ill, Zipporah immediately circumcised her son, with a knife made of a sharp flint, such knives being common in some countries; and this may intimate the haste in which the rite was performed. The words which she spake when she laid the foreskin of her son at the feet of Moses, are differently understood: some think that she rashly reproached both him and his religion, which required this bloody ordinance; but others are of opinion, that she spake in great affection, as having anew espoused him, by circumcising her son; seeing the blood shed in that rite had been the means of restoring him to her again. For when it had been performed, the Lord delivered Moses, and allowed him to prosecute his journey.—Some interpret the last clause, of will harden his heart,[5] that he shall not let the people go.

22 And thou shalt say unto Pharaoh, Thus saith the LORD, [g]Israel is my son, even my first-born.

23 And I say unto thee, Let my son go, that he may serve me: and if thou refuse to let him go, behold, [h]I will slay thy son, even thy first-born.

24 ¶ And it came to pass by the way in the inn, that [i]the LORD met him, and [k]sought to kill him.

25 Then Zipporah took [l]a sharp *stone,[6] and cut off the foreskin of her son, and [†]cast it at his feet, and said, Surely a bloody husband art thou to me.

26 So he let him go: then she said, A bloody husband thou art, because of the circumcision.

[5] When God is said to harden men's hearts, it is not to be imagined that He secretly influences their wills, or suggests any stubborn resolutions to their minds. [6] The knives of stone, used by the Jews in circumcision, were not enjoined by the law; but the use was founded either on custom, convenience, or experience, that instruments of this kind were less dangerous than those of metal. Zipporah used a stone to circumcise her son. Joshua did the same at Gilgal, (Josh. v. 2). The Egyptians used knives of stone to open dead bodies that were to be embalmed. The Oriental Jews commonly use them for the circumcision of their children, being not unlike flints for guns; but the Western Jews use a razor.—CALMET.

6 ¶ And Pharaoh commanded the same day [i]the taskmasters of the people, and their officers, saying,

7 Ye shall no more give the people straw[1] to make brick, as heretofore: let them go and gather straw for themselves.

8 And the tale of the bricks which they did make heretofore, ye shall lay upon them; ye shall not diminish ought thereof: for they be idle; therefore they cry, saying, Let us go and sacrifice to our God.

Moses sending Zipporah away, and translate it, "So he let her go:" and it is probable that on this occasion she went back to Jethro for a time.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—How indisposed are men to believe the testimony of God! Whether he denounce vengeance upon obstinate offenders, or promise acceptance, assistance, and salvation to the returning sinner, they are always prone to question his veracity; and to act as if his word could not absolutely be depended on, or was not likely to be accomplished! Thus some are hardened in presumption, others sink into despondency, and others are discouraged and faint-hearted in all their endeavours.—But the Lord, being slow to anger, and of great mercy, deals not with us according to the multitude of our sins; else the strongest believer upon earth, instead of being saved by his faith might be righteously condemned for his unbelief. When we shrink from trouble and self-denial, or the reproach or danger of any service; self-love soon suggests some excuse, which appears sufficient to us, however trivial it may be in the judgment of others: and it is no uncommon case for those, who have been rebuked for rashness and precipitation, afterwards to become timidly negligent of their evident duty. But let unbelief, sloth, and cowardice, start ever so many objections, against our doing the duty of that station to which it hath pleased God to call us; his word furnishes us with answers to them all: and the assurance of his assistance and protection should in every case fully satisfy our minds.—When God gives revelations of new truths, or introduces new dispensations, materially differing from all which have preceded, he always sets his seal to them, and enables his servants to authenticate their mission by some conclusive sign: but they, who are employed to enforce the old authenticated revelation, need not such testimonials; as both their character and doctrines must be tried by the oracles of God, to which they appeal.—Scott.

CHAP. V. FIRST DEMAND.—The demand is piously bold; ver. 1, "Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Let my people go." Moses in treating with the elders of Israel, is directed to call God "the God of their fathers;" but, in treating with Pharaoh, they call him "the God of Israel," and it is the first time we find him called so in scripture; he is called "the God of Israel," the person, Gen. xxxiii. 20, but here it is Israel, the people. They are just beginning to be formed into a people, when God is called their God. Moses, it is likely, was directed to call him so, at least, it might be inferred from chap. iv. 22, "Israel is my son." In this great name they deliver their message, "Let my people go." 1. They were God's people, and therefore Pharaoh ought not to detain them in bondage. Note, God will own his own people, though ever so poor and despicable, and will find a time to plead their cause. "The Israelites are slaves in Egypt, but they are my people," says God, "and I will not suffer them to be always trampled upon." See Isa. lii. 4, 5. 2. He expected services and sacrifices from them, and therefore they must have leave to go where they could freely exercise their religion, without giving offence to, or receiving offence from, the Egyptians.—Henry.

PHARAOH'S IMPIOUS REPLY.—Pharaoh had probably heard some general report of JEHOVAH, as claiming, by his servants, to be "the only living and true God," the Creator and Governor of the whole earth: but he and his predecessors had long tyrannized over his professed worshippers; and as they seemed to have derived so little advantage from his favour, he concluded that he had as little to fear from his wrath. He therefore treated the message delivered to him with contemptuous indifference, ranking JEHOVAH among, or rather beneath, the gods of the nations, and especially the gods of Egypt.—His language is very emphatical; "Shall I, who as king of Egypt lord it over Israel, obey the God of Israel? No, I scorn to regard him!"—Pharaoh had no knowledge of the Lord, and therefore he set him at defiance. He did not desire to know him; being so transported with anger, that he would not examine their commission, but only resolved, that he would not obey it.

SLAVERY DOUBLED.—Pharaoh therefore ordered them to their burdens, as well as the elders who attended them: and it must be ascribed to a divine interposition, that he did not send them to a dungeon, or to execution; considering his character and the nature of their message.—He also represented them as doing a public injury to Egypt, and endangering the peace of the community, by taking so large a multitude off from their work, and putting thoughts of another kind into their minds. Some suppose that the straw was cut short, and mingled with the clay in making bricks; the nature of the clay, and the imperfection of their skill, requiring it: and others suppose that they burnt the bricks with it.—But in many places straw is now used in covering the clay before the bricks are formed, and covering the bricks before they are burnt, to defend them from the burning sun or heavy rains; and indeed something of this kind is indispensably necessary. Though the fruits of Israel's industry were many and great, Pharaoh took it for granted, without examining, that the people were not fully employed: and too many of the rich and powerful imitate his example, and act in such matters upon report or conjecture, without inquiry. He therefore determined to fill their hands with work, that they might have somewhat else to think on, than such vain or lying words, as he supposed those of Moses and Aaron to be. A large proportion of the people being employed in gathering stubble, part of which they were constrained to fetch from a great distance; it was impossible that the rest could furnish the usual quantity of bricks. THEN the LORD said unto Moses, [a]Now shalt thou see what I will do to Pharaoh: for [b]with a strong hand shall he let them go, and with a strong hand shall he [c]drive them out of his land.

2 And God spake unto Moses, and said unto him, [d]I am *the LORD:

3 And I appeared unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, by the name of [e]God Almighty, but by my name [f]JEHOVAH was I not known to them.

4 And I have also [g]established my covenant with them, to give them the land of Canaan, [h]the land of their pilgrimage, wherein they were strangers.

5 And I have also heard the [i]groaning of the children of Israel, whom the Egyptians keep in bondage; and [k]I have remembered my covenant.

6 Wherefore say unto the children of Israel, [l]I am the LORD, and [m]I will bring you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians, and I will rid you out of their bondage, and I will [n]redeem you with a stretched out arm, and with great judgments.

7 And I [o]will take you to me for a people, and [p]I will be to you a God: and ye shall know that I am the LORD your God, which bringeth you out [q]from under the burdens of the Egyptians.

8 And I will bring you in unto the land concerning the which I did [t]swear [r]to give it to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob: and I will give it you for an heritage: [s]I am the LORD.

9 And Moses spake so unto the children of Israel: but they [t]hearkened not unto Moses, for [u]anguish of spirit, and for cruel bondage.

10 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

11 Go in, [v]speak unto Pharaoh king of Egypt, that he let the children of Israel go out of his land.

12 And Moses spake before the LORD, saying, Behold, [x]the children of Israel have not hearkened unto me; how then shall Pharaoh hear me, who am of [y]uncircumcised lips?

13 And the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, and [z]gave them a charge unto the children of Israel, and unto Pharaoh king of Egypt; to bring the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt.

14 ¶ These be [a]the heads[1] of their fathers' houses: [b]The sons of Reuben the first-born of Israel; Hanoch, and Pallu, Hezron, and Carmi: [c]these be the families of Reuben.

15 ¶ And the [d]sons of Simeon;[2] Jemuel, and Jamin, and Ohad, and Jachan, and Zohar, and Shaul the son of a Canaanitish woman: these are the families of Simeon.

16 ¶ And these are the names of the [e]sons of Levi, according to their generations; Gershon, and Kohath, and Merari: and the years of the life of Levi were [f]an hundred thirty and seven years.

17 The [g]sons of Gershon; Libni, and Shimi, according to their families.

18 And the [h]sons of Kohath; Amram, and Izhar, and Hebron, and Uzziel: [i]and the years of the life of Kohath were an hundred thirty and three years.

19 And the [k]sons of Merari; Mahali, and Mushi: these are the families of Levi, according to their generations.

20 And [l]Amram took him Jochebed his father's sister to wife; and she bare him Aaron and Moses: [m]and the years of the life of Amram were an hundred and thirty and seven years.

21 ¶ And the sons of Izhar; [n]Korah, and Nepheg, and Zithri.

22 And the [o]sons of Uzziel; Mishael, and Elzaphan, and Zithri.

23 And Aaron took him [p]Elisheba, daughter of [q]Amminadab, sister of Naashon, to wife; and she bare him [r]Nadab, and Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar.

24 And the sons of [s]Korah; Assir, and [t]Elkanah, and Abiasaph: these are the families of the Korhites.

25 And Eleazar Aaron's son took him one of the daughters of Putiel to wife; and she bare him [u]Phinehas: these are [x]the heads of the fathers of the Levites, according to their families.

The reflections which had been cast upon him by the officers so disturbed his mind, that he forgot himself to such a degree as to ask these unbecoming questions, and to complain that God had done nothing to fulfil his promise of deliverance to his people.—PATRICK.

two days a deficiency was found, the Israelitish officers, whom the taskmasters had placed over their brethren to superintend their labours, were severely beaten; and thus an attempt was made to drive them, in their own defence, to join in this cruel oppression!—Scott.

CHAP. VI. RENEWED PROMISE.—JEHOVAH, the righteous and compassionate patron of the oppressed, and the covenanted friend of Israel, was absolutely engaged and determined to put forth his omnipotence, to rescue them from bondage; as a man stretches forth his arm, and employs his whole force, to effect any thing about which he is in earnest. And as this had respect to the redemption of the promised Saviour, and would also be accomplished at the price of desolating Egypt; the deliverance was spoken of in language taken from the ransoming of slaves and captives. He therefore engaged to take them under his especial care and protection, and to maintain his truth and worship among them; while other nations were suffered to walk in their own ways. "To know the LORD," is used in Scripture, for that knowledge of the being, perfection, power, justice, goodness, and faithfulness of God, which is the effect of experience; whether of his mercy and love, or of his righteous vengeance. But, to know him as "the LORD our God" implies either a spiritual relation to him as our Friend and Father, or at least those religious advantages which are the outward signs of so great a blessing. Israel would know that he was the Lord, in the experience of his powerful and faithful loving kindness, and might thus discover that he was justly entitled to all that love and service which his law required.—Scott.

THE SECOND COMMISSION.—God sends Moses the second time to Pharaoh, ver. 11, upon the same errand as before, to command him, at his peril, that he "let the children of Israel go." Note, God repeats his precepts, before he begins his punishments. Those that have often been called in vain to leave their sins, yet must be called again and again, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear, Ezek. iii. 11. God is said to hew sinners by his prophets, (Hos. vi. 5,) which denotes the repetition of the strokes; "How often would I have gathered you!" Moses makes objections, as one discouraged, and willing to give up the cause, ver. 12. He pleads, (1.) The unlikelihood of Pharaoh's hearing; "'Behold, the children of Israel have not hearkened unto me,' they give no heed, no credit to what I have said; how then can I expect that Pharaoh should hear me?" [illegible] the anguish of their spirit makes them deaf to that which would compose [illegible] his pride, and insolence make [illegible] If God's professing people [illegible] the professed enemy should?

Note, The frowardness and untractableness of those that are called Christians greatly discourage ministers, and make them ready to despair of success, in dealing with those that are atheistical and profane. We would be instrumental to unite Israelites, to refine and purify them, to comfort and pacify them; but, if they hearken not to us, how shall we prevail with those in whom we cannot pretend to such an interest? But with God all things are possible. (2.) He pleads the unreadiness and infirmity of his own speaking; "I am of uncircumcised lips;" it is repeated, ver. 30. He was conscious to himself that he had not the gift of utterance, had no command of language; his talent did not lie that way. This objection God had given a sufficient answer to before, and therefore he ought not to have insisted upon it, for the sufficiency of grace can supply the defects of nature at any time. Note, Though our infirmities ought to humble us, yet they ought not to discourage us from doing our best in any service we have to do for God. His strength is made perfect in our weakness.—Henry.

GENEALOGY.—Before the historian proceeded with his narrative, he digressed from the subject, to give some account of the persons to whom this charge was given. Reuben was the first-born, and accordingly is first mentioned, to mark the accomplishment of Jacob's prediction; seeing he was passed by, and the deliverer did not spring from him. For the same reason Simeon also is mentioned, who was the next in seniority: yet, the deliverer of Israel did not descend from him; but from Levi, the third son, who, though he had been disgraced, began now to be dignified. Levi, though older than Joseph, survived him above twenty years: and his son Kohath attained nearly, and his grandson Amram fully, to the same age. It is not recorded how long the other sons of Jacob lived. Moses was no more than a hundred and twenty when he died: yet, his age was deemed extraordinary; and he fixes the term of man's life to seventy or eighty years, (Ps. xc. 10;) which from about that time have in general been its appointed bounds. According to the Septuagint and the Jewish traditions, Jochebed was cousin, not aunt, to Amram: but this construction was probably put on the original word, to save the credit of Moses and Aaron; because the marriage of an aunt is afterwards forbidden. (Lev. xviii. 12—14.) For, the meaning of the word here used is fixed by another passage, in which it is said. "The name of Amram's wife was Jochebed, the daughter of Levi, whom her mother bare to Levi in Egypt." (Num. xxvi. 59.) It is probable that Jochebed was born when Levi was old, and was as young as Amram.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—We are most likely to prosper in our endeavours to glorify God and serve our generation, when we are convinced by experience, that we can do nothing of ourselves: for, when we can truly say, that our whole dependence is placed on the Lord, and our expectation is only from him—we are prepared to [illegible]

Moses is encouraged to go to Pharaoh, 1. Aaron's rod turned into a serpent, 10. Pharaoh's heart is hardened, 13: The river is turned into blood, 19.

AND the LORD said unto Moses, [a]See, I have made thee [b]a god[1] to Pharaoh: and Aaron thy brother shall be thy prophet.

2 Thou shalt speak [c]all that I command thee: and Aaron thy brother shall speak unto Pharaoh, that he send the children of Israel out of his land.

3 And [d]I will harden Pharaoh's heart, and [e]multiply my signs and my wonders in the land of Egypt.

4 But Pharaoh shall not hearken unto you, [f]that I may lay my hand upon Egypt, and bring forth mine [g]armies, and my people, the children of Israel, out of the land of Egypt, [h]by great judgments.

5 And the Egyptians [i]shall know that I am the LORD, when I [k]stretch forth mine hand upon Egypt, and bring out the children of Israel from among them.

6 And Moses and Aaron did [l]as the LORD commanded them, so did they.

7 And Moses was [m]fourscore[2] years old, and Aaron fourscore and three years old, when they spake unto Pharaoh.

8 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

9 When Pharaoh shall speak unto you, saying, [n]Shew a miracle for you: then thou shalt say unto Aaron, [o]Take thy rod, and cast it before Pharaoh, and it shall become a serpent.

10 ¶ And Moses and Aaron went in unto Pharaoh, and they did so as the LORD had commanded: and Aaron cast down his rod before Pharaoh, and before his servants, and [p]it became a serpent.

11 Then Pharaoh also called the [q]wise men, and the sorcerers: now the magicians of Egypt, [r]they also did in like manner with their enchantments.

12 For they cast down every man his rod, and they became serpents: [s]but Aaron's rod swallowed up their rods.

13 And [t]he hardened Pharaoh's heart, that he hearkened not unto them; as the LORD had said.

In Egypt are reservoirs of water higher than the Nile, which fill themselves when the river rises, and in which the water preserves itself a long while, as in a kind of cistern. These reservoirs are of great antiquity, and no doubt as early as the days of the Pharaohs.—CALMET.

14 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Pharaoh's heart is hardened, [u]he refuseth to let the people go.

15 Get thee unto Pharaoh in the morning; lo, [x]he goeth out unto the water;[3] and thou shalt stand by the river's brink, against he come: and [y]the rod which was turned to a serpent shalt thou take in thine hand.

16 And thou shalt say unto him, [z]The LORD God of the Hebrews hath sent me unto thee, saying, [a]Let my people go, that they may [b]serve me in the wilderness: and, behold, hitherto thou wouldest not hear.

17 Thus saith the LORD, In this [c]thou shalt know that I am the LORD: behold, I will smite with the rod that is in mine hand, upon the waters which are in the river, [d]and they shall be turned to blood.

18 And [e]the fish that is in the river shall die, and the river shall stink; and the Egyptians [f]shall loathe to drink of the water of the river.

19 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, Say unto Aaron, Take thy rod, and [g]stretch out thine hand upon the waters of Egypt, upon their streams, upon their rivers, and upon their ponds, and upon all [*]their pools of water, that they may become blood: and that there may be blood throughout all the land of Egypt, both in vessels of wood, and in vessels of stone.[4]

20 And Moses and Aaron did so, as the LORD commanded: and [h]he lifted up the rod, and smote the waters that were in the river, in the sight of Pharaoh, and in the sight of his servants: and [i]all the waters that were in the river were turned to blood.

21 And [k]the fish that was in the river died: and the river stank, and the Egyptians could not drink of the water of the river: and there was blood throughout all the land of Egypt.

22 And the [l]magicians of Egypt did so with their enchantments: [m]and Pharaoh's heart was hardened, neither did he hearken unto them; as the LORD had said.

23 And Pharaoh turned and went into his house, [n]neither did he set his heart to this also.

24 And all the Egyptians digged round about the river for water to drink: [o]for they could not drink of the water of the river.

25 And [p]seven days were fulfilled after that the LORD had smitten the river.

and to record, his works of power and love, and to render him our tribute of adoring thankful praise. He therefore previously proves and humbles those whom he loves and employs, and brings them to feel, as well as acknowledge, their insufficiency: but, while he is thus mortifying their pride and ambition, Satan often takes the opportunity of tempting them to discontent, impatience, and discouragement; that "their hands may hang down and their knees wax feeble," and that they may be reluctant to the work assigned them. In such circumstances, they are apt to displease the Lord by unbelieving objections and hesitations; yet, he graciously pities and pardons them, and obviates their discouragements: and, nothing is more effectual for this purpose, than discovering to them his immutable perfection; his incomprehensible wisdom and power; his uncontrollable dominion; his condescending compassion, love, and faithfulness; and his oath and covenant, by which he hath engaged to fulfil his largest promises to his church, and to every living member of it. Calling these things to remembrance, and recollecting his wonders of old, the drooping heart revives, faith recovers strength, larger expectations are formed; and the servant of God rises superior to despondency, and patiently proceeds in the work assigned him.—Scott.

CHAP. VII. MIRACLE BEFORE THE EGYPTIAN COURT.—No doubt Pharaoh and his servants were both astonished and alarmed, when they saw Aaron's rod become a terrible serpent before them. (δρακων, Sept.) But, as magicians and sorcerers were in high repute in Egypt, being called wise men, and supposed capable of performing very extraordinary things by their skill in the occult sciences; probably Pharaoh and his courtiers endeavoured to believe, that Moses and Aaron were nothing more than two great magicians, and that the sorcerers and magicians of Egypt were able to contend with them. Accordingly, some of the most renowned among them were called in, of whom we find Jannes and Jambres were the principal: and "they also did in like manner with their enchantments;" or, "they cast down every man his rod, and they became serpents."—No doubt many of these professors of sorcery or magic were expert in legerdemain, and imposed on the spectators by various artifices; yet they who reverence the Scriptures, will hardly deny, that many of them had a real intercourse with evil spirits, and by their help actually made discoveries, and produced effects, beyond the reach of human power or sagacity.—Scott.

THE FIRST PLAGUE.—Here is the first of the ten plagues, the turning of the water into blood, which was, 1. A dreadful plague, and very grievous; the very sight of such vast rolling streams of blood, pure blood, no doubt florid and high-coloured, could not but strike a horror upon the people; much more affective were the consequences of it. Nothing more common than water; so wisely has Providence ordered it, and so kindly, that that which is so needful and serviceable to the comfort of human life should be cheap, and almost everywhere to be had: but now the Egyptians must either drink blood, or die for thirst. Fish was much of their food, Numb. xi. 5, but the changing of the waters was the death of the fish, it was a pestilence in that element; ver. 21, "The fish died." In the general deluge, they escaped, because, perhaps, they had not then contributed so much to the luxury of man as they have since; but, in this particular judgment, they perished; Ps. cv. 29, "He slew their fish;" and when another destruction of Egypt, long afterward, is threatened, the disappointment of those that make sluices and ponds for fish is particularly noticed, Isa. xix. 10. Egypt was a pleasant land, but the noisome stench of dead fish and blood, which, by degrees, would grow putrid, now rendered it very unpleasant 2. It was a righteous plague, and justly inflicted upon the Egyptians. For, (1.) Nilus, the river of Egypt, was their idol; they and their land derived so much benefit from it, that they served and worshipped it more than the Creator. (2.) They had stained the river with the blood of the Hebrew's children, and now God made that river all bloody; thus he gave them blood to drink, for they were worthy, Rev. xvi. 6. Note, Never any thirsted after blood, but, sooner or later, they had enough of it. 3. It was a significant plague; Egypt had a great dependence upon their river, Zech. xiv. 18, so that, in smiting the river, they were warned of the destruction of all the productions of their country, till it came at last to their first-born, and this red river proved a direful omen of the ruin of Pharaoh and all his forces in the Red Sea.—Henry.

OBSTINACY OF PHARAOH.—"Pharaoh's heart was hardened;" for nothing is here said concerning any interposition of God in the case. The same words are afterwards rendered, "Pharaoh's heart was hardened," ver. 22, and this accords with the subsequent words of God, "Pharaoh's heart is hardened," ver. 14, "the heart of Pharaoh became strong," (ισχυσεν, Sept.; it became bold, stout, presumptuous, unfeeling.) Probably, he had been at first alarmed, and ready to yield; but he would now say, that the magicians had produced serpents also, and that Moses and Aaron were only greater adepts in magic than they; that JEHOVAH had no concern in it; and that there was no occasion to liberate the Israelites. Thus the effect produced tended to embolden him in rebellion, and to fortify him against conviction. The Lord foresaw, and foretold, that this would be the case, and he formed his whole plan accordingly.—Scott.

hold, I will smite all thy borders with [d]frogs.

3 And the river shall bring forth frogs abundantly, which shall go up and come into thine house, and into thy bedchamber, and upon thy bed, and into the house of thy servants, and upon thy people, and into thine ovens, and into thy *kneading-troughs.

4 And the frogs shall come up both [e]on thee, and upon thy people, and upon all thy servants.

5 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, Say unto Aaron, [f]Stretch forth thine hand with thy rod over the streams, over the rivers, and over the ponds, and cause frogs to come up upon the land of Egypt.

6 And Aaron stretched out his hand over the waters of Egypt: and [g]the frogs came up, and covered the land of Egypt.

7 And [h]the magicians did so[1] with their enchantments, and brought up frogs upon the land of Egypt.

8 Then Pharaoh called for Moses and Aaron, and said, [i]Intreat the LORD, that he may take away the frogs from me, and from my people; [k]and I will let the people go, that they may do sacrifice unto the LORD.

9 And Moses said unto Pharaoh, [t]Glory over me: when shall I intreat for thee, and for thy servants, and for thy people, [‡]to destroy the frogs from thee, and thy houses, that they may remain in the river only?

10 And he said, [§]To-morrow. And he said, Be it according to thy word: that thou mayest know that [l]there is none like unto the LORD our God.

11 And [m]the frogs shall depart from thee, and from thy houses, and from thy servants, and from thy people; they shall remain in the river only.

12 And Moses and Aaron went out from Pharaoh: and Moses [n]cried unto the LORD, because of the frogs which he had brought against Pharaoh.

13 And the LORD did according to the word of Moses: and the frogs died out of the houses, out of the villages, and out of the fields.

14 And they gathered them together upon heaps: [o]and the land stank.

15 But when Pharaoh [p]saw that there was respite, [q]he hardened his heart, and hearkened not unto them; as the LORD had said.

16 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Say unto Aaron, [r]Stretch out thy rod, and smite the dust of the land, that it may become lice throughout all the land of Egypt.[2]

17 And they did so; for Aaron stretched out his hand with his rod, and smote the dust of the earth, and it became [s]lice, in man and in beast: all the dust of the land became lice throughout all the land of Egypt.

18 And the magicians did so with their enchantments to bring forth lice, but [t]they could not: so there were lice upon man, and upon beast.

19 Then the magicians said unto Pharaoh, [u]This is the finger of God: [x]and Pharaoh's heart was hardened, and he hearkened not unto them; as the LORD had said.

20 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Rise up early in the morning, and stand before Pharaoh; [y]lo, he cometh forth to the water; and say unto him, Thus saith the LORD, Let my people go, that they may serve me.

21 Else if thou wilt not let my people go, behold, I will send [z]swarms of flies upon thee, and upon thy servants, and upon thy people, and into thy houses: and the houses of the Egyptians shall be full of [a]swarms of flies, and also the ground whereon they are.

22 And I will [b]sever in that day the land of Goshen, in which my people dwell, that no swarms of flies shall be there;[3] to the end thou mayest know, [c]that I am the LORD in the [d]midst of the earth.

23 And I will put [*]a division between my people and thy people; [†]to-morrow shall this sign be.

24 And the LORD did so: and [e]there came a grievous swarm of flies[4] into the house of Pharaoh, and into his servants' houses, and into all the land of Egypt: [f]the land was [‡]corrupted by reason of the swarm of flies.[5]

25 And Pharaoh [g]called for Moses and for Aaron, and said, Go ye, sacrifice to your God in the land.

26 And Moses said, [h]It is not meet so to do; for [i]we shall sacrifice the abomination of the Egyptians to the LORD our God: lo, shall we sacrifice [k]the abomination of the Egyptians before their eyes, and will they not stone us?

27 We will go [l]three days' journey into the wilderness, and sacrifice to the LORD our God, [m]as he shall command us.

28 And Pharaoh said, [n]I will let you go, that ye may sacrifice to the LORD your God in the wilderness; only ye shall not go very far away: [o]intreat for me.

29 And Moses said, Behold, I go out from thee, and I will intreat the LORD, that the swarms of flies may depart from Pharaoh, from his servants, and from his people, [p]to-morrow: but let not Pharaoh [q]deal deceitfully any more, in not letting the people go to sacrifice to the LORD.

30 And Moses went out from Pharaoh, and intreated the LORD.

31 And the LORD did according to the word of Moses; and he removed the swarms

[2] Of this third plague God gave Pharaoh no warning aforehand, as he did of the other two, but hastened his punishment as his sins increased; and bringeth this plague from the earth, which was nearer unto them than the waters. So of the fourth and fifth plagues, God gave the warning beforehand, but not of the sixth (Exod. ix. 8); again, of the seventh and eighth plagues, he warned them, but not of the ninth (Exod. x. 21); and at the tenth plague, the Israelites are sent away (Exod. xii.)—AINSWORTH.

case he continue obstinate: "If thou refuse to let them go," it is at thy peril, ver. 1, 2. Note, God does not punish men for sin, unless they persist in it. "If he turn not, he will whet his sword;" Psal. vii. 12; which implies favour, if he turn. So here, "If thou refuse, I will smite thy borders;" intimating, that, if Pharaoh complied, the controversy should immediately be dropped. The plague threatened in case of refusal, was formidably extensive; frogs were to make such an inroad upon them, as should make them uneasy in their houses, in their beds, and at their tables; they should neither eat, nor drink, nor sleep in quietness, but, wherever they were, should be infested by them, ver. 3, 4. Note, 1. God's curse upon a man will pursue him wherever he goes, and lie heavy upon him, whatever he does; see Deut. xxviii. 16, &c. 2. There is no avoiding divine judgments, when they invade with commission. Pharaoh not regarding the alarm, nor being at all inclined to yield to the summons, Aaron is ordered to draw out the forces, and with his outstretched arm and rod to give the signal of battle. Dictum, factum—no sooner said than done; the host is mustered, and, under the conduct and command of an invisible power, shoals of frogs invade the land, and the Egyptians, with all their art, and all their might, cannot check their progress, or so much as give them a diversion. Compare this with that prophecy of an army of locusts, and caterpillars, Joel ii. 2, &c., and Isa. xxxiv. 16, 17. Frogs came up, at the divine call, and "covered the land."—Henry.

THIRD PLAGUE—LICE.—Had the Lord sent a vast number of lions and tigers to devour the Egyptians, or armies of victorious enemies to desolate the land; Pharaoh, though crushed, would have appeared, in his own eyes, and in the eyes of others, of some consequence: but it was inconceivably humiliating, and rendered him extremely contemptible, to be thus vanquished by such insignificant and despicable creatures as frogs, lice, and flies, which yet he could neither escape, nor oppose, nor endure.—This judgment seems to have been sent without any previous warning; as an awful declaration, how greatly the Lord was provoked by the recent instance of Pharaoh's prevarication and obstinacy. The Lord allowed the magicians to proceed, till his righteous purposes were answered, and then they could do nothing; to convince them that they had no power against Moses, but "what was given them from above," or exercised by the permission of God. Some suppose, from the concluding part of the verse, that they at length attempted to remove the plague, but could not. Probably the lice harassed the magicians, as well as others; and this extorted from them a confession that it was "the finger of God."—Scott.

FOURTH PLAGUE—FLIES.—The Egyptians and Hebrews were to be remarkably distinguished in this plague, ver. 22, 23. It is probable that this distinction had not been so manifest and observable, in any of the foregoing plagues, as it was to be in this. Thus, as the plague of lice was made more convincing than any before it, by running the magicians around, so was this, by the distinction made between the Egyptians and the Hebrews. Pharaoh must be made to know that "God is the Lord in the midst of the earth;" and, by this, it will be known beyond dispute. 1. Swarms of flies, which seem to us to fly at random, shall be manifestly under the conduct of an intelligent mind, while they are above the direction of any man. "Hither they shall go," says Moses, "and thither they shall not come;" and the performance is punctually according to this appointment, and both, compared, amount to a demonstration, that he that said it, and he that did it, was the same, even a Being of infinite power and wisdom. 2. The servants and worshippers of the great Jehovah shall be preserved from sharing in the common calamities of the place they live in; so that the plague which annoys all their neighbours shall not approach them; and this shall be an incontestable proof that "God is the Lord in the midst of the earth." Observe how it is repeated, ver. 23, "I will put a division between my people and thy people." Note, The Lord knows them that are his, and will make it appear, perhaps in this world, certainly in the other, that he has set them apart for himself. A day will come, when he shall "return, and discern between the righteous and the wicked," Mal. iii. 18; "the sheep and the goats," Matt. xxv. 32; Ezek. xxxiv. 17, though now intermixed. It was inflicted, the day after it was threatened; "there came a grievous swarm of flies," ver. 24, flies of divers sorts, in being "Beel-zebub, the god of flies;" but here it is proved that, even in that, he is a pretender, and a usurper; for, even with swarms of flies, God fights against his kingdom, and prevails.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—How dangerous is it to provoke that God, who hath such a variety of ways, in which he can inflict dreadful punishment on his rebellious creatures! he can employ the most despicable insects as formidable executioners of his vengeance; he can turn all our pleasures into loathing, our comeliness and decorations into deformity and corruption, and pour contempt on all our pride and self-importance! Nor is there any resistance, or escape, from his tremendous indignation. Yet, he still continues merciful: he is ready to forgive every sinner who submits; and he pursues with vengeance such alone as persist in their rebellion. But let us not mistake transient relentings, or hasty determinations of amendment, for that unreserved submission which the word of God requires. Under the weight of incumbent affliction, and the dreadful expectation of still heavier sufferings, the proudest and hardest heart feels some pangs of remorse: the despised and hated servants of the Lord may then perhaps be called for;

7 And Pharaoh sent, and, behold, there was not one of the cattle of the Israelites dead. And [g]the heart of Pharaoh was hardened, and he did not let the people go.

8 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, and unto Aaron, [h]Take to you handfuls of ashes of the furnace,[1] and let Moses sprinkle it toward the heaven in the sight of Pharaoh.

9 And it shall become small dust in all the land of Egypt, and shall be [i]a boil breaking forth with blains upon man, and upon beast, throughout all the land of Egypt.

10 And they took ashes of the furnace, and stood before Pharaoh, and Moses sprinkled it up toward heaven: and it became a boil breaking forth with blains[2] upon man, and upon beast.

11 And the magicians [k]could not stand before Moses,[3] because of the boils: for the boil was upon the magicians, and upon all the Egyptians.

12 And [l]the LORD hardened the heart of Pharaoh, and he hearkened not unto them; as the LORD had spoken unto Moses.

[3] We read of no attempt made by the magicians, since the plague of lice, which they could not counterfeit, to vie in working miracles with Moses and Aaron. Still they seem to have remained with Pharaoh, and to have endeavoured to fix him in the resolution not to let Israel go. But now the plague seized on them, as well as on the rest of the Egyptians, which perfectly confounded them, so that they could not stand before Moses, or look him in the face.—PATRICK.

[4] Hail in some countries is a very common production of the atmosphere: in Egypt it is rare, because the sultry nature of the climate does not permit its formation. We see, then, a threefold interference of Providence in this miracle; 1*st*, That hail should be formed. 2*dly*, That it should happen to-morrow, at a time prefixed: no human power being able to direct the atmosphere to this or any other effect. 3*dly*, That in a certain district these occurrences did not take place.—SCRIPT. 14 For I will at this time send [n]all my plagues upon thine heart, and upon thy servants, and upon thy people: [o]that thou mayest know that there is none like me in all the earth.

15 For now I will stretch out my hand, [p]that I may smite thee and thy people with pestilence: and thou shalt be [q]cut off from the earth.

16 And in very deed [r]for this cause have I [s]raised thee up, [t]for to shew in thee my power; and [u]that my name may be declared throughout all the earth.

17 As yet [v]exaltest thou thyself against my people, that thou wilt not let them go?

18 Behold, [x]to-morrow about this time, [y]I will cause it to rain a very grievous [4]hail, such as hath not been in Egypt since the foundation thereof even until now.

19 Send therefore now, [a]and gather thy cattle, and all that thou hast in the field: for upon every man and beast which shall be found in the field, and shall not be brought home, the hail shall come down upon them, and they shall die.

20 He that [b]feared the word of the LORD among the servants of Pharaoh, made his servants and his cattle flee into the houses.

21 And he that [c]regarded not the word of the LORD, left his servants and his cattle in the field.

22 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, [d]Stretch forth thine hand toward heaven, that there may be hail in all the land of Egypt; upon man, and upon beast, and upon every herb of the field, throughout the land of Egypt.

23 And Moses stretched forth his rod toward heaven, and [e]the LORD sent thunder and [f]hail, and the fire ran along upon the ground; and the LORD rained hail upon the land of Egypt.

24 So there was hail, and fire mingled with the hail, very grievous, such as there was [g]none like it in all the land of Egypt, since it became a nation.

25 And the hail smote throughout all the land of Egypt all that was in the field, both man and beast: and the hail smote every herb of the field, and brake every tree of the field.

26 Only [h]in the land of Goshen, where the children of Israel were, was there no hail.

27 ¶ And Pharaoh sent, and called for Moses and Aaron, and said unto them, [i]I have sinned this time; [k]the LORD is righteous, and I and my people are wicked.

28 [l]Intreat the Lord (for it is enough) that there be no more mighty [5]thunderings and hail; and I will let you go, and [m]ye shall stay no longer.

29 And Moses said unto him, As soon as I am gone out of the city, I will [n]spread abroad my hands unto the LORD; and the their prayers requested, and amendment promised; but, alas! such appearances are entitled to small regard. Even the evil spirits once besought Christ not to torment them: and experience shows that prayers offered under severe sufferings and urgent terrors, frequently spring from no higher principle. For when there is a respite, men again harden their hearts, throw off their assumed and constrained shows of piety, return to their sins, and commonly proceed to more daring ungodliness. But though we must not countenance the delusion of men living in sin, and expecting to die penitent, or give unscriptural encouragement to fallacious appearances; yet, knowing that "nothing is too hard for the Lord," we should be ready to assist, with our counsel and prayers, even those persons who have been our enemies; rendering them every kind of service, and showing them every species of courteousness, (except that of flattering them in false confidence,) without being wearied of well-doing by reiterated disappointments.—Scott.

CHAP. IX. FIFTH PLAGUE—MURRAIN.—No mention is made in the narrative of this miracle of the rod of Moses, probably for the same reason as before. The subsequent history shows that some of the cattle were preserved; but vast multitudes of every kind were suddenly destroyed throughout the whole land of Egypt. It is supposed that, even at this early period, the Egyptians idolized some kinds of cattle, and represented their deities under images in the shape of them; and this terrible calamity was well suited to expose the stupidity of this practice, as well as to show the power of God, both in destroying the cattle of the Egyptians, and preserving the cattle of Israel. It does not appear that Pharaoh had in any former instance sent to inquire, whether the Israelites were involved in the calamities, or not; for he had treated the nation with contempt: yet, on this occasion he sent to inquire, and he learned that not one of their cattle had died. But he had so long done violence to his conscience, that it was become callous, as "seared with a hot iron;" so that this marked distinction made no impression on him, according to the express prediction of Moses.—Scott.

SIXTH PLAGUE—BOILS AND BLAINS.—1. The signal, by which this plague was summoned, was the sprinkling of warm ashes, from the "furnace, toward heaven," ver. 8, 10, which was to signify the heating of the air with such an infection, as should produce in the bodies of the Egyptians sore boils, which would be both noisome and painful. Immediately upon the scattering of the ashes, a scalding dew came down out of the air, which blistered wherever it fell. Note, Sometimes God shows men their sin in their punishment; they had oppressed Israel in the furnaces, and now the ashes of the furnace are made as much a terror to them as ever the task-masters had been to the Israelites. 2. The plague itself was very grievous; a common eruption would be so, especially to the nice and delicate, but these eruptions were inflammations, like Job's. This is afterwards called the "botch of Egypt," (Dent. xxviii. 27,) as if it were some new disease, never heard of before, and known ever after by that name. Note, Sores in the body are to be looked upon as the punishments of sin, and to be hearkened to as calls to repentance. 3. The magicians themselves were struck with these boils, ver. 11. Thus they were punished, both, (1.) For helping to harden Pharaoh's heart, as Elymas, for seeking to "pervert the right ways of the Lord;" God will severely reckon with those that strengthen the hands of the wicked in their wickedness. As also, (2.) For pretending to imitate the former plagues, and making themselves and Pharaoh sport with them. They that would produce lice, shall, against their wills, produce boils. Note, It is ill jesting with God's judgments, and more dangerous than playing with fire. "Be ye not mockers, lest your bands be made strong."—Henry.

PHARAOH HARDENED.—The Lord had declared twice, that "he would harden the heart of Pharaoh," chap. iv. 21; vii. 3; but this is the first time in which it is expressly said that he hardened his heart; yet this expression is afterwards several times repeated. Hence we may infer, that, as God had before permitted and appointed a variety of events, which had a tendency to augment Pharaoh's obduracy; so now, in punishment of his presumptuous rebellion, he totally gave him up to his own lusts, and to the power of Satan: nor can we interpret the expression too strongly, if we only remember this one thing, that God did not by his own power create any hardness or wickedness in his heart; "for God is not tempted of evil, neither tempteth he any man," Jam. i. 13—17. It was his settled purpose that Pharaoh should be finally hardened, for the accomplishment of which he effectually provided, and in which he doubtless was perfectly righteous. "The sentence of destruction was irreversibly denounced against him, and God resolved to dispose things so that he should not repent, but run headlong to his ruin."—[Bp. Patrick.] Indeed, we may perceive that this proud tyrant and cruel oppressor deserved to be made an example, by the just Judge of the universe: and provided none are punished who do not deserve it, and none above their deserts, there can be no cause of complaint, or ground of objection.—Scott.

SEVENTH PLAGUE—HURRICANE.—What desolations that storm made upon the earth; the thunder and fire from heaven (or lightning) made it both the more dreadful, and the more destroying, ver. 23, 24. Note, God makes the clouds not only his storehouses, whence he drops fatness on his people, but his magazines, whence, when he pleases, he can draw out a most formidable train of artillery with which to destroy his enemies. He himself speaks of the "treasures of hail, which he hath reserved against the day of battle thunder shall cease, neither shall there be any more hail; that thou mayest know how [m]that the earth is the LORD's.

30 But as for thee and thy servants, [n]I know that ye will not yet fear the LORD God.

31 And the flax and the barley was smitten: for [o]the barley was in the ear,[5] and the flax was bolled.

32 But the wheat and the rye were not smitten: for they were [5]not grown up.

33 And Moses went out of the city from Pharaoh, and spread abroad his hands unto the LORD: [p]and the thunders and hail ceased, and the rain was not poured upon the earth.

34 And when Pharaoh [q]saw that the rain, and the hail, and the thunders, were ceased, he sinned yet more, [r]and hardened his heart, he and his servants.

35 And the heart of Pharaoh was hardened, neither would he let the children of Israel go; [s]as the LORD had spoken [t]by Moses.

CHAP. X.

The plague of locusts, 12; and of darkness, 21. Pharaoh's heart is yet hardened, 27.

AND the LORD said unto Moses, Go in unto Pharaoh: for [a]I have hardened his heart, and the heart of his servants, [b]that I might shew these my signs before him:

2 And [c]that thou mayest tell in the ears of thy son,[1] and of thy son's son, what things I have wrought in Egypt, and my signs which I have done among them; [d]that ye may know how that I am the LORD.

3 And Moses and Aaron came in unto Pharaoh, and said unto him, Thus saith the LORD God of the Hebrews, [e]How long wilt thou refuse to [f]humble thyself before me? Let my people go, that they may serve me.

4 Else, [g]if thou refuse to let my people go, behold, to-morrow will I bring the [h]locusts into thy coast.[2]

5 And they shall cover the [*]face of the earth, that one cannot be able to see the earth: and they shall eat [i]the residue of that which is escaped, which remaineth unto you from the hail, and shall eat every tree which groweth for you out of the field.

6 And they shall [k]fill thy houses, and the houses of all thy servants, and the houses of all the Egyptians; [l]which neither thy fathers nor thy fathers' fathers have seen, since the day that they were upon the earth unto this day. [m]And he turned himself, and went out from Pharaoh.

7 ¶ And Pharaoh's servants said unto him, [n]How long shall this man be a [o]snare unto us? Let the men go, that they may serve the LORD their God: knowest thou not yet [p]that Egypt is destroyed?

8 And Moses and Aaron were [q]brought again unto Pharaoh: and he said unto them, Go, serve the LORD your God: but [†]who are they that shall go?

9 And Moses said, [r]We will go with our young, and with our old, with our sons, and with our daughters, with our flocks, and with our herds will we go; for we must hold [s]a feast unto the LORD.

10 And he said unto them, Let the LORD be so with you, as I will let you go, and your little ones: [t]look to it, for evil is before you.[3]

11 Not so: go now ye that are men, and serve the LORD, for that ye did desire. [u]And they were driven out from Pharaoh's presence.

12 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, [x]Stretch out thine hand over the land of Egypt for the locusts, that they may come up upon the land of Egypt, and eat every herb of the land, even all that the hail hath left.

13 And Moses stretched forth his rod over the land of Egypt, and the LORD brought an [y]east wind upon the land all that day, and all that night: and when it was morning, the east wind brought the locusts.

14 And [z]the locusts went up over all the land of Egypt, and rested in all the coasts of Egypt: very grievous were they; [a]before them there were no such locusts as they, neither after them shall be such.

15 For [b]they covered the face of the whole earth,[4] so that the land was darkened; and they did eat every herb of the land, and all the fruit of the trees which the hail had left: and there remained not any green thing in the trees, or in the herbs of the field, through all the land of Egypt.

16 ¶ Then Pharaoh [‡]called for Moses and Aaron in haste; and he said, [c]I have sinned against the LORD your God, and against you.

17 Now therefore [d]forgive, I pray thee, my sin only this once, [e]and intreat the LORD your God, that he may take away from me [f]this death only.

18 And he went out from Pharaoh, [g]and intreated the LORD.

19 And the LORD turned [h]a mighty strong west wind, which took away the locusts, and [§]cast them into [i]the Red sea: there remained not one locust in all the coasts of Egypt.

20 But [k]the LORD hardened Pharaoh's heart, so that he would not let the children of Israel go.

21 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, [l]Stretch out thine hand toward heaven, that there may be [m]darkness over the land of Egypt, [l]even darkness which may be felt.

I had once an opportunity to see large swarms of locusts in the island of Cyprus: and till that time had no adequate idea of their numerous hosts and rapacious depredations. In going in a chaise from Larnica to a garden at a distance of four or five miles, the locusts lay swarming, above a foot deep, in several parts of the high road, and thousands were destroyed by the wheels of the carriage crashing over them.—DR RUSSELL.

and war." Job xxxviii. 22, 23. Woful havoc this hail made in the land of Egypt. It killed both men and cattle, and battered down, not only the herbs, but the trees, ver. 25. The corn that was above ground was destroyed, and that only preserved which as yet was not come up, ver. 31, 32. Note, God has many ways of "taking away the corn in the season thereof." Hos. ii. 9, either by a secret blasting, or a noisy hail. In this plague, the "hot thunderbolts," as well as the hail, are said to destroy "their flocks," Ps. lxxviii. 47, 48, and see Ps. cv. 32, 33. Perhaps David alludes to this, when, alluding to God's glorious appearances for the discomfiture of his enemies, he speaks of the hail-stones and coals of fire he threw among them, Ps. xviii. 12, 13. And there is a plain reference to it, on the pouring out of the seventh vial, Rev. xvi. 21. Notice is here taken, ver. 26, of the land of Goshen's being preserved from receiving any damage by this plague. God has the directing of the pregnant clouds, and causes it to rain or hail on one city, and not on another, either in mercy or in judgment.—Henry.

CHAP. X. PHARAOH SOMEWHAT RELENTS.—A new treaty is set on foot between Pharaoh and Moses, in which Pharaoh consents for the Israelites to go into the wilderness to do sacrifice; but the matter in dispute was, who should go, ver. 8. 1. Moses insists upon it, that they should take their whole families, and all their effects along with them, ver. 9. Note, Those that serve God, must serve him with all they have. Moses pleads, "We must hold a feast, therefore we must have our families to feast with, and our flocks and herds to feast upon to the honour of God." 2. Pharaoh will by no means grant this: he will allow the "men" to go, pretending that this was all they desired, though this matter was never yet mentioned in any of the former treaties; but, for the "little ones," he resolves to keep them as hostages, to oblige them to return, ver. 10, 11. More than this, he grows wroth, and swears that they shall not remove their little ones, assuring them it was at their peril, if they did. Note, Satan does all he can to hinder those that serve God themselves, from bringing their children in to serve him. He is a sworn enemy to early piety, knowing how destructive it is to the interests of his kingdom.—Henry.

EIGHTH PLAGUE—LOCUSTS.—The ravages which locusts make in those eastern countries are frequently extremely terrible. They even darken the earth by intercepting with their inconceivable multitudes the light of the sun: they turn fruitful countries into desolate deserts, and leave the wretched inhabitants to perish with famine; nor can they by any means be resisted or escaped. But the locusts sent on Egypt were dreadful beyond example and comparison, in size and multitudes, and in the desolations which they occasioned: and the plague was thus foretold, that the hand of the Lord in sending it might be the more evident.—Pharaoh had repeatedly violated his promises; and Moses seems to have left his presence abruptly, without waiting for an answer.—Scott.

NINTH PLAGUE—DARKNESS.—It was a total darkness: we have reason to think, not only that the lights of heaven were clouded, but that all their fires and candles were put out by the damps or clammy vapours which were the cause of this darkness; for it is said, ver. 23, They "saw not one another." It is threatened to the wicked, (Job xviii. 5, 6,) that the "spark of his fire shall not shine," (even "the sparks of his own kindling," as they are called, Isa. i. 11,) and that the "light shall be dark in his tabernacle." Hell is "utter darkness;" the light of "a candle shall shine no more at all in thee," Rev. xviii. 23. 1. That it was darkness which "might be felt," ver. 21, felt in its causes by their fingers' ends, (so thick were the fogs,) felt in its effects, some think, by their eyes, which were pricked with pain, and made the more sore by their rubbing of them. Great pain is spoken of as the effect of that darkness, Rev. xvi. 10, which alludes to this. 2. No doubt it astonished and terrified them. The cloud of locusts, which had "darkened the land," ver. 15, was nothing to this. The tradition of the Jews is, that in this darkness they were terrified by the apparitions of evil spirits, or rather by dreadful sounds and murmurs which they made, or (which is no less frightful) by the horrors of their own consciences; and this is the plague which some think is intended, (for, otherwise, it is not mentioned at all there,) Ps. lxxviii. 49, "He poured upon them the fierceness of his anger by sending evil angels among them," for to those to whom the Devil has been a deceiver, he will at length be a terror. 3. It continued three days; "six nights," says Bishop Hall, "in one;" so long they were imprisoned by those "chains of darkness," and the most lightsome palaces were perfect dungeons. No "man rose from his place," ver. 23. They were all confined to their houses; and such a terror seized them, that few of them had the courage to go from the chair to the bed, or from the bed to the chair. Thus were they "silent in darkness," 1 Sam. ii. 9. Now Pharaoh had time to consider, if he would have improved it.

LIGHT IN ISRAEL.—The children of Israel, at the same time, had "light in their dwellings," ver. 23, not only in the land of Goshen, where most of them dwelt, but in the habitations of those who were dispersed among the Egyptians. That some of them were thus dispersed, appears from the distinction afterward appointed to be put on their door-posts, chap. xii. 7. This is an instance, 1. Of the power of God above the ordinary power of nature; we must not think that we share in common mercies, as a matter of course, and therefore that we owe no thanks to God for them; he could distinguish, and withhold that from us, which he grants to others. 2. Of the particular favour he bears to his people; they "walk in the light," when others "wander" endlessly "in thick 22 And Moses stretched forth his hand toward heaven: and there was a [n]thick darkness in all the land of Egypt three days.

23 They saw not one another, neither rose any from his place for three days: [o]but all the children of Israel had light in their dwellings.

24 ¶ And Pharaoh called unto Moses, and said, [p]Go ye, serve the Lord; only [q]let your flocks and your herds be stayed:[5] [r]let your little ones also go with you.

25 And Moses said, Thou must give *us also sacrifices, and burnt-offerings, that we may sacrifice unto the LORD our God.

26 Our [s]cattle also shall go with us; there shall not an hoof be left behind: for thereof must we take to serve the LORD our God; [t]and we know not with what we must serve the LORD, until we come thither.

God's message to the Israelites to borrow jewels of their neighbours, 1. The death of the first-born threatened, 4.

AND the LORD said unto Moses, [a]Yet will I bring one plague more upon Pharaoh, and upon Egypt; [b]afterwards he will let you go hence: when he shall let you go, he shall surely [c]thrust you out hence altogether.

2 Speak now in the ears of the people, and let every man [d]borrow of his neighbour, and every woman of her neighbour, [e]jewels of silver, and jewels of gold.

3 And [f]the LORD gave the people favour in the sight of the Egyptians. Moreover, the man [g]Moses was very great in the land of Egypt, in the sight of Pharaoh's servants, and in the sight of the people.

4 ¶ And Moses said, Thus saith the LORD, [h]About midnight [i]will I go out into the midst of Egypt.

5 And all the first-born in the land of Egypt shall die, from [k]the first-born of Pharaoh that sitteth upon his throne, even unto the first-born of the maid-servant that is [l]behind the mill; and all the first-born of beasts.

6 And there shall be [m]a great cry throughout all the land of Egypt, such as there was none like it, nor shall be like it any more.

7 But against any of the children of Israel shall not a [n]dog move his tongue, against man or beast; that ye may know how that the LORD doth put [o]a difference between the Egyptians and Israel.

8 And [p]all these thy servants shall come down unto me, and bow down themselves unto me, saying, Get thee out, and all the people that [*]follow thee; and after that I will go out: and he went out from Pharaoh in [†]a great anger.

9 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, [q]Pharaoh shall not hearken unto you; that my [r]wonders may be multiplied in the land of Egypt.

10 And Moses and Aaron did all these wonders before Pharaoh: and [s]the LORD hardened Pharaoh's heart, so that he would not let the children of Israel go out of his land.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses and Aaron in the land of Egypt, saying,

2 [a]This month shall be unto you the beginning of months: it shall be the first month[1] of the year to you.

3 ¶ [b]Speak ye unto all the congregation of Israel, saying, [c]In the tenth day of this month, they shall [d]take to them every man a [*]lamb, according to the house of their fathers, a lamb for an house.

4 And if the household be too little for the lamb, let him and his neighbour next unto his house, take it according to the number of the souls; every man according to his eating shall make your count for the lamb.

5 Your lamb shall be [e]without blemish, a male [†]of the first year; ye shall take it out from the sheep or from the goats.

6 And ye shall keep it up until the [f]fourteenth day of the same month: and [g]the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill it [‡]in the evening.

7 And they shall take of the [h]blood, and strike it on the two side-posts, and on the upper door-post of the houses, wherein they shall eat it.

darkness;" wherever there is an Israelite indeed, though in this dark world, there is light, there is a "child of light," one for whom "light is sown," and whom the "day-spring from on high visits." When God made this difference between the Israelites and the Egyptians, who would not have preferred the poorest cottage of an Israelite to the finest palace of an Egyptian.

MOSES THREATENED.—Moses is dismissed in anger, forbidden the court upon pain of death, forbidden so much as to meet Pharaoh any more, as he had been used to do by the river's side; "In that day thou seest my face, thou shalt die." Prodigious madness! Had not he found that Moses could plague him without seeing his face? Or, had he forgotten how often he had sent for him as his physician to heal him, and ease him of his plagues; and must he now be bid to come near him no more? Impotent malice! To threaten him with death, who was armed with such a power, and at whose mercy he had so often laid himself.—Henry.

CHAP. XI. ASKING, NOT BORROWING.—The original does not in the least imply that the Israelites asked the Egyptians to lend them the jewels, or vessels, of gold and silver, as engaging to return them, but rather that they requested or even required them: and the Lord engaged to dispose the Egyptians to comply with their requirement; for the words may be rendered, "And the Lord will give the people favour," &c. The Egyptians revered Moses as an extraordinary person, of wonderful courage, wisdom, and sanctity; and endued with powers of inflicting judgments, or removing them, at pleasure; and probably, many of them were persuaded that he had justice on his side, and blamed Pharaoh as the real cause of their calamities. For while oppressors pursue infatuated counsels, and are flattered by hireling courtiers, it often happens that their subjects secretly favour the cause of the oppressed, even where themselves have no personal ground of complaint, and consider a measure of liberty as the common right of mankind. —Scott.

WARNING OF THE LAST PLAGUE.—Warning is given to Pharaoh of the last and conquering plague, which was now to be inflicted, which was the "death of all the first-born in" Egypt at once. This had been first threatened, (chap. iv. 23, "I will slay thy son, thy first-born,") but is last executed; lesser judgments were tried, which, if they had done work would have prevented this. See how slow God is to wrath, and how willing to be met with in the way of his judgments, and to have his anger turned away, and particularly, how precious the lives of men are in his eyes: if the death of their cattle would have humbled and reformed them, their children have been spared; but if men will not improve the gradual advances of divine judgments, they [illegible] themselves if they find in the issue that the worst was reserved for the last. The plague itself is here particularly foretold, ver. 4—6. The time is fixed, about midnight; the very next midnight, the dead time of the night, when they were all asleep, all their first-born should sleep the sleep of death, not silently and insensibly, so as not to be discovered till morning, but so as to rouse the families at midnight to stand by and see them die.—Henry.

CHAP. XII. PASSOVER COMMANDED.—The Hebrews were directed, on the tenth day from the new moon, to select a lamb or kid for every one of those households into which the families of their tribes were subdivided; unless when the small number of persons in the household made it proper to join with some of their neighbours. They were allowed to take either a lamb or a kid; but, as Christ is commonly represented under the emblem of a Lamb, and never under that of a kid, it is supposed that lambs were generally preferred. The lamb must be "without blemish, a male of the first year," or under a year old; as typifying the "Lamb of God," "without spot and blemish," who was "slain from the foundation of the world." After four days of preparation, which would afford time leisurely to examine the intended victims, they were slaughtered on the fourteenth by the whole congregation; the head of each household killing the lamb selected for it, as it is probably concluded. This was done "between the two evenings;" and it is supposed that the first of these evenings began when the sun had passed the meridian, and that the second ended at sunset. The paschal offerings, therefore, seem to have been slain from three o'clock in the afternoon till sunset; and afterwards the people eat the passover, when the fifteenth day of the month had begun; for they reckoned from sunset to sunset.—Scott.

THE PASSOVER A TYPE.—The paschal lamb was typical; Christ is "our Passover," 1 Cor v. 7. 1. It was to be a lamb, and Christ is the "Lamb of God," John i. 29, often in the Revelation called the Lamb, meek and innocent as a lamb, dumb before the shearers, before the butchers. 2. It was to be "a male of the first year," ver. 5, in its prime; Christ offered up himself in the midst of his days, not in infancy with the babes of Bethlehem. It denotes the strength and sufficiency of the Lord Jesus, on whom our help was laid. 3. It was to be "without blemish," ver. 5, denoting the purity of the Lord Jesus, a Lamb "without spot," 1 Pet. i. 19. The judge that condemned him, (as if his trial were only like the scrutiny that was made concerning the sacrifices, whether they were without blemish or no,) pronounced him [illegible] 4. It was to be [illegible] days before, ver. 3, 6, denoting the [illegible] to be a [illegible] the purpose and in the promise. [illegible] loins girded, your [q]shoes on your feet, and your staff in your hand: and ye shall eat it in haste;[3] [r]it is the LORD'S passover.

12 For I will [s]pass through the land of Egypt this night, and [t]will smite all the firstborn in the land of Egypt, both man and beast: and [u]against all the [x]gods[§] of Egypt I will execute judgment; I am the LORD.

13 And [y]the blood shall be to you for a token upon the houses where ye are: and when I see the blood, I will pass over you,[4] and the plague shall not be upon you [‖]to destroy you, when I smite the land of Egypt.

14 And this day shall be unto you for a [z]memorial; and ye shall keep it a feast to the LORD throughout your generations: ye shall keep it a feast [a]by an ordinance for ever.

15 [b]Seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread; even the first day ye shall put away leaven out of your houses: for whosoever eateth leavened bread, from the first day until the seventh day, [c]that soul shall be cut off from Israel.

16 And in the first day there shall be [d]an holy convocation, and in the seventh day there shall be an holy convocation to you: [e]no manner of work shall be done in them, save that which every [‡]man must eat, that only may be done of you.

17 And ye shall observe the feast of unleavened bread; for [f]in this self-same day have I brought your armies out of the land of Egypt: therefore shall ye observe this day in your generations [g]by an ordinance for ever.

18 [h]In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month at even, ye shall eat unleavened bread, until the one and twentieth day of the month at even.

19 Seven days shall there be no leaven found in your houses: for whosoever eateth that which is leavened, [i]even that soul shall be cut off from the congregation of Israel, [k]whether he be a stranger, or born in the land.

20 Ye shall eat nothing leavened: in all your habitations shall ye eat unleavened bread.

21 ¶ Then Moses called for all the [l]elders of Israel, and said unto them, Draw out [m]and take you [*]a lamb according to your families, and kill the passover.

22 And ye shall take [n]a bunch of hyssop, and dip it in the blood that is in the bason, and strike the lintel, and the two side-posts, with the blood that is in the bason; [o]and none of you shall go out of the door of his house until the morning.

23 For the LORD [p]will pass through to smite the Egyptians; and when he seeth the blood upon the lintel, and on the two side-posts, the LORD will pass over the door, [q]and will not suffer the destroyer to come in unto your houses to smite you.

24 And ye shall observe this thing [r]for an ordinance to thee, and to thy sons for ever.

25 And it shall come to pass, [s]when ye be come to the land which the LORD will give you, according as he hath promised, that ye shall keep this service.

26 And it shall come to pass, when [t]your children shall say unto you, What mean ye by this service?

27 That ye shall say, [u]It is the sacrifice of the LORD'S passover, who passed over the houses of the children of Israel in Egypt, when he smote the Egyptians, and delivered our houses. And the people [x]bowed the head and worshipped.

28 And the children of Israel went away, and did as the LORD had commanded Moses and Aaron, so did they.

29 ¶ And it came to pass, that [y]at midnight [z]the LORD smote all the first-born in the land of Egypt, from [a]the first-born of Pharaoh that sat on his throne, unto the first-born of the captive that was in the [†]dungeon;[5] and all the first-born of cattle.

30 And Pharaoh rose up in the night, he and all his servants, and all the Egyptians: and there was [b]a great cry in Egypt; for there was not a house where there was not one dead.

31 ¶ And he called for Moses and Aaron by night, and said, [c]Rise up, and get you forth from among my people, both ye and [d]the children of Israel: and go, serve the LORD, as ye have said.

32 Also take [e]your flocks and your herds, as ye have said, and be gone; and [f]bless me also.

33 And the Egyptians were [g]urgent upon the people, that they might send them out of the land in haste; for they said, [h]We be all dead men.

34 And the people took their dough before it was leavened, their [‡]kneading-troughs[6] being bound up in their clothes, upon their shoulders.

35 And the children of Israel did according to the word of Moses; [i]and they borrowed of the Egyptians jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment.

36 And [k]the LORD gave the people favour in the sight of the Egyptians, so that they lent unto them such things as they required. And they spoiled the Egyptians.

37 ¶ And the children of Israel journeyed from [l]Rameses to Succoth, about [m]six hundred thousand on foot that were men, beside children.

38 [n]And [§]a mixed multitude went up also with them; and flocks, and herds, even very much cattle.

39 And they baked unleavened cakes of the [5] Now God begins to call for the blood they owed him: in one night every house hath a carcase in it, and, which is more grievous, of their first-born, and, which is yet more fearful, in an instant. passover, so he solemnly entered into Jerusalem four days before, the very day that the paschal lamb was set apart. 5. It was to be "slain," and "roasted with fire," ver. 6—9, denoting the exquisite sufferings of the Lord Jesus, even unto death, the death of the cross. The wrath of God is as fire, and Christ was made a curse for us. 6. It was to be killed by the whole congregation between the two evenings, that is, between three o'clock and six. Christ suffered at the "end of the world," Heb. ix. 26, by the hand of Jews, the whole multitude of them, Luke xxiii. 18, and for the good of all his spiritual Israel. 7. Not "a bone of it must be broken," ver. 46, which is expressly said to be fulfilled in Christ, John xix. 33, 36, denoting the unbroken strength of the Lord Jesus. —Henry.

PURPOSE AND LESSON OF THE PASSOVER.—The blood of these victims, having been preserved for that purpose, was ordered to be sprinkled, with a bunch of hyssop, on the side-posts, and on the upper door-posts, of the houses in which the passover was eaten; and this was the token of the Israelites being preserved when the first-born of Egypt were destroyed: it was also a type of our avowed dependence on the atonement of Christ, while "we feed on him in our hearts by faith with thanksgiving." But the blood was not sprinkled or poured on the threshold, which would have implied contempt; and this seems to have been intended as a typical caution against apostacy and abuse of the gospel, Heb. x. 29. Leaven is the known emblem of hypocrisy, malice, and wickedness; unleavened bread therefore was the representation of sincerity, truth, and love. The bitter herbs might be an emblem of godly sorrow, deep repentance, self-denial, and mortification of depraved passions, and of those outward tribulations which accompany the exercise of living faith in Christ: and the roasting of the lamb by fire, (the emblem of divine wrath,) might typify the varied and excruciating sufferings which Christ endured, in bearing our sins, and preparing our blessedness. It was likewise ordered that the whole of the lamb should be thus prepared and eaten. This might imply that true faith receives the entire salvation of Christ, and depends upon him in every part of his mediatorial character, without any exception: while the annexed order, that if any part of the lamb was left, it should before the morning be burned with fire, and not reserved either for food, or any superstitious purposes, implied that it was a solemn propitiatory sacrifice of awful import, and not merely a cheerful festival.

PASCHAL BANQUET.—The Israelites were directed at this time to eat the paschal lamb in the attire and posture of men who were setting out on a journey, and in haste to depart. It does not appear, however, that the passover was afterwards celebrated in this manner; and our Lord and his apostles seem to have eaten it, in the posture commonly used at their meals. Indeed, several things, required at this institution, were not afterwards observed. No intimation is given, that the lamb, which our Lord used at his last passover, was selected four days before; and he with his apostles left the house soon after the celebration of it. But the circumstances in which the Israelites were placed, at this time, rendered these observances significant and proper: for they were taught that it was the "LORD'S passover;" that he was about to go through the whole land of Egypt, destroying every first-born of man and beast without exception, triumphing over the idols, as well as the princes of that country: and that he would respect the sprinkled blood on the doors of the Israelites, and not only pass by, or over them; but effectually protect and rescue them, at the time of this general desolation; for so the word signifies. They must therefore be ready to march, on the shortest notice within the course of that night.—The manner and posture in which the passover was then eaten, might typify the Christian's deliverance from the bondage of sin, and his heavenly pilgrimage by faith in Christ.

TENTH AND LAST PLAGUE.—The hour chosen for this most tremendous execution, was suited to enhance the consternation. Probably the persons smitten expired with agonizing cries, which awakened every family; and the repose would rapidly spread from house to house. The Egyptians, for three days and nights just before, had been kept in perpetual solicitude and horror by the darkness, and now their rest was broken by a still more terrible calamity. By the death of the first-born, they were righteously punished for murdering the children of the Israelites; as well as for keeping that nation in bondage, which God honoured by calling it "his son, and his first-born."—Words can never express the terror and bitterness, of this sudden blow from an invisible hand, destroying the pride, hope, and comfort of every family of all ranks, throughout this populous kingdom; the whole nation at once mourning over the dead, and trembling for themselves!

DEPARTURE FROM EGYPT.—The Israelites, though no doubt warned to prepare for a speedy departure, were at last driven out of Egypt so suddenly, that they had not provided themselves with victuals for the journey. But while they were about to lay in a stock of bread, when the dough was yet unleavened, being constrained to set off, they took it with them in that state: and when they came to Succoth, they baked cakes of it for the present use. Probably this was their principal supply till the manna was sent. Thus the Lord took care that they should keep the feast of unleavened bread, which otherwise they would perhaps have neglected. From the first calling of Abraham, to the departure out of Egypt, exactly four hundred and thirty years, seem to have passed. —Scott.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The Lord makes all things new to those whom he dough which they brought forth out of Egypt, for it was not leavened: because they were [o]thrust out of Egypt, and could not tarry, neither had they prepared for themselves any victual.

40 ¶ Now the [p]sojourning of the children of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt, was [q]four hundred and thirty years.[7]

41 And it came to pass at the end of the four hundred and thirty years, even [r]the self-same day[8] it came to pass, that all the [s]hosts of the LORD went out from the land of Egypt.

42 It is [t]a night to be much [u]observed unto the LORD, for bringing them out from the land of Egypt: this is that night of the LORD to be observed of all the children of Israel in their generations.[9]

43 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses and Aaron, This is the ordinance of the passover: [v]There shall no stranger eat thereof;

44 But every man's servant that is bought for money, when thou hast [x]circumcised him, then shall he eat thereof.

45 A foreigner and an hired servant shall not eat thereof.

46 In [y]one house shall it be eaten; thou shalt not carry forth ought of the flesh abroad out of the house; [z]neither shall he break a bone thereof.

47 [a]All the congregation of Israel shall [*]keep it.

48 And when [b]a stranger shall sojourn with thee, and will keep the passover to the LORD, [c]let all his males be circumcised, and then let him come near and keep it; and he [d]shall be as one that is born in the land: for no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof.

49 [e]One law shall be to him that is homeborn, and unto the stranger that sojourneth among you.

50 Thus did all the children of Israel; [f]as the LORD commanded Moses and Aaron, so did they.

51 And it came to pass the self-same day, that the LORD did bring the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt, [g]by their armies.

The first-born sanctified to God, 1. The memorial of the passover is commanded, 3. God guideth them by a pillar of a cloud and of fire, 21.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 [a]Sanctify[1] unto me all the first-born, whatsoever openeth the womb among the children of Israel, both of man and of beast: it is mine.

3 ¶ And Moses said unto the people, [b]Remember this day, in which ye came out from Egypt, [c]out of the house of [*]bondage; for by [d]strength of hand the LORD brought you out from this place: [e]there shall no leavened bread be eaten.

4 This day came ye out, in the month [f]Abib.[2]

5 ¶ And it shall be when the LORD [g]shall bring thee into the land of the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, which he [h]sware unto thy fathers to give thee, [i]a land flowing with milk and honey, that [k]thou shalt keep this service in this month.

6 [l]Seven days thou shalt eat unleavened bread, and in the seventh day shall be a feast to the LORD.

7 Unleavened bread shall be eaten seven days; and there shall [m]no leavened bread be seen with thee, neither shall there be leaven seen with thee in all thy quarters.

8 And [n]thou shalt shew thy son in that day, saying, This is done because of that which the LORD did unto me, when I came forth out of Egypt.

9 And it shall be for [o]a sign unto thee upon thine hand,[3] and for a memorial between thine eyes; that the LORD's law [p]may be in thy mouth: for with a [q]strong hand hath the LORD brought thee out of Egypt.

10 Thou shalt therefore [r]keep this ordinance in his season, from year to year.

11 ¶ And it shall be when the LORD shall bring thee into the land of the Canaanites, [s]as he sware unto thee and to thy fathers, and shall give it thee,

12 That [t]thou shalt [†]set apart unto the LORD all that [u]openeth the matrix; and every firstling that cometh of a beast, which thou hast, the males shall be the LORD's.

13 And every firstling [x]of an ass[4] thou shalt redeem with a [‡]lamb; and if thou wilt not redeem it, then thou shalt break his neck: and all the first-born of man among thy children [y]shalt thou redeem.

14 And it shall be when [z]thy son asketh thee [§]in time to come, saying, What is this? that thou shalt say unto him, By strength of hand the LORD brought us out from Egypt, from the house of bondage.

15 And it came to pass, when Pharaoh would hardly let us go, that [a]the LORD slew all the first-born in the land of Egypt, both the first-born of man, and the first-born of beast: [b]therefore I sacrifice to the LORD all that openeth the matrix, being males; but all the first-born of my children I redeem.

16 And it shall be for [c]a token upon thine hand, [d]and for frontlets between thine eyes: [e]for by strength of hand the LORD brought us forth out of Egypt.

delivers from the bondage of Satan, and takes to himself as his peculiar people; and the era of their enlargement is the commencement of a new life, of new hopes, pleasures, and employments. They who in early life are devoted to the service of God are peculiarly happy; and we should begin every year, and month, and week, and day, with the great duties of religion; endeavouring to engage our families likewise. For nothing is more honourable to God or more profitable to men, than harmonious family religion: it is the best bond of domestic peace, the best solace of domestic afflictions, and the best security for the continuance and increase of domestic felicity; while it affords an important advantage for constant "growth in grace, and the knowledge of Jesus Christ."—In order to attain these advantages, and communicate them to others, we should diligently study the holy Scriptures, that we may understand the true nature and meaning of every part of our religion, and be enabled to explain it to our children; who ought to be encouraged in their inquiries, and informed by clear and satisfactory answers: that, in the most easy and agreeable manner, they may become acquainted with the word and works of God, and join with us in celebrating the praises of his truth and mercy, and the wonders of his powerful arm.—Scott.

CHAP. XIII. FEAST OF UNLEAVENED BREAD.—The Hebrews must be sure to keep "the feast of unleavened bread," ver. 5—7 It was not enough that they remembered it, but they must celebrate the memorial of it in that way which God had appointed, and use the instituted means of preserving the remembrance of it. So, under the gospel, we must not only remember Christ, but "do this in remembrance" of him. Observe how strict the prohibition of leaven is; ver. 7, not only, no leaven must be eaten, but none must be seen, no not in all their quarters. Accordingly, the Jews' usage was, before the feast of the passover, to cast all the leavened bread out of their houses; they either burnt it, or buried it, or broke it small, and scattered it in the wind; they searched diligently with lighted candles in all the corners of their houses, lest any leaven should remain. The care and strictness enjoined in this matter were designed, (1.) To make the feast the more solemn, and consequently the more taken notice of by their children, who would ask, "Why is so much ado made?" (2.) To teach us how solicitous we should be to put away from us all sin, 1 Cor. v. 7.

CHILDREN TO BE TAUGHT.—They must instruct their children in the meaning of it, and relate to them the story of their deliverance out of Egypt, ver. 8. Note, 1. Care must be taken betimes to instruct children in the knowledge of God. Here is an ancient law for catechising. 2. It is particularly of great use to [illegible] children betimes with the stories of the Scriptures, and to make them familiar to [illegible] debt we owe to the honour of God, and to the benefit of our children's souls, to tell them of the great works God has done for his church, both those which we have seen with our eyes done in our day, and which we have heard with our ears, and our fathers have told us: "Thou shalt show thy son in that day," the day of the feast, these things. When they were celebrating the ordinance, they must explain it. "Every thing is beautiful in its season." The passover is appointed "for a sign, and for a memorial," that "the Lord's law may be in thy mouth." Note, We must retain the remembrance of God's works, that we may remain under the influence of God's law. And those that have God's law in their heart should have it in their mouth, and be often speaking of it, the more to affect themselves, and to instruct others.—Henry.

DEDICATION OF THE FIRST-BORN.—The first-born males alone were thus set apart for God: if a female preceded, the first succeeding male was not considered as the first-born. The firstling males of such animals as were appointed for sacrifice, were offered at the altar; but others must either be exchanged, or killed. The firstling of an ass is mentioned, as asses were common among the Israelites: but that of horses or camels likewise, which were not common, seem to have been under the same regulation. The Levites were afterwards taken instead of the first-born children.

LINE OF MARCH.—The nearest road from Egypt to Canaan was only a few days' march; as it must be evident to every reader, who considers the journeys of the sons of Jacob into Egypt. But the Philistines were a hardy warlike people; and the Israelites were unarmed, dispirited by long bondage, and not acquainted with war: and they might have been greatly discouraged, had they been reduced to the necessity of engaging so soon with such formidable enemies. This was one reason, and probably the avowed reason, why the Lord led them another way: so that, by his express command, the Israelites took their route much more to the south, than the direct road lay; and they marched towards the banks of the Red Sea; instead of going directly to the isthmus of Suez, which communicates betwixt Africa and Asia. It is probable, that at this time the Israelites had scarcely any arms: though they probably afterwards had procured some from the dead bodies of the Egyptians, when the Amalekites attacked them.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—"The strong man, armed" with our lusts and passions, our inveterate habits and intimate evil connexions, vehemently opposes our conversion, and "will hardly let us go:" but, "when a stronger than he comes upon him, he takes from him his armour wherein he trusted, and divides the [illegible] from bondage, putting ourselves under the Lord's [illegible] selves to his people, we learn to [illegible] had let the people go, that God led them not through the way of the land of the Philistines, although that was near; for God said, Lest peradventure [f]the people repent when they see war, and they [g]return to Egypt.

18 But God [h]led the people about, through the way of the wilderness[5] of the Red sea: and the children of Israel went up [i]harnessed[6] out of the land of Egypt.

19 And Moses took the bones of Joseph with him: [i]for he had straitly sworn the children of Israel, saying, [k]God will surely visit you; and ye shall carry up my bones away hence with you.

20 ¶ And [l]they took their journey from Succoth, and encamped in Etham, in the edge of the wilderness.

21 And [m]the LORD went before them, by day in a pillar of a cloud, to lead them the way; and by night in a pillar of fire, to give them light; to go by day and night.

Pharaoh pursueth, 5. The Israelites murmur, 10; they pass through the Red Sea, 21. The Egyptians drowned, 23.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, [a]that they turn and encamp before Pi-hahiroth, between [b]Migdol and the sea, over against Baal-zephon: before it shall ye encamp by the sea.[1]

3 For [c]Pharaoh will say of the children of Israel, [d]They are entangled in the land, the wilderness hath shut them in.

4 And [e]I will harden Pharaoh's heart, that he shall follow after them, [f]and I will be honoured upon Pharaoh, and upon all his host; [g]that the Egyptians may know that I am the LORD. And they did so.

5 ¶ And it was told the king of Egypt, that the people fled: and [h]the heart of Pharaoh and of his servants was turned against the people, and they said, [i]Why have we done this, that we have let Israel go from serving us?

6 And he made ready his chariot, and took his people with him:

7 And he took [k]six hundred chosen chariots, and all the chariots of Egypt, and captains over every one of them.

8 And [l]the LORD hardened the heart of Pharaoh king of Egypt, and he pursued after the children of Israel: and the children of Israel went out [m]with an high hand.[2]

9 But [n]the Egyptians pursued after them, all the horses and chariots of Pharaoh, and his horsemen, and his army, and overtook them [o]encamping by the sea, beside Pi-hahiroth, before Baal-zephon.

10 ¶ And when Pharaoh drew nigh, the children of Israel lifted up their eyes, and, behold, the Egyptians marched after them; [p]and they were sore afraid: and the children of Israel [q]cried out unto the LORD.

11 And they said unto Moses, [r]Because there were no graves in Egypt, hast thou taken us away to die in the wilderness? [s]Wherefore hast thou dealt thus with us, to carry us forth out of Egypt?

12 [t]Is not this the word that we did tell thee in Egypt, saying, [u]Let us alone, that we may serve the Egyptians? [x]For it had been better for us to serve the Egyptians, than that we should die in the wilderness.

13 ¶ And Moses said unto the people, [y]Fear ye not, stand still, and [z]see the salvation of the LORD, which he will shew to you to-day: [a]for the Egyptians whom ye have seen to-day, [b]ye shall see them again no more for ever.

14 [c]The LORD shall fight for you,[3] and ye shall hold your peace.

15 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, [d]Wherefore criest thou unto me? Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward:

16 But [e]lift thou up thy rod, and stretch out thine hand over the sea, and divide it: [f]and the children of Israel shall go on dry ground through the midst of the sea.

17 And [g]I, behold, [h]I will harden the hearts of the Egyptians, and they shall follow them: [i]and I will get me honour upon Pharaoh, and upon all his host, upon his chariots, and upon his horsemen.

18 And the Egyptians shall [k]know that I am the LORD, when I have gotten me honour upon Pharaoh, upon his chariots, and upon his horsemen.

19 ¶ And [l]the angel of God, which went before the camp of Israel, removed, and went behind them; [m]and the pillar of the cloud went from before their face, and stood behind them.

20 And it came between the camp of the Egyptians and the camp of Israel; and it was [n]a cloud and darkness to them, but it gave light by night to these: so that the one came not near the other all the night.

21 ¶ And Moses stretched out his hand over the sea; and [o]the LORD caused the sea to go back by a strong east wind all that night, and made the sea dry land, and the waters were divided.

22 And [p]the children of Israel went into ments: and, though the way in which he leads us, is widely different from that which we should choose for ourselves, we shall find that he, in every particular, regards our weakness, and that he orders all things for our good, and in such a manner as may most effectually keep us from returning back to sin and the world.—Through all the intricacies and dangers of the way, he will guide and guard us, by his word and Spirit: he will enlighten every dark night of affliction by his holy consolations, and shelter us from the burning sun of temptation, until he bring to his heavenly rest with everlasting songs of joy and praise.—Scott.

CHAP. XIV. PHARAOH'S PURSUIT OF ISRAEL.—The Egyptians had consented to the departure of the Israelites, and even urged them to be gone; and when they liberally bestowed on them the gold and silver and raiment which they asked, they seem to have had no expectation that they would return. But as the Israelites, probably, had not expressly declared themselves on this head; when the Egyptians heard, (perhaps by some of the mixed multitude who came back,) that they neither halted in the desert to offer sacrifices, nor kept the direct road to Horeb, (where some think they had said that they intended to keep a feast to the LORD;) but turned aside into intricate paths; they began to treat them as fugitive slaves. The servants of Pharaoh, while terrified by the Divine judgments, and suffering severely the effects of them, had counselled him to dismiss Israel: yet considering themselves sharers in his loss and disgrace, and being again encouraged to expect better success; they blamed themselves for having let them go, and gave Pharaoh more agreeable advice: and he was so infatuated by worldly policy, and so hardened in obstinate rebellion against the Lord, that, forgetting his late terrors, he determined to take vengeance on Moses and on Israel. Accordingly he collected all forces which were at hand, especially his chariots of war and his cavalry, which was the chief strength of his army; and without delay pursued the fugitives: but they not expecting so formidable an enemy, had marched on with great alacrity, and in good order, not at all like slaves who were fleeing from their masters; and were at that time encamping by the sea. It is generally supposed, that on the right and left of their encampment there were impassable mountains or fortifications; while the Red Sea was in the front, and Pharaoh and his army pressed upon their rear.—Scott.

ISRAEL'S CONSTERNATION.—Their fear set them a murmuring, ver. 11, 12. They give up themselves for lost, and, as if God's arm were shortened all of a sudden, and he were not as able to work miracles to-day as he was yesterday, they despair of deliverance, and can count upon nothing but "dying in the wilderness." How inexcusable was their distrust! Did they not see themselves under the guidance and protection of a pillar from heaven? And can almighty power fail them, or infinite goodness be false to them? Yet this was not the worst; they quarrel with Moses for bringing them out of Egypt, and, in quarrelling with him, fly in the face of God himself, and provoke him to wrath, whose favour was now the only succour they had to flee to. As the Egyptians were angry with themselves for the best deed they ever did, so the Israelites were angry with God for the greatest kindness that was ever done them; so gross are the absurdities of unbelief. They here express, 1. A sordid contempt of liberty, preferring servitude before it, only because it was attended with some difficulties. A generous spirit would have said, "If the worst come to the worst," (as we say,) "it is better to die in the field of honour, than to live in the chains of slavery," nay, under God's conduct, they could not miscarry, and therefore they might say, "Better live God's freemen in the open air of a wilderness, than the Egyptians' bondsmen in the smoke of the brick-kilns."

ISRAEL GUARDED.—A guard was set upon Israel's camp there where it now lay most exposed, which was "in the rear," ver. 19, 20. "The angel of God," whose ministry was made use of in the pillar of cloud and fire, went from "before the camp of Israel," where they did not now need a "guide," (there was no danger of missing their way through the sea, nor needed they any other word of command than to go forward,) and it came behind them, where now they needed a "guard," (the Egyptians being just ready to seize the hindmost of them,) and so was a wall of partition between them. There, it was of use to the Israelites, not only to protect them, but to light them, through the sea, and, at the same time, it confounded the Egyptians, so that they lost the sight of the prey just then when they were ready to lay hands on it. The word and providence of God have a black and dark side toward sin and sinners, but a bright and pleasant side toward those that are Israelites indeed. That which is a savour of life unto life to some, is a savour of death unto death to others.—Henry.

RED SEA DIVIDED.—At the stretching forth of Moses' hand, and the waving of his rod, the Lord caused a strong east wind to blow: but even this was only the signal of his power, by which he divided the waters, till they formed two mighty walls, and a spacious road between, through which the Israelites marched securely; being encouraged outwardly by the word of Moses, but inwardly by the power of God; while the Egyptians, given up to desperate hardness of heart, presumptuously followed them. The Israelites, who marched foremost, probably, entered the channel of the sea while it was yet day; and a very spacious opening being made for them, the others followed in a broad column, so that the whole congregation was marching on the bed of the channel of the sea, at the beginning of the night, the Egyptians closely pursuing them. We may suppose that the Israelites were nearly arrived on the opposite shore, when Moses 23 ¶ And [q]the Egyptians pursued, and went in after them, to the midst of the sea, even all Pharaoh's horses, his chariots, and his horsemen.

24 ¶ And it came to pass [r]that in the morning watch, the LORD [s]looked unto the host of the Egyptians, [t]through the pillar of fire and of the cloud, [u]and troubled the host of the Egyptians,

25 And [x]took off their chariot-wheels, [t]that they drave them heavily: so that the Egyptians said, [y]Let us flee from the face of Israel; [z]for the LORD fighteth for them against the Egyptians.

26 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, [a]Stretch out thine hand over the sea, that [b]the waters may come again upon the Egyptians, upon their chariots, and upon their horsemen.

27 And Moses stretched forth his hand over the sea, [c]and the sea returned to his strength when the morning appeared, and the Egyptians fled against it: [d]and the LORD [e]overthrew the Egyptians in the midst of the sea.

28 And [f]the waters returned, and covered the chariots, and the horsemen, and all the host of Pharaoh that came into the sea after them: there [g]remained not so much as one of them.

29 But the children of Israel [h]walked upon dry land in the midst of the sea: and the waters were [i]a wall unto them on their right hand, and on their left.

30 Thus [k]the LORD saved Israel that day out of the hand of the Egyptians: and Israel [l]saw the Egyptians dead upon the sea-shore.[4] received this command, perhaps by a voice from the pillar of fire: but, there is no improbability in the opinion, that the waters began to roll back with irresistible violence to their ancient channel, in that part of the sea where the Egyptians were, though they still continued a wall to Israel where they marched. It is, however, sufficient to know, that Israel was completely preserved; and Pharaoh, with the Egyptians, so entirely overwhelmed that not one remained. The returning light of the morning would show them their dreadful situation; but every effort to escape was fruitless.—The Egyptians had drowned the male children of the Israelites in the river; and now the righteous Lord took vengeance on them for those cruel and multiplied murders, by drowning all the strength and flower of the nation in the Red Sea!—It is probable that the dead bodies were in general driven on shore, near the place where the Israelites went up out of the sea; the Lord thus ordering it; and that they were furnished with arms, as well as enriched with other spoils by that means.—Scott.

CHAP. XV. SONG OF MOSES.—This song is, 1. An ancient song, the most ancient that we know of. 2. A most admirable composition, the style lofty and magnificent, the images lively and proper, and the whole very moving. 3. It is a holy song, consecrated to the honour of God, and intended to exalt his name, and celebrate his praise, and his only, not in the least to magnify any man: holiness to the Lord is engraven on it, and to him they made melody in the singing of it. 4. It is a typical song. The triumphs of the gospel-church, in the downfal of its enemies, are expressed in the song of Moses and the song of the Lamb put together, which songs are said to be sung upon a sea of glass, as this was upon the Red sea, Rev. xv. 2, 3.

GOD PRAISED.—"He is glorious in holiness;" his holiness is his glory. It is that attribute which angels adore, Isa. vi. 3. His holiness appeared in the destruction of Pharaoh, his hatred of sin, and his wrath against obstinate sinners. It appeared in the deliverance of Israel, his delight in the holy seed, and his faithfulness to his own promise. God is "rich in mercy," that is his treasure, "glorious in holiness," that is his honour. Let us always give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness. 2. "He is fearful in praises;" that which is the matter of our praise, though it is joyful to the servants of God, is dreadful and very terrible to his enemies, Psal. lxvi. 1—3. Or, it directs us in the manner of our praising God; we should praise him with an humble holy awe, and "serve the Lord with fear;" even our spiritual joy and triumph must be balanced with a religious fear. 3. He is doing wonders wondrous to all, being above the power, and out of the common course of nature; especially wondrous to us, in whose favour they are wrought, who are so unworthy, that we had little reason to expect them. They were wonders of power, and wonders of grace; in both God was to be humbly adored.—Henry.

CHORUS OF WOMEN.—Miriam is joined, by Micah, with Moses and Aaron, in leading forth the people, Mic. vi. 4; and she is here called a prophetess: yet nothing is recorded of her in that character, but her leading the women in this song of praise, joined, according to the usages of the times, with timbrels and dances. It may, however, be observed, that she as well as Aaron said, "Hath not the Lord spoken by us?" Num. xii. 2: and though she was rebuked for her misconduct on that occasion; yet the context seems to imply that the Lord had spoken by her, but not in the same manner as to Moses. Perhaps on some occasions, she delivered the messages of God to the women of Israel. She was at this time about ninety years of age; and, having generally lived with Aaron, she is called his sister, rather than the sister of Moses.—It is supposed that the Israelites sang responsively; and that Miriam led the chorus of the women, when it came to their turn to take up the song of praise. Many passages of Scripture seem to denote this alternate mode of singing, some of which are referred to in the margin.

MARAH.—The immense multitude, with their numerous flocks and herds, marching for three days without any water, except as they might carry some small quantity with them, must have experienced great distress, and perhaps disease: and having found water, but not being able to drink it, they were still more disappointed. Probably the waters of Marah were not only very nauseous, but also unwholesome, so that the trial was very great. Moses did what the people had neglected to do; and, in answer to his prayer, a tree was pointed out to him, by means of which the waters became sweet and wholesome. It cannot reasonably be supposed, that this change was made by a natural efficacy; but rather, that the wood was the appointed token of God's miraculous operation. It may also be considered as a type of the blessings of the gospel, which Christ obtained for us when he hung upon the tree; and which sweeten all our bitterest trials, by giving peace to the conscience, comfort and the hope of glory. —Scott.

ELIM.—At Elim they had good water, and enough of it, ver. 27. Though God may, for a time, order his people to encamp by the waters of Marah, yet that shall not always be their lot. See how changeable our condition is in this world, from better to worse, from worse to better; let us therefore learn both how to be abased and how to abound; to rejoice as though we rejoiced not, when we are full; and to weep as though we wept not, when we are emptied. Here were twelve wells for their supply, one for every tribe, that they might not strive for water, as their fathers had sometimes done; and, for their pleasure, there were seventy palm-trees, under the shadow of which their great men 21 And Miriam [f]answered them, [g]Sing ye to the LORD, for he hath triumphed gloriously; the horse and his rider hath he thrown into the sea.

22 ¶ So Moses brought Israel from the Red sea, and they went out into the [h]wilderness of Shur: and they went [i]three days in the wilderness, and found no water.

23 ¶ And when they came to [k]Marah, they could not drink of the waters of Marah, for they were bitter: therefore the name of it was called ‡Marah.

24 And the people [l]murmured against Moses, saying, [m]What shall we drink?

25 And he [n]cried unto the LORD, and the LORD shewed him [o]a tree,[1] which when he had cast into the waters, the waters were made sweet: there he made for them [p]a statute and an ordinance, and there he [q]proved them.

26 And said, [r]If thou wilt diligently hearken to the voice of the LORD thy God, [s]and wilt do that which is right in his sight, and wilt give ear to his commandments, and keep all his statutes; I will put none of these [t]diseases upon thee, which I have brought upon the Egyptians: [u]for I am the LORD that healeth thee.

27 ¶ And they came to [x]Elim, where were twelve wells of water, and threescore and ten palm-trees: and they encamped there by the waters.

AND they [a]took their journey from Elim, and all the congregation of the children of Israel came unto the wilderness of [b]Sin, which is between Elim and Sinai, on the fifteenth day of the second month, after their departing out of the land of Egypt.

2 And the [c]whole congregation of the children of Israel murmured against Moses and Aaron in the wilderness.

3 And the children of Israel said unto them, [d]Would to God [e]we had died by the hand of the LORD in the land of Egypt, when we sat by the [f]flesh-pots, and when we did eat bread to the full; for ye have brought us forth into this wilderness, [g]to kill this whole assembly with [h]hunger.

4 ¶ Then said the LORD unto Moses, Behold, [i]I will rain bread from heaven for you; and the people shall go out and gather a *certain rate every day, that I may [k]prove them, whether they will walk in my law, or no.

5 And it shall come to pass, that on the sixth day they shall [1]prepare that which they bring in; [m]and it shall be twice as much as they gather daily.

6 And Moses and Aaron said unto all the children of Israel, At [n]even, then ye shall know that [o]the LORD hath brought you out from the land of Egypt.

7 And in [p]the morning, then [q]ye shall see the glory of the LORD; for that he heareth your murmurings against the LORD: and [r]what are we, that ye murmur against us?

8 And Moses said, This shall be, when the LORD shall give you in the evening flesh to eat, and in the morning bread to the full; for that [s]the LORD heareth your murmurings which ye murmur against him. And what are we? your murmurings are not against us, but [t]against the LORD.

9 ¶ And Moses spake unto Aaron, Say unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, [u]Come near before the LORD:[1] for he hath [x]heard your murmurings.

10 And it came to pass, as Aaron spake unto the whole congregation of the children of Israel, [y]that they looked toward the wilderness, and, behold, the glory of the LORD[2] [z]appeared in the cloud.

11 ¶ And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

12 I have heard the murmurings of the children of Israel; speak unto them, saying, At even ye shall eat flesh, and in the morning ye shall be filled with bread: and [a]ye shall know that I am the LORD your God.

13 ¶ And it came to pass, that at even [b]the quails[3] came up, and covered the camp: and in the morning the dew lay round about the host.

14 And when [c]the dew that lay was gone up, behold, upon the face of the wilderness there lay a small round thing, as small as [d]the hoar-frost on the ground.

15 And when the children of Israel saw it, they said one to another, †It is [e]manna:[4] for they wist not what it was. And Moses said unto them, [f]This is the bread which the LORD hath given you to eat.

16 ¶ This is the thing which the LORD hath commanded, Gather of it every man according to his eating: an [g]omer ‡for every man, according to the number of your §persons, take ye every man for them which are in his tents.

17 And the children of Israel did so, and gathered, some more, some less.[5] might repose themselves. Note, God can find places of refreshment for his people even in the wilderness of this world, wells in the valley of Baca, lest they should faint in their mind with perpetual fatigue.—Henry.

LESSON.—Those events in providence, and those experiences in the life of faith, which have occasioned our most distressing apprehensions, often terminate in such a manner as to fill our hearts with gratitude, and our lips with praise; nor would the Lord lead those whom he loves into straits, did he not intend to render them subservient to his own glory, and to their comfort and advantage.—When we have, patiently and quietly, waited for deliverance out of trouble, and have had our expectations answered, we should proclaim to all around us the wonderful works of God: and every one, in the improvement of his talent, and the exercise of his particular endowments, should concur in so pleasant and reasonable a service.—They who oppress the people of God, are his declared enemies, over whom he will at length triumph completely; and all shall acknowledge, that he is "glorious in holiness, as well as power," in their destruction, and in that of all impenitent sinners. But they who humbly submit to him and trust in his mercy, will find that he "is become their salvation," and He will "compass them about with songs of deliverance."—What his grace begins, his power and faithfulness will complete; and, having redeemed them from the bondage of sin and Satan, every past favour becomes an earnest of future benefits, till he shall bring them to his holy habitation in heaven.—Scott.

CHAP. XVI. MURMURING.—The Hebrews so far undervalued their deliverance, that they wished they had died in Egypt, nay, and died by the hand of the Lord too, that is, by some of the plagues which cut off the Egyptians, as if it were not the hand of the Lord, but of Moses only, that brought them into this hungry wilderness. It is common for people to say of that pain, or sickness, or sore, of which they see not the second causes, "It was what pleases God," as if that were not so likewise which comes by the hand of man, or some visible accident. Prodigious madness! They will rather die by the flesh-pots of Egypt, where they found themselves with provision, than live under the guidance of the heavenly pillar in a wilderness, and be provided for by the hand of God; they pronounce it better to have fallen in the destruction of God's enemies, than to bear the fatherly discipline of his children. We cannot suppose that they had any great plenty in Egypt, how largely soever they now talk of the flesh-pots, nor could they fear dying for want in the wilderness, while they had their flocks and herds with them; but discontent magnifies what is past, and villifies what is present, without regard to truth or reason. None talk more absurdly than murmurers.—Henry.

MANNA—ITS NAME.—After the Israelites had feasted at night upon the quails, they found, in the morning, that, along with the dew, there had fallen all around the camp, "a small round thing, as small as the hoar frost;" yet, it had not been exhaled with the dew, but lay on the ground as a solid substance: and, while they did not know what it was, and inquired of each other, they were led to say, "This is man," or man-hu. The common opinion is, that Man-hu may be rendered, What is this? But it appears to be an error; for ma-hu is the proper term for What is this? and man-hu is never used in that sense. But the word man seems to be derived from manah, which is repeatedly used for appointing or preparing, the food for any person or persons, Dan. i. 10; and thus, by an abbreviation not uncommon in the Hebrew, the word man may signify prepared; and Man-hu may mean, This is prepared; or, "This is the food before predicted, which God hath prepared for us."—But, it may be derived from Manah, and signify a gift, or portion, namely, from God. It hath, however, retained the name first given it, as to the substance, in most languages into which the Scriptures have been translated.

THE GATHERING.—The Lord sent the manna, but the people must go out early to gather it; and they were directed to take, for each individual, such a quantity as would in general suffice a healthy man; for that seems to be the meaning of the expression, "Every man according to his eating," when compared with the context. There would be in each tent several women and children, who did not require so much food as the grown men; yet these were directed to gather for every one of them, each man according to "his own eating." And as an omer is computed to be nearly three quarts, wine-measure, it would be a competent supply for an individual. We may suppose, that the several persons capable of labour, in each tent, cast all they gathered into one stock; and when the father of the family came to measure it, he was allowed to retain an omer for each of his household; but if he had any over, he must impart it to his neighbour who had less than that quantity; for some would be less active than others. Thus it came to pass, that he who "gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack;" but, they daily gathered for every individual, in that vast assembly, according to the eating of a grown man, or an omer each; and this was the case during forty years. —Scott.

THE SABBATH.—There was an intermission of the manna on the seventh day; God did not send it them, and therefore they must not expect it, nor go out to gather, ver. 25, 26. This showed that it was not produced by natural causes, and that it was designed for a confirmation of the divine authority of the law which was to be given by Moses. Thus God took an effectual course to make them "remember the Sabbath-day;" they could not forget it, nor the day of preparation for it. Some, it seems, went out on the seventh 19 And Moses said, Let no man [1]leave of it till the morning.

20 Notwithstanding they hearkened not unto Moses, but some of them left of it until the morning, and it [k]bred worms, and stank: [l]and Moses was wroth with them.

21 And they gathered it every [m]morning, every man according to his eating: and when the sun waxed hot it melted.

22 And it came to pass that [n]on the sixth day they gathered twice as much bread, two omers for one man: and all the rulers of the congregation came and told Moses.

23 And he said unto them, This is that which the LORD had said, To-morrow is the [o]rest of the holy sabbath unto the LORD:[6] [p]bake that which ye will bake to-day, and seethe that ye will seethe; and that which remaineth over lay up for you to be kept until the morning.

24 And they laid it up till the morning, as Moses bade: [q]and it did not stink,[7] neither was there any worm therein.

25 And Moses said, Eat that to-day; for to-day is [r]a sabbath unto the LORD: to-day ye shall not find it in the field.

26 [s]Six days ye shall gather it: but on the seventh day, which is the sabbath, in it there shall be none.

27 ¶ And it came to pass, that there went out some of the people on the seventh day for to gather, [t]and they found none.

28 And the LORD said unto Moses, [u]How long refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws?

29 See, for that the LORD [x]hath given you the sabbath, therefore he giveth you on the sixth day the bread of two days: [y]abide ye every man in his place; let no man go out of his place on the seventh day.

30 So the people [z]rested on the seventh day.

31 And the house of Israel [a]called the name thereof Manna: [b]and it was like coriander-seed, white; and the taste of it was like wafers made with honey.

32 ¶ And Moses said, This is the thing which the LORD commandeth, [c]Fill an omer of it to be kept for your generations; that they may see the bread wherewith I have fed you in the wilderness, when I brought you forth from the land of Egypt.

33 And Moses said unto Aaron, [d]Take a pot, and put an omer full of manna therein, and lay it up before the LORD, to be kept for your generations.

34 As the LORD commanded Moses, so Aaron laid it up before the [e]testimony,[8] to be kept.

35 And the children of Israel did eat manna [f]forty years, [g]until they came to a land inhabited: they did eat manna until they came unto [h]the borders of the land of Canaan.

The people murmur for water at Rephidim, 1. Moses sent to the rock in Horeb, 5. Amalek is overcome, 13.

AND all the congregation of the children of Israel journeyed from the wilderness of [a]Sin, after their journeys, according to the commandment of the LORD, and pitched in [b]Rephidim: and there was no water for the people to drink.

2 Wherefore [c]the people did chide with Moses, and said, [d]Give us water that we may drink. And Moses said unto them, Why chide ye with me? [e]Wherefore do ye tempt the LORD?

3 And the people thirsted there for water; and the people murmured against Moses, and said, Wherefore is this that [f]thou hast brought us up out of Egypt, to kill us and our children and our cattle with thirst?

4 And Moses [g]cried unto the LORD, saying, What shall I do unto this people? they be [h]almost ready to stone me.

5 And the LORD said unto Moses, [i]Go on before the people, and take with thee of the elders of Israel: and [k]thy rod, wherewith thou smotest the river, take in thine hand, and go.

6 Behold, [l]I will stand before thee there upon the rock [m]in Horeb; [n]and thou shalt smite the rock,[1] and there shall come water out of it, [o]that the people may drink. And Moses did so in the sight of the elders of Israel.

7 And he called the name of the place [*]Massah and [†]Meribah, because of the [p]chiding of the children of Israel, and because [q]they tempted the LORD, saying, [r]Is the LORD among us, or not?

8 ¶ Then came [s]Amalek, and fought with Israel in Rephidim.

9 And Moses said [t]unto [‡]Joshua, [u]Choose us out men, and go out, fight with Amalek: to-morrow I will stand on the top of the hill, with [x]the rod of God in mine hand.

10 So [y]Joshua did as Moses had said to him, and fought with Amalek: [z]and Moses, Aaron, and [a]Hur, went up to the top of the hill.

11 And it came to pass when [b]Moses held up his hand, that Israel prevailed; and when he let down his hand, Amalek prevailed.

12 But Moses' [c]hands were heavy; and they took a stone, and put it under him, and he sat thereon: and Aaron and Hur [d]stayed up his hands, the one on the one side, and the other on the other side; and his hands were steady until the going down of the sun.

day, expecting to find manna, (ver. 27,) but they found none; for those that will find must seek in the appointed time.

MANNA TYPICAL.—The manna is called "spiritual meat," 1 Cor. x. 3, because it was typical of spiritual blessings in heavenly things; Christ himself is the true Manna, the Bread of life, of which this was a figure, John vi. 49—51. The word of God is the manna by which our souls are nourished, Matt. iv. 4. The comforts of the Spirit are hidden manna, Rev. ii. 17. These come from heaven, as the manna did, and are the support and comfort of the divine life in the soul, while we are in the wilderness of this world. It is food for Israelites, for those only that follow the pillar of cloud and fire; it is to be gathered, Christ in the word is to be applied to the soul, and the means of grace are to be used; we must every one of us gather for ourselves, and gather in the morning of our days, the morning of our opportunities, which, if we let slip, it may be too late to gather. The manna they gathered must not be hoarded up, but eaten; they that have received Christ, must by faith live upon him, and not receive his grace in vain: there was manna enough for all, enough for each, and none had too much; so in Christ there is a complete sufficiency, and no superfluity. But they that did eat manna hungered again, died at last, and with many of them God was not well-pleased; whereas they that feed on Christ by faith shall never hunger, and shall die no more, and with them God will be for ever well-pleased; the Lord evermore give us this bread!—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Changes are prepared for us in this world: we should therefore prepare for them, and be ready to endure hardship, and to exercise faith, patience, and self-denial, whenever called to it. But, before we severely censure others, we ought to put "our souls in their souls' stead." We may easily condemn the Israelites: but perhaps we do not readily suspect, that we also should distrust, despond, and murmur, if proved by far less trials, and left to ourselves: nor do we sufficiently regard their conduct as an intended picture of human nature; and their history, as that of the human heart under the varying dispensations of providence. In whatever situation we are placed, we are prone to undervalue our mercies, to aggravate our troubles, and to compare the unfavourable side of our present circumstances, with the favourable side of some former, or some imaginary, situation; and in this way we are perversely ingenious in rendering ourselves discontented and unthankful; and are ever wishing for some change, yet ever seeming to change for the worse!—Scott.

CHAP. XVII. WATER.—God directed Moses whither to go, and appointed him to take of the elders of Israel with him, to be witnesses of what was done, that they might themselves be satisfied, and might satisfy others, of the certainty of God's presence with them; he promised to meet him there in the cloud of glory, (to encourage him,) and ordered him to smite the rock: Moses obeyed, and immediately water came out of the rock in great abundance, which ran throughout the camp in streams and rivers, (Ps. lxxviii. 15, 16,) and followed them wherever they went in that wilderness: it is called "a fountain of waters," Ps. cxiv. 8. God showed the care he took of his people, in giving them water when they wanted it; he showed his power, in fetching the water out of a rock; and he put an honour upon Moses, in appointing the water to flow out, upon his smiting of the rock. This fair water, that came out of the rock, is called "honey and oil," Deut. xxxii. 13, because the people's thirst made it doubly pleasant; coming when they were in extreme want, it was like honey and oil to them. It is probable the people digged canals for the conveyance of it, and pools for the reception of it, in like manner, as, long afterward, passing through the valley of Baca, they made it a well, Ps. lxxxiv. 6; Num. xxi. 18. Let this direct us to live in a dependence, 1. Upon God's providence, even in the greatest straits and difficulties. God can open fountains for our supply, where we least expect them, "waters in the wilderness," Isa. xliii. 20. 2. Upon Christ's grace; "that Rock was Christ," 1 Cor. x. 4. The graces and comforts of the Spirit are compared to "rivers of living water," John vii. 38, 39; iv. 14.—Henry.

AMALEK.—Joshua, who already was an eminent person, was directed to choose a company of warlike men, and give battle to Amalek; while Moses would place himself on a hill, within sight of the soldiers, lifting up the rod of God, which had been the token of so many miracles, wrought for Israel and against their enemies. No doubt, Moses, Aaron, and Hur (whom some conjecture to have been the husband of Miriam,) united their earnest prayers; and Moses especially was Israel's typical intercessor and mediator; yet, the holding up of his hands, (probably first one, and then the other,) with the rod of God, must chiefly be considered, as an avowed dependence, not on human valour, but, on the power of JEHOVAH for victory. Thus, so long as Moses was able to hold up the rod, Israel prevailed: but, when his hand drooped, then Amalek prevailed: yet, by proper assistance, he was enabled to hold it up till sun-set, by which time Joshua had obtained a complete victory. Perhaps Amalek was the name of the king, as well as of the people: or, the Amalekites were aided by allies, or dependents.—This transaction tended to show the nature and efficacy of faith, and the prevalency of prayer; and typified Christ's effectual intercession for his disciples in all their conflicts.—The people had just before quarrelled with Moses, as if he had meant to kill them; but he was now honoured by holding up the rod of God, the token of their deliverance and triumph.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—We should expect that our enemies will especially assault us, when drinking most abundantly from the living streams of salvation: these will,

CHAP. XVIII.

Jethro bringeth to Moses his wife and two sons, 1; Moses entertaineth him, 7; and accepteth his counsel, 13.

WHEN [a]Jethro, the priest of Midian, Moses' father-in-law, [b]heard of all that [c]God had [d]done for Moses, and for Israel his people, and that the LORD had brought Israel out of Egypt;

2 Then Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, took [e]Zipporah, Moses' wife, after he had sent her back;

3 And her [f]two sons, of which the name of the one was *Gershom, (for he said, I have been an alien in a strange land;)

4 And the name of the other was †Eliezer; for the God of my father, said he, was mine help, and [g]delivered me from the sword of Pharaoh:

5 And Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, came with his sons and his wife unto Moses into the wilderness, where he encamped at the [h]mount of God.

6 And he said unto Moses, I, thy father-in-law Jethro, am come unto thee, and thy wife, and her two sons with her.

7 ¶ And Moses [l]went out to meet his father-in-law, and [k]did obeisance, and [l]kissed him, and they asked each other of their ‡welfare: and they came into the tent.

8 And Moses [m]told his father-in-law all that the LORD had done unto Pharaoh, and to the Egyptians, for Israel's sake, [n]and all the travail that [o]had come upon them by the way, and how [p]the LORD delivered them.

9 ¶ And Jethro [p]rejoiced for all the goodness which the LORD had done to Israel, whom he had delivered out of the hand of the Egyptians.

10 And Jethro said, [q]Blessed be the LORD, who hath delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, and out of the hand of Pharaoh, who hath delivered the people from under the hand of the Egyptians.

11 Now [r]I know that [s]the LORD is greater than all gods: for [t]in the thing wherein they dealt [u]proudly, he was above them.

12 And Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, [x]took a burnt-offering, and sacrifices for God: and [y]Aaron came, and all the elders of Israel, to [z]eat bread with Moses' father-in-law before God.

13 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, that Moses [a]sat to judge the people: and the people stood by Moses, from the morning unto the evening.

14 And when Moses' father-in-law saw all that he did to the people, he said, What is this thing that thou doest to the people? why sittest thou thyself alone, and all the people stand by thee from morning unto even?

15 And Moses said unto his father-in-law, Because the people come unto me [b]to enquire of God.

16 When they have [c]a matter, they come unto me, and I judge between [l]one and another, and I do [d]make them know the statutes of God and his laws.

17 And Moses' father-in-law said unto him, The thing that thou doest is not good.

18 *Thou wilt surely [e]wear away, both thou and this people that is with thee: for this thing is too heavy for thee; [f]thou art not able to perform it thyself alone.

19 [g]Hearken now unto my voice: I will give thee counsel, and [h]God shall be with thee: [l]Be thou for the people to God-ward, that thou mayest bring the causes unto God:

20 And thou shalt [k]teach them ordinances and laws, and shalt shew them [l]the way wherein they must walk, and the [m]work that they must do.

21 Moreover, [n]thou shalt provide out of all the people [o]able men, [p]such as fear God, [q]men of truth, [r]hating covetousness: and place such over them, to be [s]rulers of thousands, and rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens.

22 And let them judge the people [t]at all seasons; and it shall be, that every [u]great matter they shall bring unto thee, but every small matter they shall judge; so it shall be easier for thyself, and [x]they shall bear the burden with thee.

23 If thou shalt do this thing, and [y]God command thee so, then thou shalt be able to endure, [z]and all this people shall also go to their place in peace.

24 So [a]Moses hearkened to the voice of his father-in-law, and did all that he had said.

25 And Moses [b]chose able men out of all Israel, and made them heads over the people, rulers of thousands, rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens.

26 And they judged the people [c]at all seasons: [d]the hard causes they brought unto Moses, but every small matter they judged themselves.

however, prepare us for the conflict; and, fighting under the LORD our Banner, we shall finally prevail, and give him the glory.—We may also observe that some men are useful in one way, and some in another; but, none are so serviceable as they, who serve the public by the fervent persevering prayers of faith. Little do statesmen in the cabinet, or commanders in the field, understand, how much the success of their deliberations and efforts is influenced by the prayers of the true Christian in his closet, in his family, and in the house of God!—Scott.

CHAP. XVIII. JETHRO'S VISIT.—Observe here, The kind greeting that was between Moses and his father-in-law, ver. 7. Though Moses was a prophet of the Lord, a great prophet, and king in Jeshurun, yet he showed a very humble respect to his father-in-law. However God in his providence is pleased to advance us, we must make conscience of giving honour to whom honour is due, and never look with disdain upon our poor relations. Those that stand high in the favour of God are not thereby discharged from the duty they owe to men, nor will that justify them in a stately haughty carriage. Moses went out to meet Jethro, did "obeisance to him, and kissed him." Religion does not destroy good manners. "They asked each other of their welfare." Even the kind How-do-yous that pass between them are taken notice of, as the expressions and improvements of mutual love and friendship.—Henry.

JETHRO'S ADVICE.—The earnestness of mind, with which Moses engaged in this important work, had caused him to overlook the consequences of such incessant application, which must have soon worn him down, and have eventually proved injurious to the people also; and it did not please the Lord to instruct him, in this point of discretion, immediately, but by the counsel of a wise and pious man, and a descendant of Abraham, though not an Israelite.—When Jethro therefore observed his method of procedure, he ventured to object to it, and to give him advice, which he trusted God would approve and prosper.—Let him reserve himself for such causes as were more difficult; or such as more immediately referred to the ordinances and commandments of God, as far as then made known to him; and concerning which he would, by divine inspiration, receive more complete instruction that he might teach the people: and let him select proper persons for ability, piety, integrity, and disinterestedness, in due subordination to each other; who might judge and decide all those causes, to which they were competent, and only refer those to Moses which they knew not how to determine. But, in giving this wise counsel, Jethro intimated, that Moses should refer the matter to God, and only follow it as God had previously instructed him.—Scott.

In [illegible] great care should be taken in the choice of the persons who should be admitted into this trust; ver. 21, they must "be able men," &c. It was requisite that they should be men of the best character, First, For judgment and resolution; "able men," men of good sense, that understood business, and bold men, that would not be daunted by frowns or clamours. Clear heads and stout hearts make good judges. Secondly, For piety and religion; "such as fear God," as believe there is a God above them, whose eye is upon them, to whom they are accountable, and whose judgment they stand in awe of; conscientious men, that dare not do a base thing, though they could do it ever so secretly and securely. The fear of God is that principle which will best fortify a man against all temptations to injustice, Neh. v. 15; Gen. xlii. 18. Thirdly, For integrity and honesty; "men of truth," whose word one may take, and whose fidelity one may rely upon; who would not for a world tell a lie, betray a trust, or act an insidious part. Fourthly, For a noble and generous contempt of worldly wealth; "hating covetousness," not only not seeking bribes, or aiming to enrich themselves, but abhorring the thought of it; he is fit to be a magistrate, and he alone, who "despiseth the gain of oppressions, and shaketh his hands from the holding of bribes," Isa. xxxiii. 15.

JETHRO'S RETURN.—No doubt he took home with him the improvements he had made in the knowledge of God, and communicated them to his neighbours for their instruction. It is supposed that the Kenites (mentioned 1 Sam. xv. 6,) were the posterity of Jethro, (compare Judges i. 16,) and they are there taken under special protection, for the kindness their ancestor here showed Israel. The good-will showed to God's people, even in the smallest instances, shall in no wise lose its reward, but shall be recompensed, at furthest, in the resurrection.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The report of the Lord's power and goodness, shown in behalf of Israel, having reached distant places, confirmed the faith, and excited the joy and gratitude, of those who were not personally interested in these peculiar benefits: and the records of the same events, handed down to these distant ages, should produce the same effects upon our minds; that we too may be established in the faith, and stirred up to trust and praise the Lord for his mercies to Israel.—Husbands and wives may, on some occasions, be obliged to separate for a time; but the sooner they meet again, and the more they live together, the better: and though it may be improper for the female sex to share the dangers and hardships of extraordinary undertakings; yet the wife should participate the ordinary cares, and every comfort and honour of the husband. Nor should children be needlessly deprived of the great benefit, which they may derive from the instruction and example of pious and wise parents: and when the people witness how well they, who are [illegible] with the administration of public affairs, and take

CHAP. XIX.

The people come to Sinai, 1. God's message to them out of the mount, 3; their answer, 8; His fearful presence, 16.

IN [a]the third month, when the children of Israel were gone forth out of the land of Egypt, the same day [b]came they into the wilderness of Sinai.

2 For they were departed from [c]Rephidim, and were come to the desert of Sinai, and had pitched in the wilderness, and there Israel [d]camped before the mount.

3 ¶ And Moses [e]went up unto God, and the LORD [f]called unto him out of the mountain, saying, Thus shalt thou say to the house of Jacob, and tell the children of Israel;

4 Ye have [g]seen what I did unto the Egyptians, and how [h]I bare you on eagles' wings,[1] and brought you unto myself.

5 Now therefore, [i]if ye will obey my voice indeed, and [k]keep my covenant, then ye shall be [l]a peculiar treasure unto me above all people: for [m]all the earth is mine.

6 And ye shall be unto me [n]a kingdom of priests,[2] [o]and an holy nation. These are the words which thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel.

7 ¶ And Moses came and called for [p]the elders of the people, [q]and laid before their faces all these words which the Lord commanded him.

8 And all the people [r]answered together, and said, All that the Lord hath spoken we will do. And Moses returned the words of the people unto the LORD.

9 And the LORD said unto Moses, [s]Lo, I come unto thee in a thick cloud, [t]that the people may hear when I speak with thee, and [u]believe thee for ever. And Moses told the words of the people unto the LORD.

10 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Go unto the people, and [x]sanctify them to-day and to-morrow, and let them [y]wash their clothes,

11 And be ready against the third day: for the third day [z]the LORD will come down in the sight of all the people upon Mount Sinai.[3]

12 And thou shalt [a]set bounds unto the people round about, saying, [b]Take heed to yourselves, that ye go not up into the mount, [c]or touch the border of it: whosoever toucheth the mount shall be surely put to death.

13 There shall not an hand touch it, but he shall surely be stoned or shot through; [d]whether it be beast[4] or man, it shall not live: [e]when the [*]trumpet soundeth long, they shall come up to the mount.

14 ¶ And Moses went down from the mount unto the people, [f]and sanctified the people, and they washed their clothes.

15 And he said unto the people, [g]Be ready against [h]the third day; [i]come not at your wives.

16 ¶ And it came to pass on the third day in the morning, that there were [k]thunders and lightnings, and a [l]thick cloud upon the mount, and the [m]voice of the trumpet exceeding loud; so that [n]all the people that was in the camp trembled.

17 And [o]Moses brought forth the people out of the camp to meet with God, and they stood at the nether part of the mount.

18 And [p]mount Sinai was altogether on a smoke, because the LORD decended upon it [q]in fire: and the smoke thereof ascended [r]as the smoke of a furnace, and the [s]whole mount quaked greatly.

19 And [t]when the voice of the trumpet sounded long, and waxed louder and louder, [u]Moses spake, and [x]God answered him by a voice.

20 And [y]the LORD came down upon mount Sinai, on the top of the mount: and the LORD called Moses up to the top of the mount, and [z]Moses went up.

21 And the LORD said unto Moses, Go down, [a]charge the people, lest they [b]break through unto the LORD to gaze, and many of them perish.

22 And let [c]the priests also, which come near to the LORD, [d]sanctify themselves, lest the LORD [e]break forth upon them.

23 And Moses said unto the LORD, The people cannot come up to mount Sinai: for thou chargedst us, saying, [f]Set bounds about the mount, and sanctify it.

24 And the LORD said unto him, Away, get thee down, [g]and thou shalt come up, thou, and Aaron with thee: [h]but let not the priests and the people break through, to come up unto the LORD, [i]lest he break forth upon them.

25 So [k]Moses went down unto the people, and spake unto them care of the church of God, regulate their own families, the example will be peculiarly useful.—Scott.

CHAP. XIX. Sinai.—The date of that great charter by which Israel was incorporated is here given. 1. The time when it bears date, ver. 1, "in the third month" after they came out of Egypt. It is computed that the law was given just fifty days after their coming out of Egypt, in remembrance of which, the feast of Pentecost was observed the fiftieth day after the passover; and, in compliance with which, the spirit was poured out upon the apostles, at the feast of Pentecost, fifty days after the death of Christ. In Egypt they had spoken of a three days' journey into the wilderness to the place of their sacrifice, chap. v. 3, but it proved to be almost a two months' journey; so often are we out of calculation of times; and things prove longer in the doing than we expected. 2. The place whence it bears date; from mount Sinai, a place which nature, not art, had made eminent and conspicuous, for it was the highest in all that range of mountains. Thus God put contempt upon cities and palaces, and magnificent structures, setting up his pavilion on the top of a high mountain, in a waste and barren desert, there to carry on this treaty. It is called Sinai, from the multitude of thorny bushes that overspread it. —Henry.

The Covenant.—The national covenant with Israel is here meant; the charter upon which they were incorporated, as a people, under the government of Jehovah. It was an engagement of God, to give Israel possession of Canaan, and to protect them in it: to render the land fruitful, and the nation victorious and prosperous, and to perpetuate his oracles and ordinances among them; so long as they did not, as a people, reject his authority, apostatize to idolatry, and tolerate open wickedness. These things constituted a forfeiture of the covenant; as their national rejection of Christ did afterwards.—True believers among them were personally dealt with according to the covenant of mercy and grace, even as true Christians now are; and believers were under the covenant of works, and liable to condemnation by it, as at present: yet the national covenant was not strictly either the one or the other, but had something in it of the nature of each. It did not refer to the final salvation of individuals; nor was it broken by the disobedience, or even idolatry, of any number of them, provided this was not sanctioned or tolerated by public authority. It was indeed a type of the covenant, made with true believers in Christ Jesus; as were all the transactions with Israel: but, like other types, it "had not the very image," but only "a shadow of good things to come." —Scott.

God on Sinai.—Now, at length, is come that memorable day, that terrible day of the Lord, that day of judgment in which "Israel heard the voice of the Lord God" speaking to them "out of the midst of the fire, and lived," Deut. iv. 33. Never was there such a sermon preached, before or since, as this which was here preached to the church in the wilderness. For, 1. The preacher was God himself, ver. 18; "The Lord descended in fire," and, ver. 20, "The Lord came down upon mount Sinai." The Shechinah, or glory of the Lord, appeared in the sight of all the people; he "shined forth from mount Paran, with ten thousands of his saints," Deut. xxxiii. 2, that is, attended as the Divine Majesty always is, with a multitude of the holy angels, who were both to grace the solemnity, and to assist it. Hence the law is said to be given "by the disposition of angels," Acts vii. 53. 2. The pulpit (or throne rather) was mount Sinai, hung with a thick cloud, ver. 16, covered with smoke, ver. 18, and made to quake greatly. Now it was that the earth "trembled at the presence of the Lord," and the "mountains skipped like rams," Psal. cxiv. 4, 7; that Sinai itself, the rough and rocky, "melted before the Lord God of Israel," Judg. v. 5. 3. The congregation was called together by the "sound of a trumpet, exceeding loud," ver. 16, and "waxing louder and louder," ver. 19. This was done by the ministry of the angels, and we read of trumpets sounded by angels, Rev. viii. 6. 4. Moses brought the hearers to the place of meeting, ver. 17. He that had led them out of the bondage of Egypt, now led them to receive the law from God's mouth. Public persons are then public blessings, when they lay out themselves in their places to promote the public worship of God. 5. The introductions to the service were "thunders and lightnings," ver. 16. These were designed to strike an awe upon the people, and to raise and engage their attention. Were they asleep? The thunders would awaken them. Were they looking another way? The lightnings would engage them to turn their faces towards him that spake to them. Thunder and lightning have natural causes, but the scripture directs us in a particular manner to take notice of the power of God, and his terror in them. Thunder is the voice of God, and lightning the fire of God, proper to engage the senses of sight and hearing, those senses by which we receive so much of our information. 6. Moses is God's minister, who is spoken to, to command silence, and keep the congregation in order, ver. 19; "Moses spake." Some think that it was now that he said, "I exceedingly fear and quake," Heb. xii. 21, but God stilled his fear by his distinguishing favour to him, in calling him up to the top of the mount, ver. 20, by which also he tried his faith and courage.—Henry.

3 ¶ Thou shalt have [e]no other gods before me.

4 Thou [f]shalt not make unto thee any [2]graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth:

5 Thou shalt not [g]bow down thyself to them, nor serve them: [h]for I the LORD thy God am a jealous God, [i]visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of [k]them that hate me;

6 And [l]shewing mercy unto thousands of them that [m]love me, and keep my commandments.

7 Thou shalt not [n]take the name of the LORD thy God in vain; for the LORD will not hold him [o]guiltless that taketh his name in vain.

8 [p]Remember the sabbath-day, to keep it holy.

9 [q]Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work.

10 But [r]the seventh day is the sabbath of the LORD thy God: in it [s]thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, [t]thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor [u]thy stranger that is within thy gates.

11 For in [x]six days the LORD made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the LORD blessed the sabbath-day, and [y]hallowed it.

12 ¶ [z]Honour thy father and thy mother: [a]that thy days may be long upon the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

13 [b]Thou shalt not kill.

14 [c]Thou shalt not commit adultery.

15 [d]Thou shalt not steal.

16 [e]Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour.

17 [f]Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's house, thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's [g]wife, nor his man-servant, nor his maid-servant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor any thing that [h]is thy neighbour's.

18 ¶ And [i]all the people saw the thunderings, and the lightnings, and the noise of the trumpet, and the mountain smoking; and when the people saw it, [k]they removed, and stood afar off.

19 And they said unto Moses, [l]Speak thou with us, and we will hear: but [m]let not God speak with us, lest we die.

20 And Moses said unto the people, [n]Fear not: for God is come to [o]prove you, and that [p]his fear may be before your faces, that ye sin not.

21 And [q]the people stood afar off, and Moses drew near unto the [r]thick darkness where God was.

22 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Thus thou shalt say unto the children of Israel, Ye have seen that [s]I have talked with you from heaven.

23 Ye [t]shall not make with me gods of silver, neither shall ye make unto you gods of gold.[1]

24 ¶ An [u]altar[2] of earth thou shalt make unto me, and shalt sacrifice thereon thy [x]burnt-offerings, and thy peace-offerings, thy sheep, and thine oxen: [y]in all places where I record my name, I will come unto thee, and I will [z]bless thee.

25 And [a]if thou wilt make me an altar of stone, thou shalt not [b]build it of hewn stone: for if thou lift up thy tool upon it, thou hast polluted it.

26 Neither shalt thou go up by steps unto mine altar, that [c]thy nakedness be not discovered thereon.

CHAP. XXI.

Laws for servants, 1; for manslaughter, 12; man-stealers, 16; curses of parents, and several others, 17.

NOW these are [a]the judgments [b]which thou shalt set before them.

2 If thou buy [c]an Hebrew servant, six years he shall serve: [d]and in the seventh he shall go out free for nothing.

3 If he came in [*]by himself, he shall go out by himself: if he were married, then his wife shall go out with him.

4 If his master have given him a wife, and she have born him sons or daughters; the wife and her children shall be her master's, and he shall go out by himself.

5 And [e]if the servant [†]shall plainly say, I love my master, my wife, and my children, I will not go out free:

6 Then his master shall bring him unto [f]the judges; he shall also bring him to the door, or unto the door-post: and his master shall [g]bore his ear through with an awl; and he shall serve him [h]for ever.

7 ¶ And if a man [i]sell his daughter to be a maid-servant, she shall not go out as the men-servants do.

8 If she [‡]please not her master, [k]who hath betrothed her to himself, then shall he let her be redeemed. To sell her unto a strange nation he shall have no power, [l]seeing he hath dealt deceitfully with her.

9 And if he have betrothed her unto his son, he shall deal with her after the manner of daughters.

God; of that law, which is commonly called the moral law, to distinguish it from the other injunctions of the Mosaic dispensation.—As the full and exact knowledge of this law is peculiarly important, in order to our clearly understanding the whole system of revealed religion, I shall introduce the exposition of it, by some observations on its nature, obligations, and uses. It is evident that there is a distinction between moral precepts, and instituted appointments. Some things are in themselves so indifferent, that the same authority which enjoined them, might, without impropriety, have prohibited them; as the use of bread and wine in one religious ordinance, and the use of water in another. But there are laws of a widely different nature: and it is absurd to suppose that God could have forbidden us to love him and one another, or to speak truth and do justice. Indeed ritual precepts are for the time equally obligatory; except when they come in competition with moral duties, and then the Lord "will have mercy, and not sacrifice." But the ritual injunction is of temporary obligation; it had no existence before its express appointment, and it may be vacated by the same authority; or, having answered the purpose, its obligations may cease of course: while the moral precept is of immutable and eternal validity. The different circumstances, indeed, in which rational creatures may be placed, occasion a variation arising from those changes of circumstances; as the entrance of sin and misery has rendered patience, and forgiveness of injuries, exercises of our love to God and to our neighbour. These and many other things, required of us in our present situation, will indeed cease entirely in heaven; yet the grand principles from which they are deduced, would have been the same, had we never sinned, and they will remain the same to all eternity.—Some traces of the moral law are discoverable by our natural reason, and the whole perfectly accords to it. It has its foundation in the name of God and of man; in the relations men bear to him and to each other; and in the duties which result from those relations: and on this account it is immutable and universally obligatory. Though given, on this particular occasion, to Israel, it demands obedience from all mankind; and the whole world will be judged according to this law, and to the opportunity which they have had of becoming acquainted with it; whether by reason and tradition alone, or by the light of the written word; except as the believer obtains deliverance from its merited condemnation. The law is also spiritual; that is, it takes cognizance of our spirits, or our most secret thoughts, motives, intentions, and dispositions; and demands a holy regulation of the judgment, will, and affections. It particularly requires LOVE, without which the best outward obedience is condemned as mere hypocrisy. This is peculiar to the law of God, [illegible] and no other law ever attempted to enforce the [illegible] other laws, it depends [illegible] uninterrupted, and perpetual obedience; for no law can tolerate the transgression of itself. From the entrance to the close of life, God requires of us exact conformity to every precept: he that "keepeth the whole law, and offendeth in one point, is guilty of all:" and the least deviation, whether by omission or commission, excess or defect, is sin; and every sin deserves wrath and needs forgiveness, 1 John iii. 4.—The ten commandments are a compendium of the holy law, which is commented on in all the preceptive parts of Scripture; and the substance of its requirements is given, still more concisely, in the two great commandments, "Thou shalt love the LORD thy God, with all thine heart, and with all thy mind, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength:"—and "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." We are authorized by the example of Christ, to interpret every one of these commands in the strictest, most spiritual, and extensive sense of which it is capable.—Scott.

CHAP. XXI. SLAVERY.—The Israelites sometimes sold themselves, or their children, through poverty; magistrates sold some persons for their crimes; and creditors were, in certain cases, allowed to sell their insolvent debtors. In these ways slavery had been, or would soon be, introduced among the Israelites, even that of their brethren as well as strangers; and God did not see good, in the judicial law, totally to prohibit this, and several other things, which are not agreeable to the perfect demands of the moral law.—In the government of nations, legislators must judge how far it is practicable, expedient, or conducive to the grand ends of magistracy, to require all that is right, and forbid all that is wrong, under penal sanctions; and in this respect Israel was like other nations. Indeed, the moral and judicial law were enacted by the same Lawgiver, and coincided, as far as infinite wisdom saw it to be conducive to the grand ends in view; but, as they were intended for very distinct purposes, they must in many things vary. The moral law commanded every thing spiritually good in its utmost perfection, and tolerated nothing wrong in the smallest degree; but, the sentence of it was reserved "to that day, when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ." The judicial law commanded nothing morally bad, and forbade nothing morally good; but, as sentence according to it would be pronounced by the civil magistrate, it did not insist on the same perfection; and, besides that it enjoined nothing concerning the state of the heart, except as the intentions could be judged of by words and actions; it had also respect to the situation, character, and peculiar circumstances of the nation to be governed; and supposed the existence of some evils, which could not be eradicated without a constant miracle; and it provided against their evil effects.—This distinction, carefully attended to, will account for many things [illegible] in the Mosaic law, which are condemned in 26 ¶ And if a man [n]smite the eye of his servant, or the eye of his maid, that it perish; he shall let him go free for his eye's sake.

27 And if he smite out his man-servant's tooth, or his maid-servant's tooth; he shall let him go free for his tooth's sake.

28 ¶ If an ox gore a man or a woman, that they die: then [o]the ox shall be surely stoned, and his flesh shall not be eaten; but the owner of the ox shall be quit.

29 But if the ox were wont to push with his horn in time past, and it hath been testified to his owner, and he hath not kept him in, but that he hath killed a man or a woman; the ox shall be stoned, and [p]his owner also shall be put to death.

30 If there be laid on him a sum of money, then he shall give [q]for the ransom of his life, whatsoever is laid upon him.

31 Whether he have gored a son or have gored a daughter, according to this judgment shall it be done unto him.

32 If the ox shall push a man-servant, or maid-servant; he shall give unto their master [r]thirty shekels of silver, [s]and the ox shall be stoned.

33 ¶ And if a man shall [t]open a pit, or if a man shall dig a pit, and not cover it, and an ox or an ass fall therein;

34 The [u]owner of the pit shall make it good, and give money unto the owner of them; and the dead beast shall be his.

35 ¶ And if one man's ox hurt another's that he die, then they shall sell the live ox, and divide the money of it, and the dead ox also they shall divide.

36 Or [x]if it be known that the ox hath used to push in time past,[3] and his owner hath not kept him in; he shall surely pay ox for ox, and the dead shall be his own.

[3] There is a great difference between what is done casually, and what is done constantly. The former verse speaks of the hurt done by a beast that was not accustomed to push; and this, of the hurt done by one notoriously mischievous. Accordingly, greater damages were given in this latter case than in the former. And by this general rule the Jews regulated all other cases.—Patrick.

Of theft, 1; of damage, 5; of trespasses, 7; of borrowing, 14; of fornication, 16; of witchcraft, and other offences, 18.

IF a man shall steal an ox, or a [*]sheep, and kill it, or sell it; [a]he shall restore [b]five oxen for an ox, and four sheep for a sheep.

2 ¶ If a thief be found [c]breaking up, and be smitten that he die, there shall [d]no blood be shed for him.

3 If the sun be risen upon him,[1] there shall be blood shed for him: for he should make full restitution; if he have nothing, [e]then he shall be sold for his theft.

4 If the theft be certainly [f]found in his hand alive, whether it be ox, or ass, or sheep; [g]he shall restore double.

5 ¶ If a man shall cause a field or vineyard to be eaten, and shall put in his beast, and shall feed in another man's field: of the best of his own field, and of the best of his own vineyard, [h]shall he make restitution.

6 ¶ If fire break out, and catch in thorns, [i]so that the stacks of corn, or the standing corn, or the field be consumed therewith; [k]he that kindled the fire shall surely make restitution.

the New Testament; and not only there, but, in the moral law of "loving our neighbour as ourselves." They are not sanctioned, but merely "suffered because of the hardness of the people's hearts," or on some account to prevent worse consequences. Slavery was almost universal in the world; and though, like wars, it always proceeded of evil, and was generally evil in itself; yet, the wisdom of God deemed it better to regulate, than to prohibit, it; we should not, however, judge of the practice itself by these judicial regulations, but, by the law of love. Slavery, like war, may in some cases, in the present state of things, be lawful: for, the crime which forfeits life, no doubt forfeits liberty; and it is not inconsistent even with the moral law, for a criminal to be sold and treated as a slave, during a term of time proportioned to his offence. In most other cases, if not in all, it must be inconsistent with the law of love.—Scott.

Freedom.—We have a law concerning men-servants, sold, either by themselves, or their parents, through poverty, or by the judges, for their crimes; even those of the latter sort (if Hebrews) were to continue in slavery but seven years at the most, in which time it was taken for granted that they would sufficiently smart for their folly or offence. At seven years' end, the servant should either go out free, ver. 2, 3, or his servitude should from thenceforward be his choice, ver. 5, 6. If he had a wife given him by his master, and children, he might either leave them and go out free himself, or, if he had such a kindness for them, that he would rather tarry with them in bondage than go out at liberty without them, he was to have his ear bored through to the doorpost, and serve till the death of his master, or the year of jubilee. By this law, God taught, 1. The Hebrew servants generosity, and a noble love of liberty, for they were the Lord's freemen; a mark of disgrace must be put upon him who refused liberty when he might have it, though he refused it upon considerations otherwise laudable enough. Thus Christians, being "bought with a price, and called unto liberty," must not be the servants of men, not of the lusts of men, 1 Cor. vii. 23. There is a free and princely spirit that much helps to uphold a Christian, Ps. li. 12. He likewise taught, 2. The Hebrew masters not to trample upon their poor servants, knowing, not only that they had been by birth upon a level with them, but that, in a few years, they would be so again. Thus Christian masters must look with respect on believing servants, Philem. 16. —Henry.

Sacredness of Life.—If on any sudden quarrel two men fought together, and one smote the other, either with his fist, or a stone, or whatever came to hand, he was not to be punished as a murderer, provided the wounded person so far recovered as to walk abroad again; because, if he died afterwards, it might be supposed that his death arose from some other cause. This exception forcibly establishes the general rule, and shows that, even in unpremeditated encounter, if one man killed another, either on the spot, or by a mortal wound, he was adjudged a murderer, and punished as such, without even determining who was the aggressor in the quarrel; nor is there any exception, in this case, in the laws respecting the cities of refuge. Even if the person smitten recovered, the other must pay him for his loss of time, and the expenses of his being thoroughly cured. The killing of a slave, by any weapon of death, was not distinguished in the law from other murders; and if a slave died, while his master was correcting him with a rod or staff, the master must be surely punished. It is not said, "He shall surely be put to death;" and it is therefore supposed that a discretionary power was lodged with the magistrates, to punish him according to circumstances, which might make his cruelty appear more or less atrocious. It could not, however, be supposed that he meant to commit murder, and the death of his slave would be a considerable loss to him; so that if the slave lived a day or two afterwards, the master was not to be punished by the magistrate, but left to the judgment of God. Further, to show the value of the life of man in the judgment of God, to enhance the horror at the thoughts of murder in the mind of every Israelite, and to increase circumspection in guarding against every thing which might cause death, it was enacted, that the ox, or bull, which gored any person, so that he died, should be stoned. For similar reasons, and that the owner's loss might be the greater, it was added, that his flesh should not be eaten.—Scott.

CHAP. XXII. Robbery.—The instances here adduced to fix the principles on which the magistrates of Israel must proceed in regard to theft and robbery, are taken chiefly from the cattle; because in these their property chiefly consisted, and these would likewise be most exposed to depredation. If any person had stolen a sheep, or goat, and had proceeded so far as to kill or sell it, he was sentenced to restore fourfold; if an ox, which, besides its value, was very useful for labour, fivefold. Yet, in case his theft was detected while the animal was still alive in his possession, he was only required to restore it double; probably, because in this case, he seemed to discover more hesitation, and less subtlety, or industry, in dishonesty, than if he had proceeded to sell or kill it. The ass is also mentioned in this clause; and no doubt the camel, and other useful animals, were included in the design of the law.—But, if the thief voluntarily confessed, and restored the property which he had stolen, he was only required to add a fifth part to it. (Lev. vi. 4, 5.) In case, however, any one was detected in the night, endeavouring forcibly to break into a house, it might be considered as an assault on the lives of the inhabitants, as well as an attempt to plunder their property; and if, in repelling the assault, the robber was slain, the person who killed him was not punishable. But, if he was slain after out of the man's house; [l]if the thief be found, [m]let him pay double.

8 If the thief be not found, then the master of the house shall be brought unto [n]the judges, to see whether he have put his hand unto his neighbour's goods.

9 For all manner of [o]trespass, whether it be for ox, for ass, for sheep, for raiment, or for any manner of lost thing, which another challengeth to be his: [p]the cause of both parties shall come before the judges; and whom the judges shall condemn, he shall [q]pay double unto his neighbour.

10 If a man [r]deliver unto his neighbour an ass, or an ox, or a sheep, or any beast, to keep; and it die, or be hurt, or driven away, no man seeing it:

11 Then shall [s]an oath of the LORD be between them both, [t]that he hath not put his hand unto his neighbour's goods; and the owner of it shall accept thereof, and he shall not make it good.

12 And if it be [u]stolen from him, he shall make restitution unto the owner thereof.

13 If it be [x]torn in pieces, then let him bring it for witness, and he shall not make good that which was torn.

14 ¶ And if a man [y]borrow ought of his neighbour, and it be hurt, or die, the owner thereof being not with it; he shall surely [z]make it good.

15 But if the owner thereof be with it, he shall not make it good: if it be an hired thing, [a]it came for his hire.

16 ¶ And if [b]a man entice a maid that is not betrothed, and lie with her; he shall surely endow her to be his wife.

17 If her father [c]utterly refuse to give her unto him, he shall [*]pay money according to the [d]dowry of virgins.

18 ¶ Thou [e]shalt not suffer a witch[2] to live.

19 ¶ Whosoever [f]lieth with a beast, shall surely be put to death.

20 ¶ He that [g]sacrificeth unto any god, save unto the LORD only, he shall be [h]utterly destroyed.

21 ¶ Thou shalt neither [i]vex a stranger, nor oppress him: [k]for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt.

22 ¶ Ye [l]shall not afflict any widow, or fatherless child.

23 If thou afflict them in any wise, and they [m]cry at all unto me, [n]I will surely hear their cry;

24 And [o]my wrath shall wax hot, and I will kill you with the sword; and [p]your wives shall be widows, and your children fatherless.

25 ¶ If thou [q]lend money to any of my people that is poor by thee, thou shalt not be to him as an usurer, neither shalt thou lay upon him usury.

26 ¶ If thou at all take thy neighbour's raiment [r]to pledge, thou shalt deliver it unto him by that the sun goeth down:

27 For that is his covering only, it is his raiment for his skin: wherein shall he sleep? And it shall come to pass, [s]when he crieth unto me, that I will hear; [t]for I am gracious.

28 ¶ Thou shalt not revile the gods, [u]nor curse the ruler of thy people.

29 Thou [x]shalt not delay to offer [†]the first of thy ripe fruits and of thy [‡]lipuors: [y]the first-born of thy sons shalt thou give unto me.

30 Likewise shalt thou do with thine oxen, and with thy sheep: [z]seven days it shall be with his dam; on the eight day thou shalt give it me.

31 And ye shall be [a]holy men unto me: [b]neither shall ye eat any flesh that is torn of beasts in the field; ye shall cast it to the dogs.

THOU [a]shalt not [*]raise a false report: put not thine hand with the wicked to be [b]an unrighteous witness.

2 Thou shalt not [c]follow a multitude to do evil: neither shalt thou [†]speak in a cause [d]to decline after many to wrest judgment.

3 ¶ Neither shalt thou [e]countenance a poor man in his cause.

4 ¶ If thou meet [f]thine enemy's ox or his ass going astray, thou shalt surely bring it back to him again.

5 If thou see the ass of him that hateth thee lying under his burden, and [‡]wouldest forbear to help him, thou shalt surely help with him.

6 ¶ Thou shalt not [g]wrest the judgment of thy poor in his cause.

7 Keep thee [h]far from a false matter; and [i]the innocent and righteous slay thou not: [k]for I will not justify the wicked.

8 ¶ And [l]thou shalt take no gift: for the gift blindeth [§]the wise, and perverteth the words of the righteous.

9 ¶ Also [m]thou shalt not oppress a stranger: for [n]ye know the [†]heart of a stranger, seeing ye were strangers in the land of Egypt.

sunrise, his death must be punished as murder; because there was another method of securing or recovering the property; and it is supposed that no assault was made on the life of any one.—In all cases, when the thief, or robber, could not make the stipulated restitution, he was sold for the theft for a limited time, not exceeding six years.

CHASTITY.—This statute relates to a case which must carefully be distinguished from some others that may be otherwise confounded with it. It is assumed, that no force was used, but merely persuasions and blandishments; and that the young woman was not betrothed to another man. In general, it might be supposed that promises, or, at least, intimations of marriage, would be made by the seducer: and therefore he was bound to "endow her to be his wife." Some expositors are of opinion, that he must either endow her, that is, give her a sum of money for the injury, or marry her: but the obvious meaning of the law is, that he must take her for his wife, and endow her, or provide for her suitably according to his station. It does not appear that either the seducer, or the person seduced, was allowed a negative; but the young woman's father might refuse his consent, and, in this case, the seducer must pay a certain sum of money as a compensation for the injury.

WITCHCRAFT.—Witchcraft is generally understood to mean, "a compact with evil spirits, by whose agency and assistance, applied for by certain incantations, effects of various kinds may be produced, by which malice, or covetousness, or other corrupt passions may be gratified." A vast variety of practices, with different degrees of aggravation, which will hereafter be considered, agree in common with witchcraft, in avowedly making Satan "the god of the world," and the god of those who thus apply to him for information or assistance. It is readily allowed that much imposture on the one hand, (which forms a very singular kind of hypocrisy,) and much superstition, folly, and cruelty, on the other hand, have taken place in respect of these practices, whether real or pretended. But it seems one of the most flagrant absurdities of modern Sadducism, to suppose that God himself would repeatedly command the magistrates of his people to punish with death a crime which never was committed! If it should be said, that mere allusions to witchcraft might warrant laws against it; I would only desire the reader to examine the marginal references, and judge for himself, whether it be not spoken of [illegible] as a real practice.

[illegible], as here stated, properly consists in taking increase from the poor, on account of their urgent subsistence, or urgent need; which tends to enrich the [illegible] impoverishing the borrower. This was frequently carried to such a [illegible] the Israelites, that the creditors sometimes took [illegible] children, for slaves, which was an aggravated violation of the law of love.—The Israelites were but little engaged in commerce; and their law was not only calculated, but intended, to keep them from mingling by any means with other nations. Their land also was divided by lot, and they were not allowed to alienate their inheritances. They were not, therefore, greatly in the way of lending or taking up money upon interest to employ in trade, or expend in estates; in which cases, and in those of the like nature, it does not appear inconsistent with either equity or love, for the lender to receive a proportion of the profits from the borrower. The original is indeed remarkable; for, it may be rendered, "If thou lend money to my people, even to a poor man," &c.: yet, it is generally thought, that the Israelites were not allowed in any ordinary case, to take interest for money of their brethren. As, however, they were permitted to take it of the Gentiles, though expressly required not to oppress them; it is evident that increase on lent money is not in itself unjust, or contrary to the divine law, when not attended by oppressive circumstances.—Scott.

FIRST-FRUITS.—The first ripe of their corn they must not delay to offer; there is danger, if we delay our duty, lest we wholly omit it; and, by slipping the first opportunity, in expectation of another, we suffer Satan to cheat us of all our time. Let not young people delay to offer to God the first-fruits of their time and strength, lest their delays come, at last, to be denials, through the deceitfulness of sin, and the more convenient season they promise themselves, never arrive. Yet it is provided, that the firstlings of their cattle should not be dedicated to God till they were past seven days old, for then they began to be good for something. Note, God is the first and best, and therefore must have the first and best.—Henry.

CHAP. XXIII. JUSTICE.—The judges are here cautioned not to pervert judgment. 1. They must not be overruled, either by might or multitude, to go against their consciences in giving judgment, ver. 2. With the Jews, causes were tried by a bench of justices, and judgment given according to the majority of votes; in which case, every particular justice must go according to truth, as it appeared to him upon the strictest and most impartial inquiry, though the multitude of the people, and their outcries, or the sentence of the Rabbim, (we translate it many,) the more ancient and honourable of the justices, went the other way. 2. They must not pervert judgment, no, not in favour of a poor man, ver. 3. Right must in all cases take place, and wrong must be punished, and justice never biassed, nor injury connived at, under pretence of charity and compassion. 3. Neither must they pervert judgment, in prejudice to a poor man, nor suffer him to be wronged, because he has not wherewithal to right himself; in such cases, the judges themselves must become advocates for the poor, as far as their cause was good and the field shall eat. In like manner thou shalt deal with thy vineyard, and with thy [s]olive-yard.

12 ¶ [p]Six days thou shalt do thy work, and on the seventh day thou shalt rest: that thine ox and thine ass may rest, [q]and the son of thy handmaid, and the stranger, may be refreshed.

13 ¶ And in all things that I have said unto you, [r]be circumspect; and [s]make no mention of the name of other gods, neither let it be heard out of thy mouth.

14 ¶ [t]Three times thou shalt keep a feast unto me in the year.

15 Thou shalt keep [u]the feast of unleavened bread: thou shalt eat unleavened bread seven days, as I commanded thee, in the time appointed of the month Abib; for in it thou camest out from Egypt: [x]and none shall appear before me empty:

16 And the [y]feast of harvest, the first-fruits of thy labours, which thou hast sown in thy field: and the [z]feast of in-gathering which is in the end of the year, when thou hast gathered in thy labours out of the field.

17 Three times in the year [a]all thy males shall appear before the LORD God.

18 ¶ Thou shalt not offer the [b]blood of my sacrifice with leavened bread, neither shall the fat of my [c]sacrifice [c]remain until the morning.

19 The [d]first of the first-fruits of thy land thou shalt bring into the house of the LORD thy God. Thou shalt not [e]seethe a kid in his mother's milk.

20 ¶ Behold, I send an [f]Angel before thee to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have [g]prepared.

21 [h]Beware of him, and obey his voice; [i]provoke him not; for [k]he will not pardon your transgressions: for [l]my name is in him.

22 But if thou shalt indeed obey his voice, and do all that I speak; then I will be [m]an enemy unto thine enemies, and [l]an adversary unto thine adversaries.

23 For mine Angel shall go before thee, and bring [n]thee in unto the Amorites, and the Hittites, and the Perizzites, and the Canaanites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites: and I will cut them off.

24 Thou [o]shalt not bow down to their gods, nor serve them, nor [p]do after their works: but thou shalt utterly [q]overthrow them, and quite break down their images.

25 And [r]ye shall serve the LORD your God, and [s]he shall bless thy bread, and thy water: and I [t]will take sickness away from the midst of thee.

26 There [u]shall nothing cast their young, nor be barren in thy land: [x]the number of thy days I will fulfil.

27 I will send [y]my fear before thee, and will destroy all the people to whom thou shalt come, and I will make all thine enemies turn their [z]backs unto thee.

28 And I will send [a]hornets[l] before thee, which shall drive out the Hivite, the Canaanite, and the Hittite from before thee.

29 I will not drive them out from before thee [b]in one year; lest the land become desolate, and the beast of the field multiply against thee.

30 By little and little I will drive them out from before thee, until thou be increased, and inherit the land.

31 And [b]I will set thy bounds from the Red sea even unto the sea of the Philistines, and from the desert unto the river: for I will [c]deliver the inhabitants of the land into your hand; and thou shalt drive them out before thee.

32 Thou [d]shalt make no covenant with them, [e]nor with their gods.

33 They shall not dwell in thy land, lest [f]they make thee sin against me: for if thou serve their gods, [g]it will surely be a snare unto thee.

Moses is called up into the mountain, 1. The people promise obedience, 3. Moses sprinkleth the blood of the covenant, 6; he goeth up into the mount, 15.

AND he said unto Moses, [a]Come up unto the LORD, thou, and Aaron, [b]Nadab, and Abihu, and [c]seventy of the elders of Israel: and worship ye afar off.

2 And Moses [d]alone shall come near the LORD: but they shall not come nigh, neither shall the people go up with him.

3 ¶ And Moses came and told the people all the words of the LORD, and [e]all the judgments: and all the people answered with one voice, and said, [f]All the words which the LORD hath said will we do.

4 ¶ And Moses [g]wrote all the words of the LORD, and rose up early in the morning, [h]and builded an altar under the hill, and [i]twelve pillars,[l] [k]according to the twelve tribes of Israel.

5 And he sent [l]young men of the children of Israel, which offered [m]burnt-offerings, and sacrificed [n]peace-offerings of oxen unto the LORD.

6 And Moses took half of the blood, and put it in basons; and half of [o]the blood he sprinkled [p]on the altar.

7 And he took [q]the book of the covenant, and [r]read in the audience of the people: and they said, [s]All that the LORD hath said will we do, and be obedient.

honest, ver. 6. 4. They must dread the thoughts of assisting or abetting a bad cause; ver. 7, "Keep thee far from a false matter;" do not only keep thee free from it, nor think it enough to say, thou art unconcerned in it, but keep thee far from it, dread it as a dangerous snare. 5. They must not take bribes, ver. 8. They must not only not be swayed by a gift to give an unjust judgment, either to condemn the innocent, or acquit the guilty, or adjudge a man's right from him; but they must not so much as take a gift, lest it should have a bad influence upon them, and overrule them, contrary to their intentions, for it has a strange tendency to blind those that otherwise would do well. 6. They must not oppress a stranger, ver. 9. Though aliens might not inherit lands among them, yet they must have justice done them, must peaceably enjoy their own, and be righted if they were wronged, though they were strangers to the commonwealth of Israel. —Henry.

SABBATICAL YEAR.—The Israelites were commanded to commemorate the creation of the world, and their deliverance out of Egypt, not only by sanctifying one day out of seven, as a holy rest of the Lord, but also by intermitting the culture of their land every seventh year. Yet, a promise was implied in this command, that the ground should, even in that year, produce spontaneously a considerable increase; which they were required to allow the poor, who had no lands in possession, to gather for their use and enjoyment; and on the residue the beasts of the field might feed. It is evident that the owners were not allowed to reap any harvest, or gather in the increase of the vineyard or oliveyard, during the sabbatical year; yet, it is generally thought that they might, along with their poor neighbours, gather what was wanting for present use. The law seems to have been intended to teach the people, that they were merely the Lord's tenants for their estates; and that they would incur a forfeiture, if they did not observe his rules in cultivating them. It was also suited to teach them dependence on his providence; and to lead them to observe his faithfulness, in sending a proportionate increase on the sixth year. It evidently and cogently inculcated indifference to worldly wealth; and liberality, without grudging, to the poor. The institution, as far as observed, likewise gave the Israelites leisure to attend on more important concerns; and, no doubt, was a real advantage to the ground by letting it sometimes lie fallow: while it typified the rest of heaven, when all earthly labours, cares and interests shall cease for ever.

THE THREE ANNUAL FEASTS.—Three solemn religious festivals were instituted to be observed by the Israelites, during all succeeding generations, while they continued to be the peculiar people of God.—"The feast of unleavened bread," in remembrance of their deliverance out of Egypt, has been considered; "the feast of harvest," when it became ripe, called also "the feast of pentecost," seems to have been [illegible] in remembrance of the promulgation of the law from Mount Sinai; and the "feast of ingathering," when the harvest was completely secured, called also "the feast of tabernacles," in remembrance of the people dwelling in tents in the wilderness.—This was observed in the seventh month, called here "the end of the year;" for the year began in autumn, till Israel was delivered out of Egypt.

CANAAN.—The boundaries of the promised land, as here stated, if compared with the passages referred to in the margin, may be thus explained. The northern extremity of the Red Sea was at no great distance from the river of Egypt, which ran into the Mediterranean, on the shore of which the Philistines dwelt. From the extremity, therefore, of the Red Sea, across to the Mediterranean Sea, and the course of its shore, as far as mount Lebanon was the western boundary from south to north. The great desert, at the southern extremity of Canaan; and at the south-east of the adjacent countries behind the Dead Sea and beyond Jordan, as far as the great river Euphrates, formed the southern and eastern boundaries; while a line from the Mediterranean Sea, passing by mount Libanus to the river Euphrates, would mark its boundaries on the north or on the north-west.—Scott.

CHAP. XXIV. COVENANT RATIFIED BY BLOOD.—The covenant must be made by sacrifice, Ps. l. 5, because, since man has sinned, and forfeited his Creator's favour, there can be no fellowship by covenant, till there be first friendship and atonement by sacrifice. 1. In preparation, therefore, for the parties interchangeably putting their seals to this covenant, (1.) Moses builds an altar, to the honour of God, which was principally intended in all the altars that were built, and which was the first thing to be looked at in the covenant they were now to seal. No addition to the perfections of the divine nature can be made by any of God's dealings with the children of men, but in them his perfections are manifested and magnified, and his honour showed forth; therefore he will now be represented by an altar, to signify, that all he expected from them, was, that they should do him honour, and that, being his people, they should be to him for a name and a praise. (2.) He erects twelve pillars, according to the number of the tribes; those were to represent the people, the other party to the covenant; and we may suppose that they were set up over against the altar, and that Moses, as mediator, passed to and fro between them. Probably, each tribe set up and knew its own pillar, and their elders stood by it. (3.) He appointed sacrifices to be offered upon the altar, ver. 5, burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, which yet were designed to be expiatory. 2. Preparation being thus made, their ratifications were very solemnly exchanged. (1.) The blood of the sacrifices which the people offered was (part of it) sprinkled upon the altar, ver. 6, with [illegible]

A. M. 2518.—B. C. 1491.

8 And Moses took the blood, and [t]sprinkled it on the people, and said, Behold [u]the blood of the covenant, which the LORD hath made with you concerning all these words.

9 ¶ Then [x]went up Moses, and Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel.

10 And they [y]saw the God of Israel: and there was under his feet as it were a paved work [z]of a sapphire-stone, and as it were the body of heaven[2] [a]in his clearness.

11 And upon the [b]nobles[3] of the children of Israel he [c]laid not his hand: also [d]they saw God, and [e]did eat and drink.

12 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Come up to me into the mount, and be there: and I will give thee [f]tables of stone, and a law, and commandments which I have written; [g]that thou mayest teach them.

13 And Moses rose up, and [h]his minister Joshua: and Moses went up into the mount of God.

14 And he said unto the elders, [i]Tarry ye here for us, until we come again unto you. And, behold, Aaron and [k]Hur are with you: [l]if any man have any matters to do, let him come unto them.

15 And Moses went up into the mount, and [m]a cloud covered the mount.

16 And [n]the glory of the LORD abode upon mount Sinai, and the cloud covered it six days: and the [o]seventh day he called unto Moses out of the midst of the cloud.

17 And the sight of the glory of the LORD was [p]like devouring fire on the top of the mount, in the eyes of the children of Israel.

18 And Moses [q]went into the midst of the cloud, and gat him up into the mount: and Moses was in the mount [r]forty days and forty nights.

CHAP. XXV.

The offering for the tabernacle, 1. The form of the ark, 10; the mercy-seat, 17; the table, 23; the candlestick, 31.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, that [a]they [*]bring me an [†]offering: of every man that giveth it [b]willingly with his heart, ye shall take my offering.

3 And this is the offering which ye shall take of them; gold, and silver, and brass,

4 And [c]blue, and purple, and scarlet, and [‡]fine linen, and goats' hair,

5 And [d]rams' skins dyed red, and badgers' skins, and [e]shittim-wood,

6 [f]Oil for the light, [g]spices for anointing oil and for sweet incense,

7 [h]Onyx-stones, and stones to be set in the ephod, and in the breastplate.

8 And let them make me [i]a sanctuary; that [k]I may dwell among them.

9 According to all that I shew thee, after [l]the pattern of the tabernacle, and the pattern of all the instruments thereof, even so shall ye make it.

10 ¶ And they shall make [m]an ark of shittim-wood: two cubits and a half shall be the length thereof, and a cubit and a half the breadth thereof, and a cubit and a half the height thereof.

11 And thou shalt [n]overlay it with pure gold, within and without shalt thou overlay it; and shalt make upon it a crown of gold round about.[1]

12 And thou shalt cast [o]four rings of gold for it, and put them in the four corners thereof; and two rings shall be in the one side of it, and two rings in the other side of it.

13 And thou shalt make [p]staves of shittim-wood, and overlay them with gold.

14 And thou shalt put the staves into the rings by the sides of the ark, that the ark may be borne with them.

15 [q]The staves shall be in the rings of the ark: they shall not be taken from it.

16 And thou shalt put into the ark [r]the testimony which I shall give thee.

17 And thou shalt make [s]a mercy-seat of pure gold: two cubits and a half shall be the length thereof, and a cubit and a half the breadth thereof.

18 And thou shalt make [t]two cherubims of gold: of beaten work shalt thou make them, in the two ends of the mercy-seat.

19 And make one cherub on the one end, and the other cherub on the other end: even [§]of the mercy-seat shall ye make the cherubims on the two ends thereof.

20 And the cherubims shall stretch forth their wings on high, [u]covering the mercy-seat with their wings, and their faces shall look one to another: [x]toward the mercy-seat shall the faces of the cherubims be.

21 And thou shalt [y]put the mercy-seat above upon the ark, and [z]in the ark thou shalt put the testimony that I shall give thee.

22 And there I will meet with thee, [a]and I will commune with thee, from above the mercy-seat, from [b]between the two cherubims[2] which are upon the ark of the testimony, of all things which I will give thee in commandment unto the children of Israel.

23 ¶ Thou shalt also make [c]a table of shittim-wood: two cubits shall be the length thereof, and a cubit the breadth thereof, and a cubit and a half the height thereof.

24 And thou shalt [d]overlay it with pure people's dedicating of themselves, their lives, and beings, to God, and to his honour. In the blood (which is the life) of the dead sacrifices, all the Israelites were presented unto God as living sacrifices, Rom. xii. 1. (2.) The blood of the sacrifice which God had owned and accepted was (the remainder of it) sprinkled either upon the people themselves, ver. 8, or upon the pillars that represented them; which signified God's gracious conferring of his favour upon them, and all the fruits of that favour, and his giving them all the gifts they could expect or desire from a God reconciled to them, and in covenant with them by sacrifice. This part of the ceremony was thus explained, "Behold the blood of the covenant; see here how God has sealed to you to be a God, and you seal to him to be to him a people; his promises to you, and yours to him, are both yea, and amen."—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—They who would enjoy near and sweet communion with the Lord, must obediently hearken to his words, obey his call, and wait for him in faith and patience: and such as are humbly desirous of being employed by him in useful and honourable services, must cheerfully attend to the duties of the lowest station, if at present assigned them; continue faithful and active in occupying with their one talent; and spend much time in retirement, meditation, and devotion.—The lively exercise of faith, and the encouraging experience of the Lord's goodness, inspire the soul with a holy, but humble, boldness in approaching him. The terrors which once were felt at the discovery of his glorious holiness and justice, are dissipated, even while these awful attributes are more distinctly perceived and steadily contemplated, in the person and atonement of the great Redeemer: and while others tremble at a distance, when convinced that "our God is a consuming fire;" the established believer has "grace to worship him with reverence and godly fear," combined with adoring thankful love. And, finding that his consolations abundantly compensate the want of outward enjoyments, and at some times enable him to forget the craving even of natural appetites; he is not in haste to terminate the sweet intercourse, but desires still to commune with his God, till a sense of duty compels him reluctantly to return to the ordinary employments of his station.—Scott.

CHAP. XXV. THE TABERNACLE CONTRIBUTION.—The people must furnish Moses with the materials, not by a tax imposed upon them, but by a voluntary contribution. This is the first thing concerning which orders are here given, ver. 2; "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they bring me an offering;" and there was all the reason in the world that they should, for, it was God himself that had not only enlarged them, but enriched them with the spoils of the Egyptians. Note, 1. The best use we can make of our worldly wealth is, to honour God with it in works of piety and charity. 2. When we have been blessed with some remarkable success in our affairs, and have had, as we say, a good turn, it may be justly expected that we should do something more than ordinary for the glory of God.—Henry.

THE MODEL.—The Lord not only directed Moses by words, how to build the tabernacle, and form its sacred furniture, but he showed him a model, exactly representing the form of every part, and the proportion of each to all the rest. It is observable, that this related to the construction of the tabernacle and its furniture alone, or perhaps the priestly garments; and not to the whole even of the ceremonial law, as it is frequently supposed.—During the continuance of Israel in the wilderness, and during four hundred and forty years after their settlement in Canaan, the sanctuary was only a tent, or moveable building; but afterwards a temple was built upon Mount Zion, and the typical ordinances were confined to one place.

THE ARK.—"The ark of the covenant" was so called, not only as it contained the tables of the law, which were the basis of the national covenant; but also because it was an abiding symbol of God's gracious presence with his people, and typified those peculiar benefits, which belong to the covenant of peace, mediated by Christ in behalf of the true Israel.—It was a chest, made of wood not liable to rot, of about four feet in length, and two feet and a-half in breadth and in depth, plated all over, both within and without, with thin plates of pure gold, having a border or cornice of gold round about it; and covered with a covering all of massy gold, which was called the covering, or "the propitiatory," or "the mercy-seat," and it was kept firm in its place by the cornice. In this ark the two tables of stone, which contained the law of the ten commandments, were put: it was placed in the holy of holies; before it the blood of the sacrifices was sprinkled, and the incense burnt, by the high priest, on the day of atonement; and above it appeared the visible glory, which was the symbol of the Divine presence.—"The testimony," signifies the tables of the law, which testified God's authority over the Israelites, his regard for them, and his presence with them: they also testified, that while he was merciful to them, he required them to be obedient; and the same would testify against them, if they neglected or forsook his service and worship. The two cherubim were emblematical representations of the angels, "desiring to look" into the mysteries of redeeming love; they were therefore formed with their faces toward the mercy-seat, as contemplating it and the mysteries which it contained.—Various conjectures have been advanced concerning the form or shape of the cherubim; but the text in this place mentions no more than their faces and wings, and arguments taken from other emblematical parts of Scripture are not satisfactory.—It is thought they were formed of the same mass of gold with the propitiatory, and that this is the meaning of the word rendered beaten work; though others interpret it to denote the polish and finishing 25 And thou shalt make unto it a border of an hand-breadth round about, and thou shalt make [o]a golden crown to the border thereof round about.

26 And thou shalt make for it [f]four rings of gold, and put the rings in the four corners that are on the four feet thereof.

27 Over against the border shall the rings be, [g]for places of the staves to bear the table.

28 And thou shalt make the staves of shittim-wood, and overlay them with gold, that [h]the table may be borne with them.

29 And thou shalt make [i]the dishes thereof, and spoons thereof, and covers thereof, and bowls thereof, [t]to cover withal: of pure gold shalt thou make them.

30 And thou shalt set upon the table [k]shew-bread[s] before me alway.

31 ¶ And thou shalt make [l]a candlestick of pure gold, of beaten work shall the candlestick be made; his shaft, and his branches, his bowls, [m]his knops, and his flowers shall be of the same.

32 And six branches shall come out of the sides of it; three branches of the candlestick out of the one side, and three branches of the candlestick out of the other side.

33 Three bowls made like unto almonds, with a knop and a flower in one branch; [n]and three bowls made like almonds in the other branch, with a[4] knop and a flower; so in the six branches that come out of the candlestick.

34 And in the candlestick shall be four bowls made like unto almonds, with their knops and their flowers.

35 And there shall be a knop under two branches of the same, and a knop under two branches of the same, and a knop under two branches of the same, according to the six branches that proceed out of the candlestick.

36 Their knops and their branches shall be of the same: all of it shall be one [o]beaten work of pure gold.

37 And thou shalt make the [p]seven lamps thereof: and [q]they[5] shall *light the lamps thereof, that they may [r]give light over against [t]it.

38 And [s]the tongs thereof, and the [t]snuff-dishes thereof, shall be of pure gold.

39 Of a talent of pure gold shall he make it, with all these vessels.

The ten curtains of the tabernacle, 1. The vail for the ark, 31.

A. M. 2513.—B. C. 1491.

MOREOVER thou shalt make [a]the tabernacle[1] with ten curtains of [b]fine twined linen, and blue, and purple, and scarlet; with [c]cherubims of [*]cunning work shalt thou make them.

2 The length of one [d]curtain shall be eight and twenty cubits, and the breadth of one curtain four cubits: and every one of the curtains shall have one measure.

3 The five curtains shall be [e]coupled together one to another: and other five curtains shall be coupled one to another.

4 And thou shalt make [f]loops of blue upon the edge of the one curtain, from the selvedge in the coupling: and likewise shalt thou make in the uttermost edge of another curtain, in the coupling of the second.

5 Fifty loops shalt thou make in the one curtain, and fifty loops shalt thou make in the edge of the curtain that is in the coupling of the second; that the loops may take hold one of another.

6 And thou shalt make fifty [g]taches of gold, and couple the curtains together with the taches: and it shall be [h]one tabernacle.

7 ¶ And thou shalt make [i]curtains of [k]goats' hair,[2] to be [l]a covering upon the tabernacle; [m]eleven curtains shalt thou make.

8 The [n]length of one curtain shall be thirty cubits, and the breadth of one curtain four cubits: and the eleven curtains shall be all of one measure.

9 And thou shalt couple [o]five curtains by themselves; and six curtains by themselves, and shalt double the sixth curtain in the forefront of the tabernacle.

10 And thou shalt make [p]fifty loops on the edge of the one curtain that is outmost on the coupling, and fifty loops in the edge of the curtain which coupleth the second.

11 And thou shalt make fifty taches of brass, and put the taches into the loops, and couple the [t]tent together, [q]that it may be one.

12 And the remnant that remaineth of the curtains of the tent, the half curtain that remaineth, [r]shall hang over the backside of the tabernacle.

13 And [s]a cubit on the one side, and a cubit on the other side [‡]of that which remaineth in the length of the curtains of the tent, it shall hang over the sides of the tabernacle, on this side and on that side to cover it.

14 ¶ And thou shalt make [t]a covering for the tent, of [u]rams' skins dyed red, and a covering above of badgers' skins.

15 ¶ And thou shalt make [x]boards[3] for the tabernacle, [y]of shittim-wood, standing up.

16 Ten cubits shall be the length of a board, and a cubit and a half shall be the breadth of one board.

17 Two [§]tenons shall there be in one of the workmanship.—As the ark and propitiatory were intended to be carried about, there were golden rings at the four corners, and staves plated with gold; which were not taken out of the rings, even when it was stationary.

But it is commonly translated a tabernacle, only to signify what kind of dwelling it was, viz., a portable house, as Philo calls it, which might be taken down, and removed from one place to another, and set up again, without any damage to it.—Patrick.

Table of Shew-bread.—Without the veil, a table was fixed of the same height as the ark, but neither so long nor so broad. It was made of the same materials as the ark, and with a golden cornice: but it had also another cornice below the edge, and one at the bottom; with a border between the two of an handbreadth; though some think one border only was below the edge, and that this was towards the bottom, to keep the feet or legs more closely united. The table also had rings and staves for the conveniency of removing it.—To it were annexed several vessels: as dishes, in which some think the shew-bread was placed; and others, the flour of which it was made, or the oil used for various purposes: spoons, which were employed about the incense offered on the golden altar, or carried within the veil in a censer on the day of atonement; and some think the word denotes vials, as we read of vials full of odours, or incense; Rev. v. 8; covers, which seem to have been put over both the loaves and the incense; yet, some suppose, they were vessels used in drink-offerings; but that is more reasonably considered as the use of the bowls, mentioned in the last place.—Scott.

Lamp-stand.—The next thing ordered to be made for the furnishing of God's palace, was a rich, stately candlestick, all of pure gold, not hollow, but solid. The particular directions here given concerning it show, 1. That it was very magnificent, and a great ornament to the place; it had many branches drawn from the main shaft, which had not only their bowls, (to put the oil and the kindled wick in,) for necessity, but knops and flowers, for ornament. 2. That it was very convenient, and admirably well contrived both to scatter the light and to keep the tabernacle clean from smoke and snuffs. 3. That it was very significant. The tabernacle had no windows by which to let in the light of the day, all its light was candle-light; which intimates the comparative darkness of that dispensation, while the Sun of righteousness was not as yet risen, nor had the Day-star from on high yet visited his church.—Henry.

CHAP. XXVI. The Curtains.—Each curtain was about fifteen yards long, and something more than two yards wide: but though woven and wrought separately, they were afterwards joined together, into two grand divisions of five curtains each; probably by needle-work. Each of these divisions would be about eleven yards wide. But they were likewise joined together into one tabernacle. Fifty loops of blue tape, or ribband, were fastened to the edge or selvedge, of the outermost of the five curtains, on that side by which it was to be coupled to the outermost of the other five curtains; on the selvedge of which fifty loops were placed exactly answering to the others.—These loops seem to have been joined together, by being passed through each other: and fifty taches, or buttons, or clasps, of gold, were also made, to each of which two loops, one of either outside curtain, were closely fastened, in order to render the whole compact: yet so that the two grand divisions might easily be separated when there was occasion to remove it. Thus firmly joined together, it was spread over the top of the sanctuary, and reached on each side, within less than a yard of the ground, covering also the whole length of it. The ten curtains were forty cubits wide, (except any thing should be deducted for the seams and joinings;) yet the sanctuary was not more than thirty cubits long: hence it has been thought, that one division of the covering was exactly spread over the holy place which was twenty cubits in length; and that the other covered the most holy place, which was ten cubits square; and that the residue hung over on the west end towards the ground. The curtains of goats' hair were above a yard longer than the rich curtains, and would therefore extend above half-a-yard lower on each side, that is, almost to the ground. Being one more in number than the others, and of the same width, they would, when joined, be more than two yards wider, and so much the more would be left to hang over at the ends of the sanctuary; but it seems that the greater part of the additional curtain was brought to the east end, or opening of it, and there doubled up, perhaps for ornament as a festoon; yet some also remained at the west end, to cover the curtains and the boards. Thus the coarser curtains completely covered, and concealed, the richer; yet a twofold security against the effects of the weather was added, in the covering of rams' skins dyed red, and that of badgers' skins, which was spread over all the rest.

Columns.—The sockets of silver, each weighing a talent, that is, about a hundred weight, were placed in rows upon the ground; forty on the south, forty on the north, twelve on the west, and two at each corner on the west end. In every couple of these sockets, and by two tenons fitted to the hollows of them, was fixed a substantial board of shittim-wood, covered with plates of gold: the boards seem also to have been fastened together by mortices and tenons, or by a concave in the one exactly fitted to a convex in the other. The corner boards were also joined to the boards on either side of them, both at top and bottom, by a ring or staple, no doubt of gold.—Thus a wall was formed on three sides of the sanctuary; which was still further strengthened by five bars of shittim-wood, covered with gold, passing through rings of gold. As the middle bars alone are said to "reach from end to end," it may be supposed that the others were not so long. The whole was so firmly compacted together, that it could not be shaken, or thrown down, much more easily than an edifice of stone; though it might readily be 18 And thou shalt make the boards for the tabernacle, twenty boards on the south side, southward.

19 And thou shalt make [z]forty sockets[4] of silver, under the twenty boards: two sockets under one board for his two tenons, and two sockets under another board for his two tenons.

20 And for the second side of the tabernacle on the north side there shall be twenty boards;

21 And their forty sockets of silver: [a]two sockets under one board, and two sockets under another board.

22 And for the sides of the tabernacle westward, thou shalt make six[5] boards.

23 And two boards shalt thou make for the corners of the tabernacle in the two sides.

24 And they shall be [l]coupled together beneath, [b]and they shall be coupled together above the head of it unto one ring: thus shall it be for them both; they shall be for the two corners.

25 And they shall be eight boards, and their sockets of silver, sixteen sockets: two sockets under one board, and two sockets under another board.

26 ¶ And thou shalt make [c]bars[6] of shittim-wood: five for the boards of the one side of the tabernacle, 27 And five bars for the boards of the other side of the tabernacle, and five bars for the boards of the side of the tabernacle for the two sides westward.

28 And the middle bar in the midst of the boards shall reach from end to end.

29 And thou shalt [d]overlay the boards with gold,[7] and make their rings of gold for places for the bars: and thou shalt overlay the bars with gold.

30 And thou shalt [e]rear up the tabernacle [f]according to the fashion thereof which was shewed thee in the mount.

31 ¶ And thou shalt make a [g]veil of [h]blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen of [i]cunning work: with [k]cherubims shall it be made.

32 And thou shalt hang it upon four [l]pillars of shittim-wood overlaid with gold: their hooks shall be of gold, upon the four sockets of silver.

33 And thou shalt hang up the veil under [m]the taches, that thou mayest bring in thither [n]within the veil [o]the ark of the testimony: and the veil shall divide unto you, between [p]the holy place and the most holy.

34 And thou shalt [q]put the mercy-seat upon the ark of the testimony, in the most holy place.

35 And thou shalt set [r]the table without the veil, and [s]the candlestick over against the table on the side of the tabernacle towards the south; and thou shalt put the table on the north side.

36 ¶ And thou shalt make an [t]hanging for the door of [u]the tent, [x]of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen, wrought with needlework.

37 And thou shalt make for the hanging five pillars of shittim-wood, and [y]overlay them with gold, and their hooks shall be of gold: and thou shalt cast five sockets of brass for them.

CHAP. XXVII.

The altar of burnt-offering, with the vessels, 1. The court of the tabernacle, 9. The oil for the lamp, 20.

AND thou shalt make an [a]altar of shittim-wood, five cubits long, and five cubits broad: the altar shall be four-square, and the height thereof shall be three cubits.

2 And thou shalt make the [b]horns of it upon the four corners thereof; his horns shall be of the same: and thou shalt [c]overlay it with brass.

3 And thou shalt make his pans to receive his ashes, and [d]his shovels, and his [e]basons, and his [f]flesh-hooks, and his [g]fire-pans: all the vessels thereof thou shalt make of brass.

4 And thou shalt make for it [h]a grate of net-work of brass; and upon the net shalt thou make four brazen [i]rings in the four corners thereof.

5 And thou shalt put it under the compass[1] of the altar beneath, that the net may be even to the midst of the altar.

6 And thou shalt make [k]staves[2] for the altar, staves of shittim-wood, and overlay them with brass.

7 And the staves shall be put into the rings, and the staves shall be upon the two sides of the altar, to [l]bear it.

8 Hollow with boards shalt thou make it: [m]as *it was shewed thee in the mount, so shall they make it.

9 ¶ And thou shalt make [n]the court[3] of the tabernacle for the south side southward: there shall be [o]hangings for the court of fine twined linen of an hundred cubits long, for one side.

10 And the twenty pillars thereof and and their twenty [p]sockets shall be of brass; the hooks of the pillars and their [q]fillets shall be of silver.

11 And likewise for the north side in length there shall be hangings of an hundred cubits long, and his twenty pillars, and their twenty sockets of brass; the hooks of the pillars and their fillets of silver.

taken down, and afterwards put together again: its materials also were very costly. In all these things, it was a type of the church of God, "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone, in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord."—Scott.

The Vail.—Two vails are here ordered to be made, 1. One for a partition between the holy place and the most holy: which not only forbade any to enter, but forbade them so much as to look into the holiest of all, ver. 31, 33. Under that dispensation, divine grace was veiled, but now we behold it with open face, 2 Cor. iii. 18. The apostle tells us, Heb. ix. 8, what was the meaning of this vail; it intimated that the ceremonial law "could not make the comers thereunto perfect," nor would the observance of it bring men to heaven; the "way into the holiest of all was not made manifest, while the first tabernacle was standing; life and immortality" lay concealed, till they were "brought to light by the gospel;" which was therefore signified by the rending of this vail at the death of Christ, Matt. xxvii. 51. We have now "boldness to enter into the holiest," in all acts of devotion, "by the blood of Jesus;" yet such as obliges us to a holy reverence, and a humble sense of our distance. 2. Another vail was for the outer door of the tabernacle, ver. 36, 37. Through this first vail the priests went in every day to minister in the holy place, but not the people, Heb. ix. 6. This vail was all the defence the tabernacle had against thieves and robbers, which might easily be broken through, for it could be neither locked nor barred, and the abundance of wealth in the tabernacle, one would think, might be a temptation; but by leaving it thus exposed, (1.) The priests and Levites would be so much the more obliged to keep a strict watch upon it, and, (2.) God would show his care of his church on earth, though it is weak and defenceless, and continually exposed.—Henry.

Practical Observations.—With this typical description of Christ and his church before our eyes, let us ask ourselves what our judgment on these subjects is. Do we see any glory in the person of Christ? any excellency in his character, or preciousness in his salvation; or wisdom in the doctrine of the cross? Do we perceive any beauty in holiness, or any amiableness in the character of Christians? These things are hidden [illegible] external meanness, from the carnal eye of the superficial observer, but are [illegible] discerned by every true believer; who sees through the exterior covering, [illegible] glory, and hidden excellency of heavenly things. As our judgment, choice, [illegible] affections are; [illegible] towards God. "To you that believe, Christ [illegible] as to the state of our own hearts; whether [illegible] or dispositions we find, love to him, hatred of sin, [illegible] Spirit, through divine grace, to glorify him? Will our religion bear examination? and are we more careful to approve our hearts to God, than our characters to men? For, notwithstanding all our imperfections, this state of mind is in the sight of God of great price.—The hypocrite is the reverse of all this: he keeps up a specious appearance before men, but he shrinks from examination; for "his inward part is very wickedness; and God knows it.—Thus also the Christian's comfort, and his inheritance, are not an outside show of mirth and prosperity, covering an aching heart, and a soul doomed to destruction; but an inward sweetness and peace observed of men, and a glorious inheritance reserved within the vail. Nay, the mean appearance, of the church and of the Christian, is often a security from persecution and temptation.—As every part of this spiritual building of God, in subserviency to his power and love, conduces to the stability of the whole, let us consider how much it behoves us to "endeavour to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace:" let us watch against discontent, envy, ambition, and contention; and, each in his proper place, study to serve the common interests of genuine Christianity.—Scott.

CHAP. XXVII. The Altar.—Moses is here directed about, 1. The dimensions of it; it was four-square, ver. 1. 2. The horns of it, ver. 2, which were for ornament and for use: the sacrifices were "bound with cords to the horns of the altar," and to them malefactors fled for refuge. 3. The materials; it was of wood, overlaid with brass, ver. 1, 2. 4. The appurtenances of it, ver. 3, which were all of brass. 5. The grate, which was let into the hollow of the altar, about the middle of it, in which the fire was kept, and the sacrifice burnt; it was made of net-work, like a sieve, and hung hollow, that the fire might burn the better, and that the ashes might fall through into the hollow of the altar, ver. 4, 5. 6. The staves with which it must be carried, ver. 6, 7. And, lastly, He is referred to the pattern showed him, ver. 8.—Henry.

The Court.—The tabernacle, when set up, was enclosed in a court, between fifty and sixty yards in length, and between twenty-five and thirty in breadth; formed by curtains hung upon brazen pillars, fixed in brazen sockets, after the manner of the boards of the sanctuary; and having an entrance at the east end, similar to the entrance of that building. The curtains for this court were made of fine linen, spun and woven, after the manner of the rich curtains called the tabernacle; yet, neither dyed nor embroidered as they were: but those that formed the entrance into it were dyed, and wrought with ornamental needle-work, though not with cherubim. The brazen pillars likewise were embellished with chapiters, [illegible] or environed, with plates of silver, chap. xxxviii. 17, [illegible] the hooks on which the [illegible] were hung were made of silver. The [illegible] supposed to have been intended to hold down the bottom of the [illegible]

12 And for the breadth of the court on the west side shall be hangings of fifty cubits: their pillars ten, and their sockets ten.

13 And the breadth of the court on the east side eastward shall be fifty cubits.

14 The [z]hangings of one side[4] of the gate shall be fifteen cubits: their pillars three, and their sockets three.

15 And on the other side shall be hangings fifteen cubits: their pillars three, and their sockets three.

16 And for the gate of the court shall be an hanging of twenty cubits, [a]of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen wrought with [t]needlework: and their pillars shall be four, and their sockets four.

17 All the pillars round about the court shall be filleted with silver: their hooks shall be of silver, and their sockets of brass.

18 ¶ The [u]length of the court shall be an hundred cubits, and the breadth [†]fifty, every where, and the height five cubits, of fine twined linen, and their sockets of brass.

19 All the vessels of the tabernacle in all the service thereof, and [x]all the pins thereof, and all the pins of the court, shall be of brass.

20 ¶ And thou shalt command the children of Israel, that they bring thee [y]pure oil-olive beaten, [z]for the light, to cause the lamp [‡]to burn always.

21 In [a]the tabernacle of the congregation [b]without the vail, which is before the [c]testimony, [d]Aaron and his sons shall order it from [e]evening to morning before the LORD: it shall be [f]a statute for ever unto their generations, on the behalf of the children of Israel.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Aaron and his sons are separated for the priest's office. 1. The ephod, breastplate, and other holy garments appointed, 6.

AND [a]take thou unto thee Aaron thy brother, and his sons with him, from [b]among the children of Israel, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office, even Aaron, [c]Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar, Aaron's sons.

2 ¶ And thou shalt make [d]holy garments for Aaron thy brother, for [e]glory and for beauty.

3 And thou shalt speak unto all that are [f]wise-hearted, whom I have [g]filled with the spirit of wisdom, that they may make Aaron's garments to consecrate him, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office.

4 And these are the garments which they shall make; [h]a breastplate, and an [i]ephod, [k]and a robe, and [l]a broidered coat, a [m]mitre, and a girdle: and they shall make holy garments for Aaron thy brother, and his sons, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office.

5 And they shall take [n]gold, and blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen.

6 ¶ And they shall make the ephod[1] of gold, of blue, and of purple, of scarlet, and fine twined [o]linen, with cunning work.

7 It shall have the [p]two shoulder-pieces thereof joined at the two edges thereof; and so it shall be joined together.

8 And [q]the *curious girdle of the ephod, which is upon it, shall be of the same, according to the work thereof; even of gold, of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen.

9 And thou shalt take two [r]onyx-stones, and [s]grave on them the names of the children of Israel.

10 Six of their names on one stone, and the other six names of the rest on the other stone, [t]according to their birth.

11 With the work of an engraver in stone, like the [u]engravings of a signet, shalt thou engrave the two stones, with the names of the children of Israel: thou shalt make them to be set in [x]ouches of gold:

12 And thou shalt put the two stones upon [y]the shoulders of the ephod, for stones of memorial unto the children of Israel. And [z]Aaron shall bear their names before the LORD, upon his two shoulders, for a [a]memorial.

13 And thou shalt make ouches of gold:

14 And two [b]chains of pure gold at the ends; of [c]wreathen work shalt thou make them, and fasten the wreathen chains to the ouches.

15 ¶ And thou shalt make [d]the breastplate[2] of judgment with cunning work; [e]after the work of the ephod thou shalt make it: of gold, of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, and of fine twined linen shalt thou make it.

16 Four-square it shall be being doubled; a span shall be the length thereof, and a span shall be the breadth thereof.

17 And [f]thou shalt *set in it settings of stones, even four rows of stones: the first row shall be [g]a [†]sardius, [h]a topaz, and [i]a carbuncle; this shall be the first row.

18 And the second row shall be an [k]emerald, [l]a sapphire, and [m]a diamond.

19 And the third row [n]a ligure, [o]an agate, and an amethyst.

20 And the fourth row [p]a beryl, and [q]an onyx, and [r]a jasper: they shall be set in gold in their [‡]inclosings.

21 And the stones shall be with the names of the children of Israel, [s]twelve, according to their names; like the engravings of a signet, every one with his name shall they be [t]according to the twelve tribes.

that the wind might not blow them aside: and it seems, such pins were also used to hold down the curtains of the tabernacle, which were made of brass, though the sockets were made of silver, and the boards covered with gold. Yet, some think, that only the pins for the curtains at the door of the sanctuary, the pillars of which stood in sockets of brass, are meant. Within this enclosure the priests and Levites attended at the altar, and hither the people were admitted, at least such as brought sacrifices: the priests went likewise into the sanctuary; but none, except the high priest, went into the holy of holies, and that but on one day in a year; yet, the whole people of Israel was "a kingdom of priests and an holy nation," compared with the heathen. Surely, this divine appointment is suited to teach us, how far sin has separated betwixt us and a holy God, and what difficulties bar our re-union! Surely it evinces the falsehood of that proud sentiment, which represents man's poor services as, in themselves, acceptable and meritorious before God; since even this kingdom of priests could not approach his very mercy-seat, in their own persons, or with their own services, however costly; but only by their representative, their typical mediator, with the sprinkling of blood, and the burning of incense.—Scott.

CHAP. XXVIII. PRIESTS' ROBES.—The garments appointed were, 1. Four, which both the high priest and the inferior priests wore, namely, the linen breeches, the linen coat, the linen girdle which fastened it to them, and the bonnet or turban; that which the high priest wore is called a mitre. 2. Four more, which were peculiar to the high priest, namely, the ephod, with the curious girdle of it, the breastplate of judgment, the long robe with the bells, and pomegranates at the bottom of it, and the golden plate on his forehead. These glorious garments were appointed, (1.) That the priests themselves might be reminded of the dignity of their office, and might behave themselves with due decorum. (2.) That the people might thereby be possessed with a holy reverence of that God whose ministers appeared in such grandeur. (3.) That the priests might be types of Christ, who should offer himself without spot to God, and of all Christians who have the beauty of holiness put upon them, in which they are consecrated to God. Our adorning, now under the gospel, both that of ministers and Christians, is not to be of gold, and pearl, and costly array, but the "garments of salvation, and the robe of righteousness," Isa. lxi. 10; Ps. cxxxii. 9, 16. As the filthy garments wherewith Joshua the high priest was clothed signified the iniquity which cleaved to his priesthood, from which care was taken that it should be purged, Zech. iii. 3, 4, so those holy garments signified the perfect purity that there is in the priesthood of Christ; he is holy, harmless, and undefiled.—Henry.

EPHOD.—The ephod, or the outer garment of the priests, which they wore over the rest to keep them close about them, was a short coat without sleeves; but made with two shoulder-pieces, one for each shoulder, to join the whole garment together, and to retain it in its place. According to our translation, and the general sense of expositors, it was likewise girt on with a girdle over the breast, dyed, embroidered, and interwoven with gold, like the other parts of the ephod; but it is not certain whether the original words mean a girdle, or merely that the whole of the ephod which went round the body, as well as that which was on the breast and shoulders, should be thus ornamented. The ephod, however, was buttoned on each shoulder by an onyx set in gold; and on these two onyx-stones were engraven the names of the twelve sons of Israel, six on each onyx, according to their seniority: that the chief priest might bear their names before the Lord in his ministrations, and thus both remember to plead their cause, and also put the Lord in remembrance of his promises to them. There were likewise two chains of gold, curiously wreathen, and fixed to the ouches, in which the onyx-stones were set; and these chains seem to have served also to fasten the breastplate on the ephod, ver. 22—28. Thus Christ appeared to the apostle, "girt about the paps with a golden girdle;" for "righteousness was the girdle of his loins;" "he was clad with zeal as a cloak;" "the government was upon his shoulders;" and he bears the names of his people before God, as a memorial; while, as their representative and advocate, with all his power, he interposes in their behalf, and maintains their cause.

BREASTPLATE.—"The breastplate of judgment" was so called, because the high priest wore it whenever he consulted the Lord about the concerns of religion and government, in order to deliver the judgment of God to the rulers in the congregation. It was a piece of fine linen cloth, woven, dyed, and embroidered, like the golden ephod, and being doubled it was a span square. Upon it were fixed twelve precious stones, set in twelve ouches of gold; and on each of them was engraven the names of one of the sons of Israel, as the representatives of the twelve tribes. This breastplate Aaron wore when he went into the holy place, for a memorial before the Lord, to remind him that he acted in a public character; and must have the interest of all the tribes, whom he represented, near his heart in approaching the Lord, without any prejudice or partiality. This was an evident type of Christ, who has the name even of every individual of his people engraven upon his heart; and, within the veil, will be sure never to forget or neglect any of them, or of their concerns, however destitute or despicable they may be upon earth. The breastplate, thus richly decorated, was firmly joined to the ephod of gold. Two golden rings were fixed on the two uppermost corners of the breastplate, to which the wreathen chains of gold, (before mentioned in the description of the ephod,)

22 And thou shalt make [u]upon the breastplate chains at the ends, of wreathen work, of pure gold.

23 And thou shalt make upon the breastplate two rings of gold, and shalt put the two rings on the two ends of the breastplate.

24 And thou shalt put the two wreathen chains[s] of gold in the two rings which are on the ends of the breastplate.

25 And the other two ends of the two wreathen chains, thou shalt fasten in the two ouches, and put them [x]on the shoulder-pieces of the ephod before[4] it.

26 And thou shalt make two rings of gold, and thou shalt put them upon the two ends of the breastplate, in the border thereof, which is in the side of the ephod inward.

27 And two other rings of gold thou shalt make, and shalt put them on the two sides of the ephod, underneath, towards the forepart thereof, over against the other coupling thereof, above [y]the curious girdle of the ephod.

28 And they shall bind the breastplate, by the rings thereof unto the rings of the ephod with [z]a lace of blue, that it may be above the curious girdle of the ephod, and that the breastplate be not loosed from the ephod.

29 And Aaron shall bear the names of the children of Israel [a]in the breastplate of judgment, [b]upon his heart, when he goeth in unto the holy place, for [c]a memorial before the LORD continually.

30 ¶ And thou shalt put in the breastplate of judgment [d]the Urim and the Thummim; and they shall be upon Aaron's heart, when he goeth in before the LORD: and Aaron shall [e]bear the judgment of the children of Israel [f]upon his heart, before the LORD continually.

31 ¶ And thou shalt make [g]the robe of the ephod all of blue.

32 And there shall be an hole in the top of it, in the midst thereof: it shall have a binding of woven work, round about the hole of it, [h]as it were the hole of an habergeon, [i]that it be not rent.

33 And beneath, [k]upon the [5]hem of it, thou shalt make [l]pomegranates[5] of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, round about the hem thereof; and [m]bells of gold between them round about:

34 A [n]golden bell and a pomegranate, a golden bell and a pomegranate, upon the hem of the robe round about.

35 And it shall be upon Aaron, to minister: and his sound[6] shall be heard when he [o]goeth in unto the holy place before the LORD, and when he cometh out; that he die not.

36 ¶ And thou shalt make a plate of pure gold, and [p]grave upon it, like the engravings of a signet, [q]HOLINESS TO THE LORD.

37 And thou shalt put it on [r]a blue lace,[7] that it may be upon the mitre: upon the fore-front of [s]the mitre it shall be.

38 And it shall be upon Aaron's forehead, that Aaron may [t]bear the iniquity of the holy things, which the children of Israel shall hallow in all their holy gifts; and it shall be always upon his forehead, that they may be [u]accepted before the LORD.

39 ¶ And thou shalt [x]embroider the coat of fine linen, and thou shalt make the mitre of fine linen, and thou shalt make [y]the girdle of [z]needlework.

40 ¶ And for Aaron's sons [a]thou shalt make coats, and thou shalt make for them girdles, and [b]bonnets[8] shalt thou make for them, [c]for glory and for beauty.

41 And thou shalt put them upon Aaron thy brother, and his sons with him; and shalt [d]anoint them, [e]and [f]consecrate them, and sanctify them, that they may [g]minister unto me in the priest's office.

42 And thou shalt make them linen [8]breeches to cover their [*]nakedness; from [t]the loins even unto the thighs they shall reach:

43 And they shall be upon Aaron, and upon his sons, when they come in unto the tabernacle of the congregation, or when they come near unto the altar to minister in the holy place; that they [h]bear not iniquity, and die. It shall be [i]a statute for ever unto him, and his seed after him.

The sacrifice and ceremonies of consecrating the priests, 1. The continual burnt-offering, 38.

AND this is the thing that thou shalt do unto them to [a]hallow them, [b]to minister unto me in the priest's office. [c]Take one young bullock, and two [d]rams without blemish,

2 And [e]unleavened bread, and cakes unleavened [f]tempered with oil, and [g]wafers unleavened anointed with oil: of wheaten flour shalt thou make them.

3 And thou shalt put them into one basket, and bring them [h]in the basket, with the bullock and the two rams.

4 And Aaron and his sons thou shalt bring [i]unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and shalt [k]wash them with water.[i]

5 And thou shalt take the [l]garments, and put upon Aaron the coat, and the robe of the ephod, and the ephod, and the breastplate, and gird him with the curious girdle of the ephod.

6 And thou shalt put the [m]mitre upon his head, and put the holy crown upon the mitre.

which were joined to the ouches of gold on the shoulder-pieces, were fastened, ver. 14, 25. Then two other rings of gold were placed underneath, and out of sight, at the lowermost corners of the breastplate; and two answering them on the ephod, at the bottom of the shoulder-pieces—as the word rendered sides, ver. 27, evidently means; and these rings on the breastplate, and on the ephod, were tied fast together by a blue lace, or ribband, on each side, over the curious work of the ephod. Thus it was so completely fastened at all the four corners, that it could not move.—Scott.

URIM AND THUMMIM.—The Scriptures nowhere inform us what the URIM and THUMMIM were; nor was any direction given to Moses how to make them. The original words signify, THE LIGHTS, (or illuminations,) and THE PERFECTIONS; and a variety of conjectures have been made on the subject. Some suppose that the precious stones, engraven with the names of the sons of Israel, are meant; which are thus called from their brilliancy, and because they were the most perfect of their kind: but the context seems to imply that something further was intended, and this interpretation is not satisfactory. Others think, that the words, HA URIM AND HA THUMMIM, were either wrought in the substance of the breastplate, or engraven on a plate of gold, and fixed upon it; as HOLINESS TO THE LORD was upon the mitre: intimating that Divine illumination and strict integrity, or soundness of heart, were requisite in the sacred office of the high priest; or rather, that the clearest light and knowledge, with the most perfect counsel and direction, would be obtained by thus consulting the Lord. This interpretation seems not inconsistent with the narrative; but, it is objected, that no direction is given how these words were to be put into the breastplate, as there is afterwards concerning the inscription on the mitre. Others therefore think, that the URIM and THUMMIM were something given to Moses on the mount, to be privately enclosed in the breastplate, as a pledge that the Lord would answer the high priest when he thus inquired his will; and that it was the Lord's express intention none should know what they were.—Scott. This oracle was of great use to Israel; Joshua consulted it, Num. xxvii. 21, and, it is likely, the judges after him. It was lost in the captivity, and never regained after, though, it should seem, it was expected, Ezra ii. 63. But it was a shadow of good things to come, and the substance is Christ. He is our Oracle; by him God in these last days makes known himself and his mind to us, Heb. i. 1; John i. 18. Divine revelation centres in him, and comes to us through him; he is the Light, the true Light, the faithful Witness, the Truth itself, and from him we receive the Spirit of truth, who leads into all truth. The joining of the breastplate to the ephod denotes that his prophetical office was founded in his priesthood; and it was by the merit of his death that he purchased this honour for himself, and this favour for us. It was the Lamb that had been slain, that was worthy to take the book, and to open the seals, Rev. v. 9.—Henry.

MITRE.—The mitre was made of fine linen, rolled up, not much unlike the turbans worn at this day in the Eastern countries, as the original name evidently indicates. On this crown, or turban, was fastened, by a blue ribband or lace, passed through it and tying behind, a plate of fine gold, beaten into the form of a leaf, or one of the lamina of a beautiful flower, and rendered as bright as possible; for so the word seems to mean. On this plate were engraven the Hebrew words, signifying HOLINESS TO THE LORD; and it was placed on the mitre exactly over the high priest's forehead, so that every one whom he faced might read the inscription. This was suited to remind him of the sanctity of his office and character, as the typical mediator between JEHOVAH and his people, and so especially required to be, in all respects, devoted in holiness to the service of a holy God; and to warn him neither to disgrace, nor attempt to conceal, his sacred function.—Scott.

CHAP. XXIX. CONSECRATION OF AARON AND HIS SONS.—It was done with many ceremonies. 1. They were to be washed, ver. 4, signifying that they must be clean who "bear the vessels of the Lord," Isa. lii. 11. They that would "perfect holiness," must "cleanse themselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit," 2 Cor. vii. 1; Isa. i. 16—18. They were now washed all over; but afterward, when they went in to minister, they washed only their hands and feet, chap. xxx. 19; for "he that is washed, needs" no more, John xiii. 10. 2. They were to be clothed with the holy garments, ver. 5, 6, 8, 9, to signify that it was not sufficient for them to put away the pollutions of sin, but they must put on the graces of the Spirit, be "clothed with righteousness," Ps. cxxxii. 9. They must be girded as men prepared and strengthened for their work; and they must be robed, and crowned, be anointed with the "holy anointing oil," ver. 7, that the church might be filled with the sweet odour of his administrations, (for "ointment and perfume rejoice the heart,") and in token of the pouring out of the Spirit upon him, to qualify him for his work. Brotherly love is compared to this oil with which Aaron was anointed, Ps. cxxxiii. 2. The inferior priests are said to be anointed, chap. xxx. 30, not on their heads, as the high priest, Lev. xxi. 10, the oil was only mingled with the blood that was sprinkled upon their garments. 4. Sacrifices were to be offered for them. The covenant of priesthood, as all other covenants, must be "made by sacrifice." (1.) There must be a "sin-offering" to make atonement for them, ver. 10—14. The law made them priests that had infirmity, and therefore they must first offer for their own sin, before they could make atonement "for 7 Then shalt thou take the [n]anointing oil, and pour it upon his head, and anoint him.

8 And thou shalt bring [o]his sons, and put coats upon them.

9 And thou shalt gird them with girdles (Aaron and his sons), and [*]put the bonnets on them: and [p]the priest's office shall be theirs for a perpetual statute: and thou shalt [†]consecrate Aaron and his sons.

10 And thou shalt [q]cause a bullock to be brought before the tabernacle of the congregation: and Aaron and his sons shall [r]put their hands upon the head of the bullock.

11 And [s]thou shalt kill the bullock before the LORD, by the [t]door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

12 And thou shalt take of [u]the blood of the bullock, and put it upon [x]the horns of the altar with thy finger, and [y]pour all the blood beside the bottom of the altar.

the people," Heb. vii. 27, 28. They were to put their hand on the head of their sacrifice, ver. 10, confessing that they deserved to die for their own sin, and desiring that the killing of the beast might expiate their guilt, and be accepted as a vicarious satisfaction. It was used as other sin-offerings were; only, whereas the flesh of other sin-offerings was eaten by the priests, Lev. x. 18, in token of the priests taking away the sin of the people, this was appointed to be all burnt without the camp, ver. 14, to signify the imperfection of the legal dispensation. (2.) There must be a "burnt-offering," a ram wholly burnt to the honour of God, in token of the dedication of themselves wholly to God and to his service, as "living sacrifices," kindled with the fire, and ascending in the flame of holy love, ver. 45—18. The sin-offering must first be offered, and then the burnt-offering; for, till guilt be removed, no acceptable service can be performed, Isa. 6, 7. (3.) There must be a "peace-offering;" it is called "the ram of consecration," because there was more in this peculiar to the occasion, than in the other two. In the burnt-offering, God had the glory of their priesthood, in this, they had the comfort of it: and, in token of a mutual covenant between God and them, First, The blood of the sacrifice was divided between God and them, ver. 20, 21; part of the blood was "sprinkled upon the altar round about," and part put upon them, upon their bodies, ver. 20, and upon their garments, ver. 21. Thus the benefit of the expiation made by the sacrifice was applied and assured to them, and their whole selves from head to foot sanctified to the service of God. The blood was put upon the extreme parts of the body, to signify that it was all as it were, enclosed and taken in for God, the tip of the ear, and the great toe not excepted. We reckon that the blood and oil sprinkled upon garments, spotted and stained them; yet the holy oil, and the blood of the sacrifice, sprinkled upon their garments, must be looked upon as the greatest adorning imaginable to them, for they signified the blood of Christ, and the graces of the Spirit, which constitute and complete the beauty of holiness, and recommend us to God; we read of robes "made white with the blood of the Lamb." Secondly, The "flesh of the sacrifice," with the meat-offering annexed to it, was likewise divided between God and them, that (to speak with reverence) God and they might feast together, in token of friendship and fellowship. [1.] Part of it was to be first waved before the Lord, and then burnt upon the altar; part of the "flesh," ver. 22, part of the "bread," for bread and flesh must go together, ver. 23; these were first put into the hands of Aaron to be waved to and fro, in token of their being offered to God, (who, though unseen, yet compasses us round on every side,) and then they were to be burnt upon the altar, ver. 24, 25, for the altar was to devour God's part of the sacrifice. Thus God admitted Aaron and his sons to be his servants, and wait at his table taking the meat of his altar from their hands. [2.] The other part, both of the flesh of the ram, and of the bread, Aaron and his sons were to eat at the door of the tabernacle, ver. 31—33, to signify that he called them not only "servants," but "friends," John xv. 15. He "supped with them," and "they with him." Their eating of the things wherewith "the atonement was made," signified their "receiving the atonement," as the expression is, Rom. v. 11, their thankful acceptance of the benefit of it, and their joyful communion with God thereupon, which was the true intent and meaning of a feast upon a sacrifice.—Henry.

THE DAILY SERVICE.—When the priests had been fully consecrated, and the altar sanctified, two lambs of the first year must be offered daily, one in the morning, the other in the afternoon, as a burnt-offering. This observance might never on any account be omitted; whatever additional sacrifices were appointed for the sabbaths and solemnities, or presented on various occasions by the rulers, priests, or people; for, it especially typified "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world;" the constant efficacy of his one all-sufficient atonement: and our continual need of it in all our approaches unto a holy God. It likewise taught the people, that God must be worshipped every day continually, morning and evening at least, with prayer, and praise, and thanksgiving; and not only on sabbaths and solemn festivals; and that this should be considered as a sacred feast, to which they were admitted, and in which the Lord condescended to meet with them.—To render this idea of communion with God more familiar to their minds, the several particulars requisite to a feast accompanied the sacrifice; especially bread and wine, in the form of a meat-offering and a drink-offering.—The word rendered "tenth-deal," means a tenth, that is, of an ephah, or about three quarts of wine measure, being the same as an omer. A hin contained the sixth part of an ephah, or about five quarts wine measure. So that about three quarts of fine flour, mixed up with a quart and half-a-pint of the very best oil, was morning and evening burnt upon the altar, along with the lamb of the daily sacrifice; and a quarter and half-a-pint of wine was poured, as a libation upon it. The whole of this oblation, both in its typical import, as an act of solemn worship, and as denoting the gracious communion of the Lord with his people, was "a sweet savour, an offering made by fire unto the LORD." The continual burnt-offering must be sacrificed nowhere except at the door of the tabernacle. The word rendered "of the congregation," here and in very many places, undoubtedly refers to the LORD'S meeting with the people, and not to their assembling together, at the tabernacle; for, the reason of the name is expressly and particularly shown. So long as the atoning sacrifice was daily offered, the Lord promised to meet his people, at the tabernacle, in mercy. There he intended to meet Moses, and deliver to him, doubtless in an audible voice, all the remaining parts of the law.

11 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

12 When thou [o]takest the sum of the children of Israel, after [†]their number; then shall they give every man [p]a ransom for his soul unto the LORD, when thou numberest them;[2] that there be [q]no plague among them, when thou numberest them.

13 This they shall give, every one that passeth among them that are numbered; half a shekel, after the shekel of the sanctuary;[3] (a shekel is twenty gerahs,) [s]an half-shekel shall be the offering of the LORD.

14 Every one that passeth among them that are numbered, [t]from twenty years old and above, shall give an offering unto the LORD.

15 The [u]rich shall not [‡]give more, and the poor shall not [§]give less, than half a shekel, when they give an offering unto the LORD, to make [x]an atonement for your souls.

16 And thou shalt take the atonement-money of the children of Israel, and shalt [y]appoint it for the service of the tabernacle of the congregation; that it may be [z]a memorial unto the children of Israel before the LORD, to make an atonement for your souls.

17 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

18 Thou shalt also make [a]a laver of brass, and his foot also of brass, to wash withal: and thou shalt [b]put it between the tabernacle of the congregation and the altar, and thou shalt put water therein.

19 For Aaron and his sons shall [c]wash their hands and their feet thereat.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Blessed be God, our High Priest is not altogether like the high priests of the family of Aaron.—He indeed is solemnly set apart to his office, and has "his hands filled:" for he has the interests of all his people to maintain, and their cause to plead; and all power and authority in heaven and earth are given unto him for that purpose: he is also clothed with majesty and honour, and has not only the holy anointing, but the fulness of the Spirit treasured up in him. He, however, needed not to offer any sacrifices for himself; and by one single sacrifice he hath fully atoned for all the sins of all his people, and opened for them the gates of heavenly felicity. There could be no occasion, in his case, to prescribe rules for the appointment of his successor: because "he hath an unchangeable priesthood, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for us." Yet, is he at the same time, our sin-offering, our peace, our altar, yea, our true tabernacle, in which "dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." Here the righteous Lord meets, and blesses, and sanctifies his people by his glory; and there they meet him, and present themselves as living sacrifices, while they offer him "the fruit of their lips, giving thanks to his name."—"Truly," may every real Christian say, "our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." But are we of that number? Do we wash our souls, as humble penitents, "in the fountain which he hath opened for sin and for uncleanness?" Do we present ourselves to God, day by day, arrayed in the priestly garments of Christ's righteousness, trusting only in his merits, and not all in ourselves or in our services, for acceptance with God? Are we anointed with the unction of the Holy Spirit, purifying our hearts from the love of sin, and shedding abroad in them the love of God? Do we, as confessing our sins and exercising faith, lay our hands upon the head of the great sacrifice? And are our hearts and "consciences cleansed by his blood, from dead works to serve the living God;" and our bodies presented, not as a burnt-offering, but as a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God: whilst the members of them, which once were instruments of unrighteousness unto sin, are now made instruments of righteousness unto him? Do we maintain daily communion with him, presenting our morning and evening sacrifice of secret and family worship, acceptable through the atonement of "the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world?" And are our hands filled with his work, and our time and talents offered to the Lord as a wave-offering, and improved to his glory? Is this the sincere intention and desire of our hearts all the day long."—Scott.

CHAP. XXX. ALTAR OF INCENSE.—The altar of incense was made, like the ark of the covenant, of shittim-wood covered with plates of gold. It was something more than half-a-yard square, and above a yard in height: and from the four corner posts arose four horns, or pinnacles, which were covered with plates of gold. It was surrounded on the top with a cornice of solid gold, underneath which were placed two golden rings, probably on two opposite corners, for the conveniency of carrying it on staves, during the marches of Israel in the wilderness, and afterwards when removed to different places in Canaan.—This altar, and the incense burnt on it, typified the Son of God in our nature making intercession for us; as the altar of burnt-offering and its oblations, typified his sacrifice. The former was therefore placed within the sanctuary, the latter in the court without; for his sacrifice was offered on earth, his intercession is in heaven. But, it was not put in the most holy place; because the continual intercession of Christ was represented by the other priests, as well as the high priest, daily burning incense upon it morning and evening. It was therefore placed without the vail, but nearer to it than the table or the candlestick; and in the centre of the tabernacle, as directly over-against the ark, except as the vail was between.

CENSUS AND HALF-SHEKEL.—The Israelites were twice numbered, in the days of Moses, by divine command; and doubtless on both these occasions this law was observed. Indeed, the collecting of the half-shekel, if exactly done, would itself be equivalent to numbering them.—Women and minors were exempted from the tax, not being numbered; and so were the Levites, as it is manifest from the comparing the number of those who paid the tax, with the sum total of the congregation, besides the Levites, chap. xxxviii. 26; Num. i. 46, 47. Indeed, it is probable, that the old men, who were incapable of war, were also exempted, Num. i. 42, 45. The shekel of the sanctuary, where the standard weight was kept, was nearly half-an-ounce troy-weight; so that the sum paid by each person was about fifteenpence.—This silver was at that time used for the sockets of the sanctuary, and for hooks for the curtains, and for plates, to fillet or cover the chapiters of the pillars round the court. But it is probable, a similar assessment was made, as often as necessary; being the same that was demanded of our Lord; and it was in general expended in purchasing sacrifices, wood, and other things, for the service of the sanctuary; or perhaps in repairs. Other contributions were voluntary, and proportioned to the ability or liberality of the offerer: but this was the ransom of the souls or lives of the people, and the same sum was paid by every man, whether rich or poor; and if any refused to pay it, they could have no interest in the sacrifices, and might expect to be visited with the plague for their contempt.—Scott.

LAVER.—Orders are here given, 1. For the making of a laver, or font, of brass, a large vessel, that would contain a good quantity of water, which was to be set near the door of the tabernacle, ver. 18. The foot of "brass," it is supposed, was so contrived as to receive the water, which was let into it out of the laver by spouts, or cocks. They then 20 When they go into the tabernacle of the congregation, they shall wash with water, that they [d]die not; or when they come near to the altar to minister, to burn offering made by fire unto the LORD:

21 So they shall wash their hands and their feet, that they die not; and it shall be [e]a statute for ever to them, even to him and to his seed throughout their generations.

22 ¶ Moreover the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

23 Take thou also unto [f]thee principal spices, of pure myrrh[g] five hundred shekels, and of sweet cinnamon[h] half so much, even two hundred and fifty shekels, and of sweet calamus[i] two hundred and fifty shekels.

24 And of cassia[j] five hundred shekels, after [k]the shekel of the sanctuary, and of oil-olive an [l]hin.

25 And thou shalt make it an oil of holy ointment, an ointment compound after the art of the [m]apothecary: it shall be [n]an holy anointing oil.

26 And thou shalt [o]anoint the tabernacle of the congregation therewith, and the ark of the testimony,

27 And the table and all his vessels, and the candlestick and his vessels, and the altar of incense,

28 And the altar of burnt-offering with all his vessels, and the laver and his foot.

29 And thou shalt sanctify them, that they may be most holy: [p]whatsoever toucheth them shall be holy.

30 And thou shalt [q]anoint Aaron and his sons, and [r]consecrate them, that they may minister unto me in the priest's office.

31 And thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel, saying, This shall be [s]an holy anointing oil unto me, throughout your generations.

32 Upon [t] man's flesh shall it not be poured, neither shall ye make any other like it, after the composition of it: it is holy, and it shall be holy unto you.

33 Whosoever [u]compoundeth any like it, or whosoever putteth any of it upon [v]a stranger,[8] shall even be [w]cut off from his people.

34 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Take [x]unto thee sweet spices, stacte, and onycha, and galbanum; these sweet spices with pure [y]frankincense: of each shall there be a like weight.

35 And thou shalt make it a [z]perfume, a confection after the art of the apothecary, [a]tempered together, pure and holy.

36 And thou shalt beat some of it very small, and put of it before [b]the testimony, in the tabernacle of the congregation, [c]where I will meet with thee: it shall be unto you most holy.

CHAP. XXXI.

Bezaleel and Aholiab are called for the work of the tabernacle, 1. Of the sabbath, 12. Moses receiveth the two tables, 18.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 See, [a]I have called by name [b]Bezaleel[1] the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah.

3 And I have [c]filled him with the spirit of God,[2] in wisdom, and in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship,

4 To [d]devise cunning works, to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass,

5 And [e]in cutting of stones to set them, and in carving of timber, to work in all manner of workmanship.

6 And I, behold, [f]I have given with him [g]Aholiab, [3]the son of Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan: and in the hearts of all that are [h]wise-hearted I have put wisdom; that they may make all that I have commanded thee:

7 The [i]tabernacle of the congregation, and the [k]ark of the testimony, and the mercy-seat that is thereupon, and all the [l]furniture of the tabernacle,

8 And [l]the table and his furniture, and the [m]pure candlestick with all his furniture, and [n]the altar of incense,

9 And [o]the altar of burnt-offering with all his furniture, and [p]the laver and his foot,

10 And [q]the clothes of service, and the holy garments for Aaron the priest, and the garments of his sons, to minister in the priest's office,

11 And [r]the anointing oil, and [s]sweet incense for the holy place; according to all that I have commanded thee, shall they do.

12 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

13 Speak thou also unto the children of Israel, saying, [t]Verily my sabbaths ye shall keep:[4] for it is a [u]sign between me and you, throughout your generations; [x]that ye may know that I am the LORD, that doth sanctify you.

14 Ye shall [y]keep the sabbath therefore; for it is holy unto you. [z]Every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death: for whosoever [a]doeth any work therein, that soul shall be cut off from among his people.

had a laver for the "priests" only to wash in, but to us now there is a fountain open for Judah and Jerusalem to wash in, Zech. xiii. 1, an inexhaustible "fountain of living water," so that it is our own fault if we remain in our pollution. 2. For the using of this laver; Aaron and his sons must wash their hands and feet at this laver, every time they went in to minister, every morning at least, ver. 19—21. For this purpose, clean water was put into the laver fresh every day. Though they washed themselves ever so clean at their own houses, that would not serve, they must wash at the laver, because that was appointed for washing, 2 Kings v. 12—14. This was designed, (1.) To teach them purity in all their ministrations, and to possess them with a reverence of God's holiness, and a dread of the pollutions of sin. They must not only wash and be made clean, when they were first consecrated, but they must wash and be kept clean, whenever they went in to minister. He only shall "stand in God's holy place," that has "clean hands and a pure heart," Ps. xxiv. 3, 4. And (2.) It was to teach us, who are daily to attend upon God, daily to renew our repentance for sin, and our believing application of the blood of Christ to our souls for remission; for in many things we daily offend and contract pollution.—Henry.

THE HOLY OIL.—The spices, or gums, of which this perfume, or incense, (for so the word is elsewhere rendered,) was composed, are not all certainly known; because some of the words are seldom used in Scripture. The stacte is supposed, by the most approved commentators, to have been the purest part of myrrh: and the onycha, an odoriferous shell, though some think it was the gum called ladanum. The galbanum is thought to have been of a different sort from the gum called now by that name, the smell of which is very disagreeable. The frankincense is well known. The word rendered tempered together, signifies salted, (Marg.;) and it is supposed, that salt was mingled with the other ingredients; as indeed it was used in every oblation. This incense, being beaten small, was placed within the sanctuary, probably on the table; that it might be ready for the priests to take and burn on the golden altar, before the testimony, or ark, as nothing but the vail interposed; for, this daily burning of incense within the sanctuary was necessary, in order to Israel's communion with God, as the daily sacrifices on the altar of burnt-offering.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—If men do not wilfully shut their eyes, to the things which are written in the word of God, they cannot but see in these ceremonial institutions, compared with the New Testament, that Jesus Christ is the grand subject of the Scriptures; and the sum of all true religion as "made of God unto us, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption." To assert that the language of the New Testament concerning his priesthood, oblation, entrance into the holiest, and intercession for his people, were accommodations to these Old Testament rites, is to suppose that, in building the spiritual temple, the all-wise Architect, without any intention, planned and formed a very intricate and unnecessary scaffolding, and then erected the building for the sake, and according to the pattern of that scaffolding! But, "known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world." He first formed the model of the salvation in his own infinite mind, then showed that model to Moses in the mount; and, according to the pattern of it, this scaffolding was formed, for the sake of the intended building, which accordingly has since been erected exactly answerable to it.—From this chapter let us observe, that our duty and our indigence call upon us daily to approach our Creator and Benefactor, with our thanksgivings and supplications: but, that we are not worthy to draw nigh in our own name, or in any other way, than through the meritorious and prevailing intercession of the Son of God.—Scott.

CHAP. XXXI. DIVINE QUALIFICATION.—God qualified Bezaleel and Aholiab for his service; ver. 3, "I have filled him with the Spirit of God;" and, ver. 6, "In the hearts of all that are wise-hearted I have put wisdom." Note, 1. Skill in common arts and employments is the gift of God; from him are both the faculty and the improvement of the faculty. It is he that puts even this "wisdom into the inward parts," Job xxxviii. 36. He teaches the husbandman discretion, Isa xxviii. 26, and the tradesman too; and he must have the praise of it. 2. God dispenses his gifts variously, one gift to one, another to another, and all for the good of the whole body, both of mankind and of the church. Moses was fittest of all to govern Israel, but Bezaleel was fitter than he to build the tabernacle. The common benefit is very much supported by the variety of men's faculties and inclinations; the genius of some leads them to be serviceable one way, of others another way, and "all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit," 1 Cor. xii. 11. This forbids pride, envy, contempt, and carnal emulation, and strengthens the bond of mutual love. 3. Those whom God calls to any service, he will either find or make fit for it. If God gives the commission, he will in some measure give the qualifications, according as the service is.—Henry.

THE SABBATH.—The injunction, to sanctify the Sabbath, seems to have been repeated and enlarged on at this time; to show the people, that the sacred rest must not be interrupted, even while they were employed in erecting the tabernacle. The appointment of the weekly sabbath was a sign, or token, of the Lord's special favour to Israel. Their strict and constant observance of it would not only distinguish them, as the worshippers of God, who created the heavens and the earth in six days, and rested on the seventh, from all the surrounding idolaters: but, through successive generations, it would be a sign 15 [b]Six days may work be done, but in the seventh is [c]the sabbath of rest, [†]holy to the LORD; [d]whosoever doeth any work in the sabbath-day, he shall surely be put to death.

16 Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the sabbath, to observe the sabbath throughout their generations, for [e]a perpetual covenant.

17 It is a sign between me and the children of Israel for ever: for in [f]six days the LORD made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and [g]was refreshed.

18 ¶ And he [h]gave unto Moses, when he had made an end of communing with him upon mount Sinai, two tables of testimony, tables of stone, written with [i]the finger of God.

CHAP. XXXII.

The people cause Aaron to make a calf, 1. Moses breaketh the tables, 19. The idolaters slain, 25. Moses prayeth for the people, 30.

AND when the people saw that Moses [a]delayed to come down out of the mount, the people gathered themselves together unto Aaron, and said unto him, [b]Up, [c]make us gods [d]which shall go before us: for as for this Moses, [e]the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, [f]we wot not what is become of him.

2 And Aaron said unto them, Break off the [g]golden ear-rings which are in the ears of your wives, of your sons, and of your daughters, and bring them unto me.

3 And all the people [h]brake off the golden ear-rings which were in their ears, and brought them unto Aaron.

4 And he received them at their hand, and [i]fashioned it with [k]a graving tool, after he had made it a molten [l]calf: and they said, [m]These be thy gods, O Israel, [n]which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

5 And when [o]Aaron saw it, he built an altar before it, and Aaron [p]made proclamation, and said, To-morrow is [q]a feast to the LORD.

6 And they rose up early on the morrow, and [r]offered burnt-offerings, and brought peace-offerings: and the people [s]sat down to eat and to drink, and rose up to play.[1]

7 And the LORD said unto Moses, [t]Go, get thee down: for [u]thy people, which thou broughtest out of the land of Egypt, have [x]corrupted themselves.

8 They [y]have turned aside quickly out of the way [z]which I commanded them: they have made them a molten calf, and have worshipped it, and have sacrificed thereunto, and said, [a]These be thy gods, O Israel, which have brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

9 And the LORD said unto Moses, [b]I have seen this people, and, behold, it is [c]a stiffnecked people.

10 Now therefore [d]let me alone, that [e]my wrath may wax hot against them, and that I may consume them: and [f]I will make of thee a great nation.

11 And Moses [g]besought *the LORD his God, and said, LORD, [h]why doth thy wrath wax hot against thy people, [i]which thou hast brought forth out of the land of Egypt with great power, and with a mighty hand?

12 Wherefore [k]should the Egyptians speak and say, For mischief did he bring them out, to slay them in the mountains, and to consume them from the face of the earth? [l]Turn from thy fierce wrath, and [m]repent of this evil against thy people.

13 [n]Remember Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, thy servants, [o]to whom thou swarest by thine own self, and saidst unto them, [p]I will multiply your seed as the stars of heaven, and all this land that I have spoken of will I give unto your seed, and they shall inherit it for ever.

14 And the LORD [q]repented of the evil which he thought to do unto his people.

15 ¶ And Moses [r]turned, and went down from the mount, and the two tables of [s]the testimony were in his hand: the tables were [t]written on both their sides; on the one side and on the other were they written.

16 And [u]the tables were the work of God, and the writing was the writing of God graven upon the tables.

17 And when [x]Joshua heard the noise of the people as [y]they shouted, he said unto Moses, [z]There is a noise of war in the camp.

18 And he said, It is not the voice of them that shout for mastery, neither is it the voice of them that cry for [†]being overcome: [a]but the noise of them that sing do I hear.

19 And it came to pass as soon as he came nigh unto the camp, that [b]he saw the calf, and [c]the dancing: and Moses' [d]anger waxed hot, and he cast the tables out of his hands, and [e]brake them beneath the mount.

20 And he [f]took the calf which they had made, and burnt it in the fire, and ground it to powder, and strawed it upon the water, and [g]made the children of Israel drink of it.

21 And Moses said unto Aaron, [h]What did this people unto thee, that thou hast brought so great a sin upon them?

22 And Aaron said, Let not the anger of my LORD wax hot: thou [i]knowest the people, [k]that they are set on mischief.

of their covenant-relation to him; and an important means of bringing them more fully, acquainted with his glorious perfections, and of rendering them indeed a holy people devoted to his service. It was, therefore, at this time, expressly made a part of the judicial law, that every Israelite should hallow the sabbath: if any one violated it, he must be put to death by the magistrate, provided his crime were known; and if he kept it secret, he might expect to be cut off by some divine judgment. Other seasons were set apart as a kind of sabbaths; but this was the principal; "a sabbath of rest, holy to the LORD;" the public observance of which by the nation, and the punishment of such as violated it, formed one condition of the national covenant throughout their generations. For, it was kept in honour of the Creator, who rested and was refreshed, when he had completed his design; such satisfaction did he take in that display of his glory.—Scott.

CHAP. XXXII. FOLLY AND APOSTACY.—This was a very strange motion, "Up, make us gods." If they wot not what was become of Moses, and thought him lost, it had been decent for them to have appointed a solemn mourning for him for certain days; but see how soon so great a benefactor is forgotten. If they had said, "Moses is lost, make us a government," there had been some sense in it, though a great deal of ingratitude to the memory of Moses, and contempt of Aaron and Hur, who were left lords-justices in his absence; but to say "Moses is lost, make us a god," was the greatest absurdity imaginable. Was Moses their god? Had he ever pretended to be so? Whatever was become of Moses, was it not evident, beyond contradiction, that God was still with them? And had they any room to question his leading of their camp, who victualled it so well every day? Could they have any other God that would provide so well for them as he had done, nay as he now did? And yet, "Make us gods which shall go before us!" Gods? How many would they have? Is not one sufficient? "Make us gods;" and what good would gods of their own making do them?

THE CALF.—1. The people brought in their earrings to Aaron, whose demand of them, instead of discouraging the motion, perhaps did rather gratify their superstition, and beget in them a fancy that the gold taken from their ears would be the most acceptable, and would make the most valuable god. Let their readiness to part with their rings to make an idol of, shame us out of our niggardliness in the services of the true God. Did they not draw back from the charge of their idolatry? And shall we grudge the expenses of our religion, or starve so good a cause? 2. Aaron melted down their rings, and, having a mould prepared for the purpose, poured the melted gold into it, and then producing it in the shape of an ox or calf, giving it some finishing strokes with a graving tool. Some think that Aaron chose this figure for a sign or token of the divine presence, because he thought the head and horn of an ox a proper emblem of the divine power, and yet, being so plain and common a thing, he hoped the people would not be so sottish as to worship it. But it is probable that they had learnt of the Egyptians thus to represent the Deity, for it is said, Ezek. xx. 8, "They did not forsake the idols of Egypt," and, chap. xxiii. 8, "Neither left she her whoredoms brought from Egypt."—Henry.

AARON'S WEAKNESS.—If the conduct of Israel as a people is surprising, that of "Aaron, the saint of the LORD," was still more so. Many conjectures have been made concerning his reasons for acting as he did; but his conduct seems to have been too unreasonable to be either excused, or accounted for: yet the Lord permitted it, that it might appear of what man is capable; and to show that the priesthood was given him of mere grace, when he might justly have been cut off for his transgression; that he might wear his honours the more humbly ever after, as Peter did, after denying his Lord; that when the sin-offering of consecration was offered, he might indeed feel his need of the atonement; and that it might appear, that sinful man wanted a High Priest of another, a nobler order.—The Jews indeed have a tradition that Hur was killed for opposing the project, and that Aaron feared the same fate: but if so, he would have had a better excuse to make before Moses.—Scott.

GOD'S ANGER.—Jehovah expresses his displeasure against Israel for this sin, and the determination of his justice to cut them off, ver. 9, 10. 1. He gives this people their true character; "'It is a stiffnecked people,' unapt to come under the yoke of the divine law, and governed as it were by a spirit of contradiction, averse to all good, and prone to evil; obstinate against the methods employed for their cure." Note, The righteous God sees, not only what we do, but what we are; not only the actions of our lives, but the dispositions of our spirits, and has an eye to them in all his proceedings. 2. He declares what was their just desert—that his wrath should "wax hot against them," so as to consume them at once, and "blot out their name from under heaven," Deut. ix. 14; not only cast them out of covenant, but chase them out of the world. Note, Sin exposes us to the wrath of God; and that wrath, if it be not allayed by divine mercy, will burn us up as stubble. It was just with God to let the law have its course against sinners, and to cut them off immediately in the very act of sin.—Henry.

INTERCESSION OF MOSES.—Instead of at all mentioning the proposal, which God had made to him, or neglecting to pray for his people, Moses interceded for them, with such earnestness, as put him into an agony of mind; for so the word seems to signify. He did not however attempt to palliate or excuse their sin: but he pleaded the glory of the divine perfections as concerned in the event; for if the Lord should destroy Israel, (of whom he 23 For [l]they said unto me, Make us gods which shall go before us: for as for this Moses, the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him.

24 And I said unto them, Whosoever hath any gold, let them break it off. [m]So they gave it me: then I cast it into the fire, and there came out this calf.

25 And when Moses saw that the people were [n]naked; (for [o]Aaron had made them naked unto their [p]shame,[2] among [‡]their enemies;)

26 Then Moses stood in the gate of the camp, and said, [q]Who is on the LORD's side? let him come unto me. And all the sons of Levi gathered themselves together unto him.

27 And he said unto them, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Put every man his sword by his side, and go in and out, from gate to gate, throughout the camp, and [r]slay every man his brother, and every man his companion, and every man his neighbour.

28 And the children of Levi did according to the word of Moses: and [s]there fell of the people that day about three thousand men.

29 [§]For [t]Moses had said, [l]Consecrate yourselves to-day to the LORD, even every man upon his son, and upon his brother; that he may bestow upon you a blessing this day.

30 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, that Moses said unto the people, [u]Ye have sinned a great sin: and now I will go up unto the LORD; [x]peradventure I shall make an [y]atonement for your sin.

31 And Moses [z]returned unto the LORD, and said, Oh, this people have [a]sinned a great sin, and have [b]made them gods of gold.

32 Yet now, [c]if thou wilt forgive their sin: and if not, [d]blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book[3] which thou hast written.

33 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Whosoever hath [e]sinned against me, him will I blot out of [f]my book.

34 Therefore now go, lead the people unto the place of which I have spoken unto thee; behold, [g]mine Angel shall go before thee: nevertheless, in [h]the day when I visit, I will visit their sin upon them.

35 And the LORD plagued the people, because [i]they made the calf, which Aaron made.

CHAP. XXXIII.

The Lord refuseth to go with the people, 1. The Lord talketh with Moses, 9. Moses desireth to see the glory of God, 12.

AND the LORD said unto Moses, [a]Depart, and go up hence, thou and the people which [b]thou hast brought up out of the land of Egypt, unto [c]the land which I sware unto Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, saying, [d]Unto thy seed will I give it:

2 And I will send [e]an angel[1] before thee; and I will drive out [f]the Canaanite, the Amorite, and the Hittite, and the Perizzite, the Hivite, and the Jebusite:

3 Unto [g]a land flowing with milk and honey: [h]for I will not go up in the midst of thee, for thou art [i]a stiff-necked people: [k]lest I consume thee in the way.

4 And when the people heard these evil tidings, [l]they mourned: [m]and no man did put on him his ornaments.

5 For the LORD had said unto Moses, Say unto the children of Israel, Ye are a stiff-necked people: I will come up into the midst of thee [n]in a moment, and consume thee: therefore now [o]put off thy ornaments from thee, that [p]I may know what to do unto thee.

6 And the children of Israel [q]stripped themselves of their ornaments, by the mount Horeb.

7 And Moses took the tabernacle, and pitched it without the camp, [r]afar off from the camp, and called it [s]the Tabernacle of the congregation. And it came to pass, that every one which [t]sought the LORD [u]went out unto the tabernacle of the congregation, which was without the camp.

8 And it came to pass, when Moses went out unto the tabernacle, that all the people rose up, [x]and stood every man at his tent-door, and looked after Moses, until he was gone into the tabernacle.

9 And it came to pass, as Moses entered into the tabernacle, the [y]cloudy pillar descended, and stood at the door of the tabernacle, and the LORD [z]talked with Moses.

10 And all the people saw the cloudy pillar stand at the tabernacle-door: and all the people rose up and [a]worshipped, every man in his tent-door.

11 And the LORD [b]spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto [c]his friend.[2] And he turned again into the camp; but [d]his servant Joshua, the son of Nun, a young man, departed not out of the tabernacle.

12 ¶ And Moses said unto the LORD, See, [e]thou sayest unto me, Bring up this people: and thou hast not let me know whom thou wilt send with me. Yet thou hast said, [f]I know thee by name, and thou hast also found grace in my sight.

13 Now therefore, I pray thee, [g]if I have found grace in thy sight, [h]shew me now thy way, [i]that I may know thee, that I may find grace in thy sight: and [k]consider that this nation is thy people.

says "thy people, whom thou hast brought out,") the Egyptians would impeach his justice and goodness. The destruction of the nation could not apparently be reconciled with his promises and oath to Abraham, Isaac, and Israel: and, whatever their sin deserved, surely JEHOVAH would not give occasion to any injurious reflections being cast upon his own great name. This regard to the divine honour was well-pleasing to the Lord, who graciously intimated his design of sparing them, as he had before seemed determined upon their destruction; which change, in the external discovery of his purpose, is called "repenting of the evil, which he thought to do to his people."—Thus Moses did not go down from the mount till mercy was promised: and his example instructs us in the most affecting manner, how to pray, what pleas to urge, and whence to deduce encouragements for persevering in our supplications.

THE PUNISHMENT.—The Levites were commissioned by Moses to slay the ring-leaders in this wickedness, without respect to friendship, relation, or any other social tie: for idolatry was a crime to be punished by their magistrates. Yet it seems none were executed but those who openly and boldly stood forth; while those who retired as ashamed were spared. This commission being faithfully executed brought a great blessing upon the tribe; and was a preparation for its being appointed to the service of the sanctuary, which was a very honourable and advantageous distinction.—Scott.

CHAP. XXXIII. RECONCILIATION.—God was, in Moses, reconciling Israel to himself, and manifested himself very willing to be at peace. 1. God met Moses at the place of treaty, ver. 9. The cloudy pillar which had withdrawn itself from the camp when it was polluted with idolatry, now returned to this tabernacle at some distance, coming back gradually. If our hearts go forth toward God, to meet him, he will graciously come down to meet us. 2. God "talked with Moses," ver. 9, "spake to him face to face, as a man speaks to his friend," ver. 11, which intimates that God revealed himself to Moses, not only with greater clearness and evidence of divine light, than to any other of the prophets, but also with greater expressions of particular kindness and grace. He spake, not as a prince to a subject, but as a "man to his friend," whom he loves, and with whom he takes sweet counsel. This was great encouragement to Israel, to see their advocate so great a favourite; and, that they might be encouraged by it, "Moses turned again into the camp," to tell the people what hopes he had of bringing this business to a good issue, and that they might not despair if he should be long absent.—Henry.

THE DIVINE GLORY.—Encouraged by the condescending mercy of God, Moses ventured to request that he would "show him his glory," as a pledge of his special favour, and an earnest of the accomplishment of his promises. He seems to have meant something distinct from the external displays which he had witnessed, and of a more spiritual nature. Accordingly, the Lord promised to "cause all his goodness to pass before him;" that he might have a clear discovery of his holy perfections, which, though transient in itself, would leave a permanent impression on his mind. But not only must the Divine essence always continue invisible to our bodily eyes, but even the full discovery of the Divine glory to our souls, or such an external splendour as might be rendered visible, would overwhelm and dissolve the feeble frame of man in his present state. In this sense, it seems to have been, that the Lord said to Moses, "Thou canst not see my face; for there shall no man see my face and live." Yet, as far as mortal man could endure the sight, Moses should have his request granted. In some place near the spot where he was communing with God, he should stand upon a rock; (perhaps the rock in Horeb, whence the waters miraculously flowed,) and while the Lord passed by, in some most august display of his glory, he would put him in a clift of the rock, and "cover him with his hand," or shelter him by his power, or perhaps veil the glory by a cloud. But when the overwhelming splendour was past, he would remove his hand, that Moses might behold his glory; as if a man should see, not the countenance, but the back of some august personage who passed by him.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The Lord will show such tokens of his favour to his approved servants, as shall be evident to all their opposers; and in communion with himself will make them rich amends for all their troubles.—Whatever interest we have at a throne of grace, we should improve it in behalf of others; remembering that our God delights in and honours importunity; and we should take encouragement from success, to request still more and more.—If we have any useful knowledge of him, it arises from our having been first noticed by him with distinguished regard; and it will lead us to desire to know more of him, of his ways, and of his special grace, day by day. We shall, therefore, in every undertaking, and in all our removals, urgently desire to be under his guidance; earnestly pray, "that unless his presence go with us, he will not carry us up thence;" and be careful that covetousness, or conveniency, do not draw us from our proper place, or to a distance from his ordinances. Nor should we forget, that as the Lord's people are distinguished and separated by peculiar privileges from others, so they are called to separate themselves, that they may "be unto him a peculiar people, zealous of good works;" which is both the effect of Divine teaching, the evidence of Divine grace, the present rest of the soul, and the earnest of everlasting rest.—They who have been favoured with a glimpse of the Lord's glory and a taste of his goodness, will ardently desire more full discoveries and communications; and, as here "they see through a glass darkly," they will by that desire be gradually rendered willing to depart hence, that they 20 And he said, [y]Thou canst not see my face: for there shall no man see me, and live.

21 And the LORD said, Behold, there is a place by me, and thou shalt stand upon a rock.

22 And it shall come to pass, while my glory passeth by, that I will put thee [z]in a cleft of the rock: and will [a]cover thee with my hand[5] while I pass by.

23 And I will take away mine hand, and [b]thou shalt see my back parts: but my face shall not be seen.

CHAP. XXXIV.

The tables are renewed, 1. The Name of the LORD proclaimed, 5. God maketh a covenant with the Israelites, 10.

AND the LORD said unto Moses, [c]Hew thee two tables of stone like unto the first: and [b]I will write upon these tables [e]the words that were in the first tables, [d]which thou brakest.

2 And be ready in the morning,[1] and come up in the morning unto mount Sinai, and present thyself there to me, [e]in the top of the mount.

3 And no man shall [f]come up with thee, neither let any man be seen throughout all the mount: neither let the flocks nor herds feed before that mount.

4 ¶ And he hewed two tables of stone, like unto the first; and Moses rose up early in the morning, and went up unto mount Sinai, as the LORD had commanded him, and took in his hand the two tables of stone.

5 And the LORD [g]descended[2] in the cloud, and stood with him there, and proclaimed [h]the name of the LORD.

6 And the LORD [i]passed by before him, and [k]proclaimed, [l]The LORD, the LORD God, [m]merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and [n]abundant in goodness and [o]truth,

7 [p]Keeping mercy for thousands, [q]forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin, and that [r]will by no means clear the guilty; [s]visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children's children, unto the third and to the fourth generation.

8 ¶ And Moses made haste, and [t]bowed his head toward the earth, and worshipped.

9 And he said, [u]If now I have found grace in thy sight, O LORD, [x]let my Lord, I pray thee, go among us, (for it is [y]a stiff-necked people;) and [z]pardon our iniquity and our sin, and [a]take us for thine inheritance.

10 ¶ And he said, Behold, [b]I make a covenant; before all thy people I [c]will do marvels, such as have not been done in all the earth, nor in any nation; and all the people, among which thou art, shall see the work of the LORD: for it is [d]a terrible thing that I will do with thee.

11 ¶ [e]Observe thou that which I command thee this day: Behold, [f]I drive out before thee the Amorite, and the Canaanite, and the Hittite, and the Perizzite, and the Hivite, and the Jebusite.

12 [g]Take heed to thyself, lest thou make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land whither thou goest, [h]lest it be for a snare in the midst of thee.

13 But [i]ye shall destroy their altars, break their [*]images, and cut down their groves.

14 For thou shalt [k]worship no other god; for the LORD, [l]whose name is Jealous, is a [m]jealous God:

15 Lest thou [n]make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land, and they go a [o]whoring after their gods, and do sacrifice unto their gods, and one [p]call thee, and thou [q]eat of his sacrifice;

16 And [r]thou take of their daughters unto thy sons, and their daughters go a whoring after their gods, and make thy sons go a whoring after their gods.

17 Thou shalt make thee [s]no molten gods.

18 ¶ The [t]feast of unleavened bread shalt thou keep. Seven days thou shalt eat unleavened bread, as I commanded thee, in the time of the month Abib: for in the month Abib thou camest out from Egypt.

19 All that [u]openeth the matrix is mine, and every firstling among thy cattle, whether ox or sheep, that is male.

20 But [x]the firstling of an ass thou shalt redeem with a [†]lamb: and if thou redeem may "see him face to face." In the meantime they will thankfully, as sheltered in the rock of salvation from the consuming fire of his holiness and justice, contemplate his footsteps, and the discoveries made of his glorious perfections, in all his works, but especially in the work of redemption; and these views are peculiarly suited to humble them; to wean them from the world, and so eclipse all its vain splendour; and gradually to transform them into the image of Him, whom they thus contemplate by faith, through the teaching of his holy Spirit. If, then, he causes all his goodness to pass before us, and makes us acquainted with his NAME, as a God of grace and mercy; while we acknowledge our obligations to our heavenly Advocate, who by his prevailing intercession hath completely repaired the breach which sin hath made; we may well be willing to wait for further discoveries till we depart hence to be with him.—Finally, let not sinners forget, that "he, who is gracious to whom he will be gracious, and hath mercy on whom he will have mercy," hath also assured us, that "him, who cometh unto Him, he will in no wise cast out."—Scott.

CHAP. XXXIV. TABLES RENEWED.—Moses must prepare for the renewing of the tables, ver. 1; Before, God himself provided the tables, and wrote on them; now, Moses must "hew him out the tables," and God would only write upon them. Thus, in the first writing of the law upon the heart of man in innocency, both the tables and the writing were the work of God; but when those were broken and defaced by sin, and the divine law was to be preserved in the scriptures, God therein made use of the ministry of man, and Moses first. But the prophets and apostles did only "hew the tables," as it were; the writing was God's still; for "all scripture is given by inspiration of God." Observe, When God was reconciled to them, he ordered the tables to be renewed, and wrote his law in them; which plainly intimates to us, 1. That even under the gospel of peace and reconciliation by Christ, (of which the intercession of Moses was typical,) the moral law should continue to bind believers. Though Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law, yet not from the command of it, but still we are "under the law to Christ;" when our Saviour, in his sermon on the mount, expounded the moral law, and vindicated it from the corrupt glosses with which the Scribes and Pharisees had [illegible] it, Matt. v. 19, he did, in effect, renew the tables, and make them like the first, [illegible] to its primitive sense and intention.—Henry.

[illegible].—According to the promise made in the preceding chapter, the Lord [illegible] on the mount, and [illegible] proclaimed his NAME, or [illegible] his [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

him not, then shalt thou break his neck. All [y]the first-born of thy sons thou shalt redeem: and [z]none shall appear before me empty.

21 [a]Six days thou shalt work, but on the seventh day thou shalt rest: in [b]earing-time and in harvest thou shalt rest.

22 And thou shalt observe [c]the feast of weeks, of the first-fruits of wheat-harvest, and the feast of ingathering at the [‡]year's end.

23 [d]Thrice in the year shall all your men-children appear before the LORD God, [e]the God of Israel.

24 For [f]I will cast out the nations before thee, and [g]enlarge thy borders: neither shall any man [h]desire thy land, when thou shalt go up to appear before the LORD thy God, thrice in the year.[3]

25 Thou shalt not offer the blood of my sacrifice with [i]leaven, neither shall the sacrifice of the feast of the passover [k]be left unto the morning.

26 The [l]first of the first-fruits of thy land thou shalt bring unto the house of the LORD thy God. Thou shalt not [m]seethe a kid in his mother's milk.

27 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, [n]Write thou these words: for after the tenor of these words [o]I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel.

28 And he was there with the LORD [p]forty days and forty nights; he did neither eat bread, nor drink water: and [q]he wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant, the ten [§]commandments.

29 ¶ And it came to pass when Moses came down from mount Sinai with the [r]two tables of testimony in Moses' hand, when he came down from the mount, that Moses [s]wist not that [t]the skin of his face shone, while he talked with him.

30 And when Aaron and all the children of Israel saw Moses, behold, the skin of his face shone,[4] and they were [u]afraid to come nigh him.

31 And Moses [x]called unto them, and Aaron and all the rulers of the congregation returned unto him: [y]and Moses talked with them.

32 And afterward all the children of Israel came nigh: and he [z]gave them in commandment all that the LORD had spoken with him in mount Sinai.

33 And till Moses had done speaking with them, he put [a]a vail on his face.

34 But when Moses went in before the LORD to speak with him, [b]he took the vail off until he came out. And he came out, and spake unto the children of Israel that which he was commanded.

35 And the children of Israel [c]saw the face of Moses, that the skin of Moses' face shone: and Moses put the vail upon his face again until he went in to speak with him.

The sabbath, 2. The free gifts for the tabernacle, 4. The readiness of the people to offer, 20.

AND Moses gathered all the congregation of the children of Israel together, and said unto them, [a]These are the words which the LORD hath commanded, that ye should [b]do them.

2 ¶ [c]Six days shall work be done, but on the seventh day there shall be to you [d]an holy day, a sabbath of rest to the LORD:[1] [e]whosoever doeth work therein shall be put to death.

3 Ye shall [f]kindle no fire throughout your habitations upon the sabbath-day.

4 ¶ And Moses spake unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, saying, This is the thing which the LORD commanded, saying,

5 Take ye from among you an offering unto the LORD: [g]whosoever is of a willing heart, let him bring it, an offering of the LORD; gold, and silver, and brass,

6 And [h]blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen, and [i]goats' hair,

7 And rams' skins dyed red, and badgers' skins, and shittim-wood,

8 And [k]oil for the light, and [l]spices for anointing oil, and for the sweet incense,

9 And [l]onyx-stones, and stones to be set for the ephod, and for the breastplate.

10 And every [m]wise-hearted among you shall come, and make all that the LORD hath commanded:

11 The [n]tabernacle,[2] his tent,[3] and his covering,[4] his taches, and his boards, his bars, his pillars, and his sockets,

12 The [o]ark and the staves thereof, with the mercy-seat, and [p]the vail of the covering, shines, to appear luminous, thus, long contemplation of the divine glory caused an irradiation of the soul of Moses, which was miraculously represented to the people by this external brightness of his countenance; but he himself was not conscious of it. His countenance did not shine when he came down the first time from the mount: but he seems, during the second time, to have had far more clear discoveries of the glorious perfections of the Divine character, even of the goodness, mercy, righteousness, holiness, and truth of God, than before. Thus the Lord put honour upon him before the people, and made them stand in awe of him; so that, even Aaron did not venture to approach, till Moses called him, and the princes and people, to him. Yet, even then, the splendour of his face was too much for them to bear, and therefore he covered it with a vail when he spoke to them; which he took off when he appeared before the Lord, to inquire his will, and commune with him. Some think that this splendour continued as long as Moses lived; and others, that it ceased when the law had been fully given, and the worship of the tabernacle, under the conduct of Aaron, and his sons, was thoroughly established. The Latin translation of the Bible, called the Vulgate, which is exclusively sanctioned by the Church of Rome, understands the word translated shone, to mean horned: though it seems only to refer to the manner in which rays of light are reflected: and the apostle has fully confirmed the interpretation above given. Yet, on this slender ground, painters have almost universally proceeded in drawing Moses with something like horns on his head!—Scott. Moses put a "vail upon his face," when he perceived that it shone, ver. 33, 35. 1. This teaches us all a lesson of modesty and humility. We must be content to have our excellences obscured, and a vail drawn over them, not coveting to "make a fair show in the flesh." They that are truly desirous to be owned and accepted of God, will likewise desire not to be taken notice of or applauded by men, Qui benè latuit, benè vixit—There is a laudable concealment. 2. It teaches ministers to accommodate themselves to the capacities of the people, and to preach to them as they are able to bear it. Let all that art, and all that learning be veiled, which tend to amusement rather than edification; and let the strong condescend to the infirmities of the weak. 3. This vail signified the darkness of that dispensation; the ceremonial institutions had in them much of Christ and the grace of the gospel, but a vail was drawn over it, so that the children of Israel could not distinctly and "stedfastly see those good things to come, which the law had the shadow of." It was beauty veiled; gold in the mine; a pearl in the shell: but, thanks be to God, by the gospel life and immortality are brought to light, the vail is taken away from off the Old Testament; yet still it remains upon the hearts of those who shut their eyes against the light.—Henry.

CHAP. XXXV. SABBATH LAW.—"Six days shall work be done," work for the tabernacle, the work of the day was now to be done in its day; and they had little else to do here in the wilderness, where they had neither husbandry nor merchandise, neither food to get, nor clothes to make: "but on the seventh day" you must not strike a stroke, no, not at the tabernacle-work; the honour of the sabbath was above that of the sanctuary, more ancient, and more lasting; that must be to you a holy day, devoted to God, and not to be spent in common business, it is a sabbath of rest. It is a "sabbath of sabbaths," some read it; more honourable and excellent than any of the other feasts, and should survive them all. A "sabbath of sabbatism," so others read it, being typical of that sabbatism or rest, both spiritual and eternal, which "remains for the people of God," Heb. iv. 9. It is a sabbath of rest, that is, in which a rest from all worldly labour must be very carefully and strictly observed. It is a sabbath, and a little sabbath, so some of the Jews would have it read; not only observing the whole day as a sabbath, but an hour before the beginning of it, and an hour after the ending of it, which they throw in over and above out of their own time, and call a little sabbath, to show how glad they are of the approach of the sabbath, and how loath to part with it. It is a sabbath of rest, but it is rest to the Lord, to whose honour it must be devoted. A penalty is here annexed to the breach of it. "Whosoever doeth work therein shall be put to death;" and a particular prohibition of kindling fires on the sabbath-day for any servile work as smiths' work, or plumbers', &c.—Henry.

LIBERALITY.—When Moses had delivered his message to the people, they departed to their tents, to fetch their several oblations: and on this occasion a peculiar influence was felt, enlarging their hearts to liberality. Many of those, no doubt, who had offered towards the golden calf, were now willing to retrieve their character with Moses and their brethren, or to "bring forth fruits meet for repentance;" and such as had kept clear of that crime, were desirous of showing themselves more zealous for the worship of God, than the idolaters had been for their idol. Yet the language used seems to imply, that only some of the people were thus liberal; and that others did not offer at all, or less freely: no compulsion, however, or persuasion, was employed, but each was left to follow the dictates of his own mind. Nothing but ear-rings seem to have been given to make the golden calf; but various other golden ornaments were offered on this occasion, principally of the spoils of Egypt; both men and women being willing to part with their newly acquired adornings, to beautify the sanctuary of God. A rare example! But besides these articles of manufactured gold, some of the people presented such as was unwrought, and used as money; for, this is thought to be meant by the words rendered, "Every man that offered, offered an offering of gold unto the LORD."—When this obla-

The offerings delivered to the workmen, 1. The liberality of the people restrained, 5.

THEN wrought [a]Bezaleel and Aholiab, and every wise-hearted man, in whom the LORD put wisdom and understanding, to know how to work all manner of work [b]for the service of the sanctuary, according to all that the LORD had commanded.

2 And Moses called Bezaleel and Aholiab, and every wise-hearted man,[1] [c]in whose heart the LORD had put wisdom; even every one [d]whose heart stirred him up to come unto the work to do it.

3 And they received of Moses all [e]the offering which the children of Israel had brought for the work of the service of the sanctuary, to make it withal. And they brought yet unto him free-offerings every [f]morning.

4 ¶ And all the [g]wise men that wrought all the work of the sanctuary, came every man from his work which they made.

5 And they spake unto Moses, saying, The people bring [h]much more than enough for the service of the work which the LORD commanded to make.

6 And Moses gave commandment, and they caused it to be proclaimed throughout the camp, saying, Let neither man nor woman make any more work for the offering of the sanctuary. So the people were restrained from bringing.

7 For the stuff they had was sufficient for all the work to make it, and too much.[2]

8 ¶ And every [i]wise-hearted man among them that wrought the work of the tabernacle;[3] [k]made ten curtains of fine twined linen, and blue, and purple, and scarlet; with [l]cherubims of cunning work made he them.

9 The length of one curtain was twenty and eight cubits, and the breadth of one curtain four cubits; the curtains were all of one size.

10 And he [m]coupled the five curtains one unto another: and the other five curtains he coupled one unto another.

11 And he made loops of blue on the edge of one curtain, from the selvedge in the coupling: likewise he made in the uttermost side

FEMALE INDUSTRY.—"The women did spin with their hands;" some spun fine work, of blue and purple, others coarse work, of goats' hair, and yet theirs also is said to be done in wisdom, ver. 27. As it is not only rich gifts, so it is not only fine work, that God accepts. Notice is here taken of the good woman's work for God, as well as of Bezaleel's and Aholiab's. The meanest hand employed, the meanest service performed, for the honour of God, shall have an honourable recompense; Mary's anointing of Christ's head shall be told for a memorial, Matt. xxvi. 13, and a record is kept of the women that laboured in the gospel tabernacle, Phil. iv. 3, and were helpers to Paul in Christ Jesus, Rom. xvi. 3. It is part of the character of the virtuous woman, that she layeth "her hand to the spindle," Prov. xxxi. 19. This employment was here turned to a pious use, as it may be still (though we have no hangings to make for the tabernacle) by the imitation of the charity of Dorcas, who made coats and garments for poor widows, Acts ix. 39. Even those that are not in a capacity to give in charity, may yet work in charity; and thus the poor may relieve the poor, and those that have nothing but their limbs and senses may be very charitable in the labour of love.

ARTISTIC SKILL.—Here is the divine appointment of the master-workmen, that there might be no strife for the office, and that all who were employed in the work might take direction from, and give account to, these general inspectors; for God is the God of order, and not of confusion. Observe, 1. Those whom God called by name to this service, he "filled with the Spirit of God," to qualify them for it, ver. 30, 31. Skill in secular employments is God's gift, and "comes from above," Jam. i. 17. From him the faculty is, and the improvement of it. To his honour therefore all knowledge must be devoted, and we must study how to serve him with it. The work was extraordinary which Bezaleel was designed for, and therefore he was qualified in an extraordinary manner for it; thus, when the apostles were appointed to be master-builders in setting up the gospel-tabernacle, they were "filled with the Spirit of God in wisdom and understanding." 2. They were appointed, not only to devise, but to work, ver. 32, "to work all manner of work," ver. 35. Those of eminent gifts, that are capable of directing others, must not think that that will excuse them in idleness: many are ingenious enough in cutting out work for other people, and can tell what this man and that man should do, but the burthens they bring on others they themselves "will not touch with one of their fingers." These will fall under the character of slothful servants. 3. They were not only to devise and work themselves, but they were to teach others, ver. 34. Not only had Bezaleel power to command, but he was to take pains to instruct. Those that rule should teach: and those to whom God has given knowledge should be willing to communicate it for the benefit of others, not coveting to monopolize it.—Henry.

CHAP. XXXVI. LIBERALITY MORE THAN SUFFICIENT.—The people continued to bring "free offerings every morning," ver. 3. Note, We should always make it our morning's work to bring our offering unto the Lord; even the spiritual offerings of prayer and praise, and a broken heart surrendered entirely to God. This is that which the duty of every day requires. God's compassions are new every morning, and so should our offerings be, our free offerings: God's grace to us is free, and so must our duty to him be. Probably there were some that were backward at first to bring their offering, but their neighbours' forwardness stirred them up and ashamed them. The zeal of some provoked many. There are those who will be content to follow, who yet do not care for leading, in a good work. It is best to be forward, but better late than never. Or, perhaps some who had offered at first, having pleasure in reflecting upon it, offered more; so far were they from grudging what they had contributed, that they doubled their contribution. Thus, in charity, "give a portion to seven, and also to eight;" having given much, give more. Now observe, 1. The honesty of the workmen. When they had cut out their work, and found how their stuff held out, and that the people were still forward to bring in more, they went in a body to Moses to tell him that there needed no more contributions, ver. 4, 5. Had they sought their own things, they had now a fair opportunity of enriching themselves by the people's gifts: for they might have made up their work, and converted the overplus to their own use, as perquisites of their place. But they were men of integrity, that scorned to do so mean a thing as to sponge upon the people, and enrich themselves with that which was offered to the Lord. Those are the greatest cheats that cheat the public. If to murder many is worse than to murder one, by the same rule, to defraud communities, and to rob the church or state, is a much greater crime than to pick the pocket of a single person. But these workmen were not only ready to account for all they received, but were not willing to receive more than they had occasion for, lest they should come either into the temptation, or under the suspicion, of taking it to themselves. These were men that knew when they had enough. 2. The liberality of the people: though they saw what an abundance was contributed, yet they continued to offer, till they were forbidden by a proclamation, ver. 6, 7. A rare instance! Most need a spur to quicken their charity, few need a bridle to check it; yet these did. Had Moses aimed to enrich himself, he might have suffered them still to bring in their offerings; and, when the work was finished, might have taken the remainder to himself; but he also preferred the public before his own private interest, and was therein a good example to all in public trusts. It is said, ver. 6, "The people were restrained from bringing;" they looked upon it as a restraint upon them, not to be allowed to do more for the tabernacle; such was the zeal of those people who gave "to their power, yea, and beyond their power, praying" the collectors "with much entreaty to receive the gift," 2 Cor. viii. 3, 4. These were the fruits of a first love; in these last days charity is grown too cold for us to expect such things from it.

COMMENCEMENT OF THE WORK.—The first work they set about was the framing of the house; that must be done before the furniture of it was prepared. This house was not made of timber or stone, but of curtains curiously embroidered and coupled together. This served to typify the state of the church in this world, the palace of God's kingdom among men. 1. Though it is upon the earth, yet its foundation is not in the earth, as that of a house is; no, Christ's kingdom is not of this world, nor founded in it. 2. It is mean and mutable, and in a militant state; shepherds dwelt in tents, and God is the Shepherd of Israel; soldiers dwelt in tents, and the Lord is a man of war, and his church marches through an enemy's country, and must fight its way. The kings of the earth close themselves in cedar, (Jer. xxii. 15,) but the ark of God was lodged in curtains only. 3. Yet there is a beauty in holiness; the curtains were embroidered, so is the church adorned with the gifts and graces of the Spirit, that "raiment of needle work," Ps. xlv. 14. 4. The several societies of believers are united in one, and, as here, all "become one tabernacle; for there is one Lord, one faith, and one baptism."—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The promptitude and alacrity with which these builders set about their work, the exactness with which they performed it, and the disinterested fidelity with which they objected to the people's bringing any more contributions, are well worthy of our imitation. Thus should we serve God, yea, and our earthly superiors for his sake, in all things lawful; and thus should all who are employed in public trusts, abhor filthy lucre, be superior to covetousness, and avoid all occasions and temptations to it, or appearances of it; for, robbing the public is robbing many, which is worse than private theft: as murdering a multitude is worse than killing an individual.—Nor is the people's liberality less worthy of commendation: for, this proclamation to restrain their bounty was vastly more reputable for them, and honourable to God, than one would have been, which had required an addition to their too scanty contributions.—It should, however, be carefully observed, that though the rich can never devote their substance too entirely to the service of God, yet they may exceed in the particular application of it: and there have been ages of the church, and there may still be instances, in which an ill-judged liberality has introduced pride, indolence, and luxury, where there should be bright examples of humility, diligence, and self-denial. But this is not the general fault of the age in which we live: and though some few individuals may err on this side, yet the circumstances of too many, of every denomination, who labour in the word and doctrine, as well as the appearance of many places of worship, evidently prove that most men, in our days, are sufficiently careful not thus to injure the cause of godliness. Wisdom, however, is profitable to direct: and when God puts wisdom and grace into the heart, the hands will be diligently employed in every good work, or cheerfully stretched out to contribute to it.—Scott.

CHAP. XXXVII. RECORD OF THE WORK.—We are sure that Moses, when he wrote by divine inspiration, used no vain repetitions; there are no idle words in scripture. Why then are so many chapters taken up with this narrative, which we are tempted to think needless and tedious? But we must consider, 1. That Moses wrote primarily for the people of Israel, to whom it would be of great use to read and hear often of these divine treasures with which they were intrusted. These several ornaments wherewith the tabernacle was furnished, they were not permitted to see, but the priests only, and therefore it was requisite that they should be thus largely described particularly to them. That which they ought to read again and again, (lest they should fail of doing it,) is written again and again: thus many of the same passages of the history of Christ are in the New Testament related by two or three, and some by four, of the evangelists, for the same reason. The great things of God's law and gospel we need to have inculcated upon us again and again. To write the same, (says St. Paul,) to me "is not grievous, but for you it is safe," Phil. iii. 1. 2. Moses would thus show the great care which he and his workmen took, to make every thing exactly according to the pattern showed him in the mount. Having before given us the original, he here gives us the copy, that we may compare them, and observe how exactly they agree. Thus he appeals to every reader concerning his fidelity to him that appointed him, in all his house, and in all the particulars of it, Heb. iii. 5. And thus he teaches us to have respect to all God's commandments, even to every iota and tittle of them.

TABLE OF SHEW-BREAD.—God is a good Householder, that always keeps a plentiful table. Is the world his tabernacle? His providence in it spreads a table for all the creatures: he "provides for all flesh." Is the church his tabernacle? His grace in it spreads a table for all believers, furnished with the bread of life. But observe how much the dispensation of the gospel exceeds that of the law. Though here was a table furnished, it was only with shew-bread, bread to be looked upon, not to be fed upon, while it was on this table, and afterward only by the priests; but to the table which Christ has spread in the new covenant all real Christians are invited guests; and to 10 ¶ And he made [f]the table [4]of shittim-wood: two cubits was the length thereof, and a cubit the breadth thereof, and a cubit and a half the height thereof.

11 And he overlaid it with pure gold, and made thereunto a crown of gold round about.

12 Also he made thereunto a border of an hand-breadth round about; and made a crown of gold for the border thereof round about.

13 And he cast for it four rings of gold, and put the rings upon the four corners that were in the four feet thereof.

14 Over against the border were the rings, the places for the staves, to bear the table.

15 And he made the staves of shittim-wood, and overlaid them with gold, to bear the table.

16 And he made the vessels which were upon the table, his [5]dishes, and his spoons, and his bowls, and his covers to [‡]cover withal, of pure gold.

17 ¶ And he made [h]the candlestick[5] of pure gold: of beaten work[6] made he the candlestick; his shaft and his branch, his bowls, his knops, and his flowers, were of the same:

18 And six branches going out of the sides thereof; three branches of the candlestick out of the one side thereof, and three branches of the candlestick out of the other side thereof:

19 Three bowls made after the fashion of almonds in one branch, a knop and a flower; and three bowls made like almonds in another branch, a knop and a flower: so throughout the six branches going out of the candlestick.

20 And in the candlestick were four bowls made like almonds, his knops, and his flowers:

21 And a knop under two branches of the same, and a knop under two branches of the same, and a knop under two branches of the same, according to the six branches going out of it.

22 Their knops and their branches were of the same: all of it was one beaten work of pure gold.

23 And he made his [l]seven lamps, and his snuffers, and his snuff-dishes, of pure gold.

24 Of a talent of pure gold made he it, and all the vessels thereof.

25 ¶ And he made the [k]incense-altar[7] of shittim-wood: the length of it was a cubit, and the breadth of it a cubit (it was four-square,) and two cubits was the height of it; the horns thereof were of the same.

26 And he overlaid it with pure gold, both the top of it, and the sides thereof round about, and the horns of it: also he made unto it a crown of gold round about.

27 And he made two rings of gold for it under the crown thereof, by the two corners of it, upon the two sides thereof, to be places for the staves to bear it withal.

28 And he made the staves of shittim-wood, and overlaid them with gold.

29 And [l]he made the holy anointing oil, and the pure [m]incense of sweet spices, according to the work of [n]the apothecary.

The altar of burnt-offering, which is described in the beginning of the twenty-eighth chapter of Exodus, was placed toward the east end of the court, fronting the entrance of the tabernacle; and we must suppose, at such a convenient distance from it, that the smoke of the fire, which was constantly burning on the altar, might not sully that beautiful tent, its vail and curtains.—JENNINGS' JEW. [2] And it had four brass rings, through which two bars were put, by which it was carried upon the priests' shoulders. It is described with horns at the four corners; but what was the shape and use of these horns is not now known; perhaps they were for tying the victims, according to the allusion of the Psalmist, "bind the sacrifice with cords, even to the horns of the altar" (Psalm cxviii. 27). — JENNING'S JEW. them it is said, "Eat, O friends, come eat of my bread;" what the law gave but a sight of at a distance, the gospel gives the enjoyment of, and a hearty welcome to. 2. The making of the candlestick, which was not of wood overlaid with gold, but all beaten work of pure gold only, ver. 17, 22. This signified that light of divine revelation with which God's church upon earth (which is his tabernacle among men) has always been enlightened, being always supplied with fresh oil from Christ the great Olive, Zech. iv. 2, 3. God's manifestations of himself in this world are but candle-light, compared with the day-light of the future state. The Bible is a golden candlestick, it is of pure gold, Psal. xix. 10; from it light is diffused to every part of God's tabernacle, that by it his spiritual priests may see to minister unto the Lord, and to do the service of his sanctuary. This candlestick has not only its bowls for necessary use, but its knops and flowers for ornament; there are many things which God saw fit to beautify his word with, which we can no more give a reason for than for these knops and flowers, and yet we are sure that they were added for good purpose. Let us bless God for this candlestick, have an eye to it continually, and dread the removal of it out of its place.

GOLDEN ALTAR.—The golden altar, on which incense was to be burnt daily, signified both the prayers of saints, and the intercession of Christ, to which are owing the acceptableness of and success of those prayers. The rings and staves, and all the appurtenances of this altar, were overlaid with gold, as all the vessels of the table and candlestick were of pure gold, for these were used in the holy place. God is the Best, and we must serve him with the best we have; but the best we can serve him with, in his courts on earth, is but brass, compared with the gold, the sinless and spotless perfection, with which his saints shall serve him in his holy place above. 2. The preparing of the incense, which was to be burnt upon this altar, and with it the holy anointing oil, ver. 29, according to that dispensatory, chap. xxx. 22, &c. God taught Bezaleel this art also; so that though he was not before acquainted with it, yet he made up these things according to the work of the apothecary, as dexterously and exactly as if he had been bred up to the trade. Where God gives wisdom and grace, it will make the man of God "perfect, thoroughly furnished to every good work."—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—After what hath been already spoken, we need only observe, that such repetitions were particularly useful to the Israelites; for in these types they chiefly had their gospel, and they were not permitted to see the things themselves, as they were placed within the sanctuary.—The exactness of the workmen to their rule is worthy of our imitation: and it is never unseasonable to observe, that through the great antitype, the substance of all these shadows, our way being opened to the mercy-seat, we should continually draw near in faith; feeding daily upon him and his fulness, as the nourishment of our souls; walking through this dark world according to the light of his word; and seeking for renewed and enlarged anointings of his Holy Spirit; that here we may rejoice in him and glorify him, and at length be for ever with him in heaven.—Scott.

CHAP. XXXVIII. THE LAVER.—Moses made a laver, to hold water for the priests to wash in when they went in to minister, ver. 8. This signified the provision that is made in the gospel of Christ, for the cleansing of our souls from the mortal pollution of sin by the merit and grace of Christ, that we may be fit to serve the holy God in holy duties. This is here said to be made of the "looking-glasses" (or mirrors) of the women that assembled at the door of the tabernacle. 1. It should seem these women were eminent and exemplary for devotion, attending more frequently and seriously at the place of public worship than others did; and notice is here taken of it to their honour. Anna was such a one, long afterward, who "departed not from the temple, but served God with fastings and prayers night and day," Luke ii. 37. In every age of the church, there appear to have been some who have thus distinguished themselves by their serious zealous piety, and they have hereby dignified themselves; for devout women are really honourable women, (Acts xiii. 50,) and not the less so, for their being called, by the scoffers of the latter days, "silly women." Probably these women were such as showed their zeal upon this occasion, by assisting in the work that was now going on for the service of the tabernacle. They assembled by "troops," so the word is; a blessed sight! to see so many, and those so zealous, and so unanimous, in this good work. 2. These women parted with their looking-glasses (which were of the finest brass, burnished for that purpose) for the use of the tabernacle. Those women that admire their own beauty, are in love with their own shadow, and make the putting on of apparel their chief adorning, by which they value and recommend themselves, can but ill spare their looking-glasses, yet these women offered them to God: Either, (1.) In token of their repentance for their former abuse of them, to the support of their pride and vanity; now that they were convinced of their folly, and had devoted themselves to the service of God at the door of the tabernacle, they thus threw away that which, though lawful and useful in itself, yet had been an occasion of sin to them. Thus Mary Magdalene, who had been a sinner, when she became a penitent, wiped Christ's feet with her hair. Or, (2.) In token of their great zeal for the work of the tabernacle; rather than the workmen should want brass, or not have of the best, they would part with their looking-glasses, though they could not well be without them. God's service and glory must always be preferred by us before any satisfactions or accommodations of our own. Let us never complain of the want of that which we may honour God by parting with. 3. These looking-glasses were used for the making of the laver. Either they were artfully joined together, or else molten down and cast anew; but it is probable that the laver was so brightly burnished, that the sides of it still served for looking-glasses, that the priests, when they came to wash, might there see their faces, and so discover the spots, and wash them clean.

THE SACRED COURT.—The walls of the court, or churchyard, were like the rest, curtains or hangings, made according to the appointment, chap. xxvii. 9, &c. This represented the state of the Old Testament church; it was a garden enclosed: the worshippers were then confined to a little compass. But the enclosure being of curtains only, intimated that the confinement of the church to one particular nation was not to be perpetual. The dispensation itself was a tabernacle dispensation, moveable and mutable, and in due time to be taken down and folded up, when the place of the tent should be enlarged, and its cords lengthened, to make room for the Gentile world, as is foretold, Isa. liv. 2, 3. The church here on earth is but the court of God's house, and happy they who tread these courts, and flourish in them; but through these courts we are passing to the holy place above; "Blessed are they that dwell in that house" of God, they will be "still praising him." The enclosing of a court before the tabernacle, teaches us a gradual approach to God. The priests that ministered must pass through the holy court, before they entered the holy house. Thus, before solemn ordinances, there ought to be the separated and enclosed court of a solemn preparation, in which we must wash our hands, and so draw near with a true heart.

VALUATION OF THE WORK.—Ithamar the son of Aaron was appointed to draw up this account, who was thus by lesser services trained up and fitted for greater, ver. 21. Bezaleel and Aholiab must bring in the account, ver. 22, 23, and Ithamar must audit it, and give it in to Moses. And it was thus: 1. All the gold was a free-will offering; every man brought as he could and would, and it amounted to twenty-nine talents, and seven hundred and thirty shekels over, which some compute to be about one hundred and fifty thousand pounds worth of gold, according to the present value of it. Of this were made all the golden furniture and vessels. 2. The silver was levied by way of tax; every man was assessed half-a-shekel, a kind of poll-money; which amounted in the whole to a hundred talents, and one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five shekels over, ver. 25, 26. Of this they made the sockets, into which the boards of the tabernacle were let, and on which they rested; so that they were as the foundation of the tabernacle, ver. 27. The silver amounted to about thirty-four thousand pounds [illegible] money. The raising of the gold by voluntary contribution, and of the silver by [illegible] shows that either way may be taken for the defraying of public expenses; provided that nothing be done with partiality. 3. The brass, though less valuable, was of use not only for the brazen altar, but for the sockets of the court, which, probably, in other tents were of wood; but it is promised, Isa. lx. 17, "For wood I will bring brass." See how liberal the people were, and how faithful the workmen were; their good examples ought to be followed.—Henry.

CHAP. XXXIX. SACERDOTAL ROBES.—In this account of the making of the priests' garments, according to the instructions given, chap. xxviii. we may observe, 1. That the priests' garments are called here cloths of service, ver. 1. Note, Those that wear robes of honour must look upon them as cloths of service; for those upon whom honour is put, from them service is expected. It is said of those that are arrayed in white robes, that they "are before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple," Rev. vii. 13, 15. Holy garments were not made for men to sleep in, or to strut in, but to do service in; and then they are indeed for glory and beauty. The Son of man himself "came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." 2. That all the six paragraphs here, which give a distinct account of the making of these holy garments, conclude with those words, "as the Lord commanded Moses," ver. 5, 7, 21, 26, 29, 31. The like is not in any of the foregoing accounts, as if in these, more than any other of the appurtenances of the tabernacle, they had a particular regard to the divine appointment, both for warrant and for direction. It is an intimation to all the Lord's ministers, to make the word of God their rule in all their ministrations, and to act in observance of, and obedience to, the command of God. 3. That these garments, in conformity to the rest of the furniture of the tabernacle, were very rich and splendid; the church in its infancy was thus taught, thus pleased, with the rudiments of this world; but now under the gospel, which is the ministration of the Spirit, to affect and impose such pompous habits as the church of Rome does, under pretence of decency and instruction, is to betray "the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free," and to entangle the church again in the bondage of those carnal ordinances, which were imposed only till the time of reformation. 4. That they were all shadows of good things to come, but the substance is Christ, and the grace of the gospel; when therefore the substance is come, it is a just to be fond of the shadow. (1.) Christ is our great high priest; when he undertook the work of our redemption, he put on the cloths of service—he arrayed himself with the gifts and graces of the Spirit, which he received not by measure—clothed himself with [illegible] to go through with his undertaking [illegible] them on his shoulders, [illegible] and a jasper: they were inclosed in ouches of gold in their inclosings.

14 And the stones were according to the names of the children of Israel, twelve according to their names, like the engravings of a signet, every one with his name, according to the twelve tribes.

15 And they made upon the breastplate [k]chains at the ends, of wreathen work of pure gold.

16 And they made two ouches of gold, and two gold rings; and put the two rings in the two ends of the breastplate.[5]

17 And they put the two wreathen chains of gold in the two rings on the ends of the breastplate.

18 And the two ends of the two wreathen chains they fastened in the two ouches, and put them on the shoulder-pieces of the ephod, before it.

19 And they made two rings of gold, and put them on the two ends of the breastplate, upon the border of it which was on the side of the ephod inward.

20 And they made two other golden rings, and put them on the two sides of the ephod underneath, toward the forepart of it, over against the other coupling thereof, above the curious girdle of the ephod.

21 And they did bind the breastplate by his rings unto the rings of the ephod, with a lace of blue, that it might be above the curious girdle of the ephod, and that the breastplate might not be loosed from the ephod; as the LORD commanded Moses.

22 ¶ And he made [l]the robe of the ephod of woven work, all of blue.

23 And there was a hole in the midst of the robe, as the hole of an habergeon,[6] with a band round about the hole, that it should not rend.

24 And they made upon the hems of the robe pomegranates of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and twined linen.

25 And they made bells[7] of pure gold, and put the bells between the pomegranates, upon the hem of the robe, round about between the pomegranates;

26 A bell and a [m]pomegranate, a bell and a pomegranate, round about the [n]hem of the robe to minister in; as the LORD commanded Moses.

27 ¶ And they made [o]coats of fine linen, of woven work, for Aaron and for his sons.

28 And a mitre[8] of fine linen, and goodly bonnets of fine linen, and linen breeches of fine twined linen.

29 And a girdle of fine twined linen, and blue, and purple, and scarlet, of needlework; as the LORD commanded Moses.

30 ¶ And they made [p]the plate of the holy crown of pure gold, and wrote upon it a writing like to the engravings of a signet, [q]HOLINESS TO THE LORD.

31 And they tied unto it a lace of blue, to fasten it on high upon the mitre; as the LORD commanded Moses.

32 ¶ Thus was all the work [9]of the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation finished: and the children of Israel did [r]according to all that the LORD commanded Moses, so did they.

33 And they brought the tabernacle unto Moses, [s]the tent,[10] and all his furniture, his taches, his boards, his bars, and his pillars, and his sockets,

34 And the covering of rams' skins dyed red, and the covering of badgers' skins, and the vail of the covering,

35 The ark of the testimony, and the staves thereof, and the mercy-seat,

36 The table, and all the vessels thereof, and the shew-bread,

37 The pure candlestick, with the lamps thereof, even with the lamps to be set in order,[11] and all the vessels thereof, and the oil for light,

38 And the golden altar, and the anointing oil, and the [t]sweet incense, and the hanging for the tabernacle-door,

39 The brazen altar, and his grate of brass, his staves, and all his vessels, the laver, and his foot,

40 The hangings of the court, his pillars, and his sockets, and the hanging for the court-gate, his cords and his pins, and all the vessels of the service of the tabernacle, for the tent of the congregation,

41 The [u]clothes of service to do service in the holy place; and the holy garments for Aaron the priest, and his sons' garments, to minister in the priest's office.

42 According to all that the LORD commanded Moses, so the children of Israel made all the work.

43 And Moses [v]did look upon all the work, and, behold, they had done it as the LORD had commanded, even so had they done it: and Moses [x]blessed them.[12]

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 On the first day of [a]the first month[1] shalt thou set up the [b]tabernacle of the tent of the congregation:

3 And thou shalt put therein [c]the ark of the testimony, and cover the ark with the vail.[2]

[5] The breastplate was made of the same rich materials with the ephod, two spans long, and one broad; but, folding up double, it was a span square. The breastplate was fastened upon the ephod by rings of gold at the four corners, the two upper rings being hung upon or fastened to the shoulder-pieces with golden chains, and the two lower rings tied to the girdle of the ephod with blue strings or ribbons (Exod. xxviii. 22-28). The breastplate was adorned with four rows of jewels set in sockets of gold, three jewels in a row; that is, in three perpendicular rows, and four horizontal. Upon these jewels were graven the names of the twelve patriarchs, one name upon each jewel (Ex. xxviii. 17-21).—JENNINGS' JEWISH ANTIQUITIES.

[7] The object of these bells is not very clear: the reason given in ver. 35, "That his sound may be heard . . . that he die not," would seem to intimate that the sound of the bells was to be considered to harbinger his approach to the Sacred Presence; which, without such announcement, would be regarded as an unceremonious and disrespectful intrusion. The sound also intimated that he was clothed in his proper robes, to minister without which was death (ver. 43); and it might likewise serve to admonish the people of the sacred offices in which their priest was engaged. —CALMET'S DICT. them on the palms of his hands, and presented them in the breastplate of judgment unto his Father. And (lastly) he crowned himself with "holiness to the Lord," consecrating his whole undertaking to the honour of his Father's holiness; now consider how great this man is. (2.) True believers are spiritual priests. The clean linen with which all their cloths of service must be made, is "the righteousness of saints," Rev. xix. 8; and "Holiness to the Lord" must be so written upon their foreheads, that all who converse with them may see, and say, that they bear the image of God's holiness, and are devoted to the praise of it.

DILIGENCE IN BUSINESS.—Observe, 1. That the builders of the tabernacle made very good despatch. It was not much more than five months from the beginning to the finishing of it. Though there was a great deal of fine work about it, such as is usually the work of time, embroidering and engraving, not only in gold, but in precious stones, yet they went through with it in a little time. Church-work is usually slow work, but they made quick work of this, and yet did it with the greatest exactness imaginable. For, (1.) Many hands were employed, all unanimous, and not striving with each other. This expedited the business, and made it easy. (2.) The workmen were taught of God, and so were kept from making blunders, which would have retarded them. (3.) The people were hearty and zealous in the work, and impatient till it was finished. God had "prepared their hearts," and then "the thing was done suddenly," 2 Chron. xxix. 36. Resolution and industry, and a cheerful application of mind, will, by the grace of God, bring a great deal of good work to pass in a little time; less than one would expect. 2. That they punctually observed their orders, and did not in the least vary from them. They did it "according to all that the Lord commanded Moses," ver. 32, 42. Note, God's work must be done, in every thing, according to his own will. His institutions neither need nor admit men's inventions to make them either more beautiful, or more likely to answer the intention of them. "Add thou not unto his words;" God is pleased with willing worship, but not with will-worship. 3. That they brought all their work to Moses, and submitted it to his inspection and censure, ver. 38. He knew what he had ordered them to make; and now, the particulars were called over, and all produced, that Moses might see both that they had made all, omitting nothing, that they had made all according to the instructions given them, and that, if they had made a mistake in any thing, it might be forthwith rectified. Thus they showed respect to Moses, who was set over them in the Lord; not objecting that Moses did not understand such work, and therefore that there was no reason for submitting it to his judgment; No, that God, who gave them so much knowledge as to do the work, gave them also so much humility as to be willing to have it examined, and compared with the model. Moses was in authority, and they would pay a deference to his place; "The spirit of the prophets is subject to the prophets." And besides, though they knew how to do the work better than Moses, Moses had a better and more exact idea of the model than they had, and therefore they could not be well pleased with their own work, unless they had his approbation. Thus, in all the services of religion, we should "labour to be accepted of the Lord." 4. That Moses, upon search, found all done according to the rule, ver. 43. Moses, both for their satisfaction and for his own, did look upon all the work, piece by piece, and, behold, they had done it according to the pattern showed him, for the same Being that showed him the pattern guided their hand in the work. All the copies of God's grace exactly agree with the original of his counsels: what God works in us, and by us, is the fulfilling of the good pleasure of his own goodness; and when the mystery of God shall be finished, and all his performances come to be compared with his purposes, it will appear, that, behold, all is done according to the counsel of his own will, not one iota or tittle of which shall fall to the ground, or be varied from. 5. That Moses blessed them. (1.) He commended them, and signified his approbation of all they had done. He did not find fault where there was none, as some do, who think they disparage their own judgment, if they do not find something amiss in the best and most accomplished performance. In all this work it is probable there might have been found here and there a stitch amiss, and a stroke awry, which would have served for an over-curious and censorious critic to animadvert upon; but Moses was too candid to notice small faults, where there were no great ones. Note, All governors must be a praise to them that do well, as well as a terror to evil-doers. Why should any take a pride in being hard to be pleased? (2.) He not only praised them, but prayed for them. He blessed them as one having authority, for the less is blessed of the better.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—When unanimity, diligence, and zeal animate the hearts of numbers in a good cause, much may be done in a short time: and when the commandment of God is continually attended to, as the rule and standard of every service, the whole will be done well.—We ought indeed daily to prove our own work, to take the counsel and regard the judgment of others, to present all we do before the Lord, and beg to be shown how far he approves or disapproves it: but the grand trial of all our actions will be at the conclusion of them.—Scott.

CHAP. XL. ERECTION OF THE TABERNACLE.—God here directs Moses to set up the tabernacle, and the utensils of it in their places. Though the work of the tabernacle was finished, and every thing ready for rearing, and the people, no doubt, very desirous to see it up, yet Moses will not do till he has express orders for the doing of it. It is good to 30 ¶ And he set [f]the laver between the tent of the congregation and the altar, and put water there, to wash withal.

31 And Moses, and Aaron and his sons, [g]washed their hands and their feet thereat.

32 When they went into the tent of the congregation, and when they came near unto the altar, they washed; as the LORD commanded Moses.

33 ¶ And he reared up [h]the court round about the tabernacle and the altar, and set up the hanging of the court-gate. [i]So Moses finished the work.

34 ¶ Then [k]a cloud[10] covered the tent of the congregation, and the glory of the LORD filled the tabernacle.

35 And Moses [l]was not able to enter into the tent of the congregation, because the cloud abode thereon, and the glory of the LORD filled the tabernacle.

36 And [m]when the cloud was taken up from over the tabernacle, the children of Israel [‡]went onward in all their journeys:

37 But if the cloud were not taken up, then they journeyed not till the day that it was taken up.

38 For the cloud of the LORD was upon the tabernacle by day, and [n]fire was on it by night, in the sight of all the house of Israel, throughout all their journeys.

see God going before us in every step, Ps. xxxvii. 23. The time for doing this is fixed to "the first day of the first month," ver. 2, which wanted but fourteen days of a year since they came out of Egypt; and a good year's work there was done in it. Probably the work was made ready but just at the end of the year, so that the appointing of this day gave no delay, or next to none, to this good work. We must not put off any necessary duty, under pretence of waiting for some remarkable day, the present season is the most convenient; but the tabernacle happening to be set up "on the first day of the first month," intimates that it is good to begin the year with some good work. Let him that is the First have the first; and let the things of his kingdom be first sought. In Hezekiah's time we find they began to sanctify the temple "on the first day of the first month," 2 Chron. xxix. 17. The new moon (which, by their computation, was the first day of every month) was observed by them with some solemnity; and therefore this first new moon of the year was thus made remarkable. Note, When a new year begins, we should think of serving God more and better than we did the year before.

THE SHECHINAH.—The Shechinah made an awful and pompous entry into the tabernacle, through the outer part of which it passed into the most holy place, as the presence-chamber, and there seated itself between the cherubims. It was in light and fire, and (for aught we know) no otherwise, that the Shechinah made itself visible: for "God is Light: our God is a consuming Fire;" with these the tabernacle was now filled, yet, as before, the bush was not consumed, so, now, the curtains were not so much as singed by this fire; for to those that have received the anointing, the terrible majesty of God is not destroying. Yet so dazzling was the light, and so dreadful was the fire, that Moses was "not able to enter into the tent of the congregation," at the door of which he attended, till the splendour was a little abated, and the glory of the Lord retired within the vail, ver. 35. This shows how terrible the glory and majesty of God are, and how unable the greatest and best of men are to stand before him. The divine light and fire, let forth in their full strength, will overpower the strongest heads and the purest hearts. But what Moses could not do, in that "he was weak through the flesh," our Lord Jesus has done, whom God caused to draw near and approach, and who, as the Forerunner, "is for us entered," and has invited us to come boldly even to the mercy-seat. He was "able to enter into the holy place not made with hands," (Heb. ix. 24,) nay, he is himself the true Tabernacle, filled with the glory of God, (John i. 14,) even with the divine grace and truth prefigured by this fire and light. In him the Shechinah took up its rest for ever, for in him "dwells all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." Blessed be God for Jesus Christ.—Henry.

LESSONS.—In allusion to the special guidance of Israel, many pious persons use the expression, "moving of the cloud," as denoting the providential and gracious direction which God now affords his people: and doubtless it is very allowable thus to accommodate and apply these typical passages to our own circumstances, provided it be done with sobriety, judgment, and caution. But we should be careful not to introduce a new rule of duty; or give occasion to uncertainty, error, or enthusiasm, by a vague and indeterminate use of such allusions. We are not under the same evident infallible guidance that Israel was; the word of God soberly explained is our only, and our sufficient, rule of duty; and in understanding it, and in applying general precepts to particular circumstances, good counsel, fervent prayer, and a careful observance of providence should be employed. Some things are always our duty, when we have opportunity and ability; and these need no other direction: other things are lawful in themselves; but it may be doubtful, whether in our case and situation they are advisable; that is, whether they are likely, all things considered, to conduce to the glory of God and our own real good. When, after mature consultation and fervent prayer, such matters still remain doubtful; the events of providence, yea, perhaps a prevailing bias of mind, may be of some weight in the decision, especially in cases where self-denial must be exercised, and danger encountered. But, when any undertaking is evidently wrong, or plainly inexpedient, or unadvisable in the opinion of impartial judges; and yet the inclination leans that way; in this case that which men call the "moving of the cloud," or the opening of providence, is generally no more than a temptation of Satan. The suggestions of that enemy are often mistaken for divine impressions; and men fancy they are following the Lord, when they are gratifying their own wayward inclinations. Upon the whole, in all matters, let us refer "to the law and to the testimony." Plain precepts and maxims of wisdom are surer rules, than the most ingenious allusions: and the book of providence, as well as the supposed guidance of the Spirit, must be interpreted by, and brought to the test of, the plain rules of the written word, "which are the light of our feet, and the lantern of our paths." The several parts of divine revelation, the distinct offices of Jesus Christ, and the various graces of the Christian character, are never seen in their glory and beauty, till they are viewed as united in one harmonious whole; which whole the believer values, desires, and seeks to call his own.—The periodical return of the seasons should remind us of the duties to which we are called for God and our souls; and we may hope for a good year, month, week, or day, if we begin them with serious attention to the worship of God, and solemn dedication of ourselves to him. But, when we remember that within this very year which was entered upon in so promising a manner, the Lord was not well pleased with the most of the Israelites, and doomed their carcases to fall in the wilderness; we may justly fear, lest we should amuse and deceive ourselves with a

THE THIRD BOOK OF MOSES,

CALLED

LEVITICUS.

---

IN the Hebrew Bible, this book, like the preceding, is named from the first word, Vayikra: but, after the Greek translation, we call it Leviticus; because it records the solemn consecration of Aaron and his sons, of the tribe of Levi, to be the priests of the Lord, and the confirmation of the priesthood to their descendants in all subsequent ages, while that dispensation endured; and because directions for their various ministrations are here very particularly given—though many things respecting the separation of the rest of the tribe, and the services allotted to them, are recorded in the subsequent book. It contains little history, except the awful death of Nadab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, as soon as consecrated, for irreverence in their sacred office; and it principally consists of ritual laws, delivered to Moses from above the mercy-seat, during the first month after the Tabernacle was erected, though moral precepts are frequently interspersed. In these ceremonies the gospel was preached to Israel; and the solemn and exact manner, and the many repetitions with which they are enforced, are suited to impress the serious mind with a conviction that something vastly more important and spiritual than the external observances is couched under each of them. We are indeed thus taught, that all true religion must be grounded on Divine revelation, and be regulated by it, and not be left in any degree to human invention; yet one inspired apostle calls the legal institutions "beggarly elements," and "the law of a carnal commandment;" and another allows that they formed "a yoke which neither they nor their fathers were able to bear." But if we look carefully into the New Testament, we shall be convinced that these ordinances, which to numbers appear so unmeaning and unreasonable, were not only "shadows of good things to come," but real prophecies; which being exactly accomplished in the gospel, prove the book in which they are found to be divinely inspired. There are also other prophecies contained in it, which corroborate this conclusion. It is not known how far the Israelites observed the singular law concerning the sabbatical year, and that of Jubilee, which, it is evident, were very frequently neglected; but no impostor would have ventured to enact such statutes, much less to have committed himself by these words: "And if ye shall say, What shall we eat the seventh year? behold, we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase: then I will command my blessing upon you in the sixth year, and it shall bring forth fruit for three years. And ye shall sow the eighth year, and eat of old fruit until the ninth year; until her fruits come in ye shall eat of the old store" (xxv. 20-22). Yet we do not find in the whole history a single complaint that this extraordinary promise failed of an exact accomplishment. The twenty-sixth chapter likewise contains an evident prediction of the present state of the nation of Israel, which, amidst all its miseries, has hitherto been preserved a distinct people, apparently in order to the performance of the promises made them in the close of the chapter. It seems peculiarly useful, in this sceptical age, to introduce each book in the Sacred Volume by some notice of those prophecies found in it, which have received an evident accomplishment many ages after the time when we have full proof the books were extant—as this tends to establish, not only their authenticity, but also their Divine authority, far more than human testimony can do. In addition to this, we may observe, that the sacred writers, in all the subsequent parts of Scripture, and even our Lord, as well as his apostles, quote or refer to this book, in language which proves, both that it is the genuine work of Moses, and also that the statutes contained in it are the Word of God—the two points which many, called Christians, seem at present ready to concede to sceptics and infidels (2 Chr. xxx. 16; Ezra vii. 6, 12; Matt. viii. 4; Luke ii. 22-24; Rom. x. 4, 5. Comp. xxvi. 12 with 2 Cor. vi. 16; and xix. 18 with Gal. v. 14). Let us therefore adhere to the testimony of these unexceptionable witnesses, and study it as a part of "the oracles of God;" and very important instruction will be derived from it, even to us in this remote age, though we are no longer under the obligation of its ritual appointments.

The burnt-offerings, 1, of the herd, 3, of the flocks, 10, of the fowls, 14.

A. M. 2514.—B. C. 1490.

AND the LORD [a]called unto Moses, and spake unto him [b]out of the tabernacle of the congregation, saying,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, [c]If any man of you bring an offering[1] unto the LORD, ye[2] shall bring your offering of the cattle, even of the herd, and of the flock.

3 ¶ If his offering be [d]a burnt-sacrifice of the herd, let him offer [e]a male without blemish: he shall offer it of [f]his own voluntary will, [g]at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before the LORD.

4 And he shall [h]put his hand upon the head of the burnt-offering; and it shall [i]be accepted for him, to make [k]atonement for him.

5 And he shall [l]kill[3] the bullock before the LORD: and [m]the priests, Aaron's sons, shall bring the blood, and [n]sprinkle the blood round about upon the altar that is by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

6 And he shall [o]flay[4] the burnt-offering, and cut it into his pieces.

7 And the sons of Aaron the priest shall put [p]fire upon the altar, and [q]lay the wood in order upon the fire.

8 And the priests, Aaron's sons, shall [r]lay the parts, the head, and the fat, in order upon the wood that is on the fire which is upon the altar:

9 But his [s]inwards and his legs shall he wash in water: and the priest shall [t]burn all on the altar, to be a burnt-sacrifice, an offering made by fire, of a [u]sweet savour unto the LORD.

form of godliness: and the consideration how few of them entered Canaan, should warn young people not to postpone the care of their souls till they are settled in life, lest that should prove too late.—Scott.

CHAP. I. SACRIFICES.—The laws, recorded in the Book of Exodus, were delivered to the people, either immediately from Sinai, or to Moses on the top of that mountain; but after the sanctuary had been erected, the remaining part of the law was delivered to Moses by an audible voice from the Divine glory, which first filled the tabernacle, and then rested above the mercy-seat. When this glory filled the holy place, Moses was not able to enter; but the Lord called to him to draw nigh, and as he stood without he spake the laws to him.—The word rendered offering, (corban, Mark vii. 11,) signifies brought near, and, in general, means any oblation presented to God, and therefore the meat-offerings, regulated in the next chapter, were intended, as well as the burnt-offerings, &c. The sacrificing of innocent animals had been an institution of true religion from the fall of Adam; and thence by tradition it was derived into the various species of false religion, which prevailed in the world. Among the worshippers of the true God, no animals but those called clean, were offered, in most cases the head of the family, or the person presenting the sacrifice, officiated as priest. The blood of the animal was shed, and then the body was consumed by fire on an altar: or sometimes only a part of it; and then the remainder was feasted on by the person who sacrificed, along with his family and friends. But, under the Mosaic dispensation, very particular laws were given upon this subject; which were connected with the appointment of Aaron's family exclusively to the priesthood. In general, all the sacrifices in divers ways typified Christ; and also shadowed out the believer's duty, character, privilege, and communion with God: and indeed, if we except the divine person, the miracles, and the meritorious mediation of the Lord Jesus, there is scarcely any thing in the whole Scripture spoken of him, which is so appropriate, as not to have also a subordinate meaning that concerns his people: and therefore we need not hesitate to apply the same things both to Christ and Christians, in different respects.—Such animals only were allowed in sacrifice, as [illegible] useful and valuable to man, which [illegible] to possess as property, and the [illegible] which he promotes; and [illegible] these only which are most [illegible] for food: [illegible] the poor [illegible] patient ox; the gentle, harmless, and cleanly sheep; and the tender loving dove: for even the useful goat was sacrificed far less frequently, than sheep and oxen.—It is known that the heathens offered various animals, which were deemed unclean by the Israelites; especially swine and horses.—Scott.

MODE OF OFFERING.—1. The beast to be offered must be a "male," and "without blemish," and the best he had in his pasture; being designed purely for the honour of him that is infinitely perfect, it ought to be the most perfect in its kind. This signified the complete strength and purity that were in Christ, the "dying" Sacrifice, and the sincerity of heart and unblameableness of life that should be in Christians, who are presented to God as "living" sacrifices. But literally, in Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female; nor is any natural blemish in the body a bar to our acceptance with God, but only the moral defects and deformities introduced by sin into the soul. 2. The owner must offer it of "his voluntary will." What is done in religion, so as to please God, must be done by no other constraint than that of love. God accepts the willing people, and the cheerful giver. Ainsworth and others read it, not as the principle, but as the end, of offering; "Let him offer it 'for his favourable acceptation before the Lord.' Let him propose this to himself, as his end in bringing his sacrifice, and let his eye be fixed steadily upon that end—that he may be accepted of the Lord." Those only shall find acceptance who sincerely desire and design it in all their religious services, 2 Cor. v. 9. 3. It must be offered "at the door of the tabernacle," where the brazen altar of burnt-offerings stood which sanctified the gift, and not elsewhere; he must offer it "at the door," as one unworthy to enter, and acknowledging that there is no admission for a sinner into covenant and communion with God, but by sacrifice; but he must offer it at "the tabernacle of the congregation," in token of his communion with the whole church of Israel, even in this personal service. 4. The offerer must "put his hand upon the head of his offering," ver. 4. "He must put both his hands," say the Jewish doctors, "with all his might between the horns of the beast," signifying thereby, (1.) The transfer of all his right to, and interest in, the beast, to God; actually, and by a manual delivery, resigning it to his service. (2.) An acknowledgment that he deserved to die, and would have been willing to die, if God had required it, for the saving of his honour, and the obtaining of his favour. (3.) A dependence upon the sacrifice, as an instituted type of the great Sacrifice, on which the [illegible] of us all was to be laid. The [illegible] of the [illegible], and [illegible] this rite, some [illegible] the apostle [illegible] [illegible], which [illegible] Levites,

The meat-offering of flour with oil and incense, 1; and of the first-fruits in the ear, 12. The salt of the meat-offering, 13.

AND when any will offer a [g]meat-offering unto the LORD, his offering shall be of [h]fine flour; and he shall [i]pour oil[1] upon it, and put [k]frankincense thereon.

2 And he shall bring it to Aaron's sons, the priests: and he shall take thereout his handful of the flour thereof, and of the oil thereof, with all the frankincense thereof; and the priest shall burn [l]the memorial of it upon the altar, to be an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD.

3 And [m]the remnant of the meat-offering shall be Aaron's and his sons': it is a thing [n]most holy of the offerings of the LORD made by fire.

4 ¶ And if thou bring an oblation of a [o]meat-offering baken in the oven, it shall be [p]unleavened cakes of fine flour mingled with oil, or unleavened [q]wafers[2] anointed with oil.

5 ¶ And if thy oblation be a meat-offering baken *in a pan, it shall be of fine flour unleavened, mingled with oil.

6 Thou shalt [r]part it in pieces, and pour oil thereon, it is a meat-offering.

7 ¶ And if thy oblation be a meat-offering baken in the frying-pan, it shall be made [s]of fine flour with oil.

8 And thou shalt bring the meat-offering that is made of these things unto the LORD: and when it is presented unto the priest, he shall bring it unto the altar.

9 And the priest shall take from the meat-offering a memorial thereof, and shall burn it upon the altar: it is [t]an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD.

10 And [u]that which is left of the meat-offering shall be Aaron's and his sons': it is a thing most holy of the offerings of the LORD made by fire.

11 No meat-offering, which ye shall bring unto the LORD, shall be made with leaven:[3] for ye shall burn [v]no leaven, nor any [w]honey,[4] in any offering of the LORD made by fire.

12 ¶ As for [x]the oblation of the first-fruits, ye shall offer them unto the LORD: but they shall not be [†]burnt on the altar for a sweet savour.

13 And every oblation of thy meat-offering shalt thou season [z]with salt;[5] neither shalt thou suffer [a]the salt of the covenant of thy God to be lacking from thy meat-offering: with all thine offerings thou shalt offer salt.

14 ¶ And if thou offer [b]a meat-offering of thy first-fruits unto the LORD, thou shalt offer, for the meat-offering of thy first-fruits, green ears of corn dried by the fire, even [c]corn beaten out of full ears.

15 And thou shalt [d]put oil upon it, and lay frankincense thereon: it is a meat-offering.

16 And the priest shall burn [e]the memorial of it, part of the beaten corn thereof, and part of the oil thereof, with all the frankincense thereof: it is an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

his honour. This signified that our Lord Jesus was to make his soul, or life, an offering for sin. Messiah the Prince must be cut off as a sacrifice, "but not for himself," Dan. ix. 26. 6. The priests were to "sprinkle the blood upon the altar," ver. 5, for the blood being the life, that was it that made atonement for the soul. This signified the direct and actual regard which our Lord Jesus had to the satisfaction of his Father's justice, and the securing of his injured honour, in the shedding of his blood; "he offered himself without spot to god." 7. The beast was to be flayed and decently cut up, and divided into its several joints or pieces, according to the art of the butcher; and then all the pieces, with the head and the fat, (the legs and inwards being first washed,) were to be burnt together upon the altar, ver 6—9. "'But to what purpose,'" would some say, "'was this waste?" Why should all this good meat, which might have been 'given to the poor,' and have served their hungry families for food a great while, be burnt together to ashes?" So was the will of God, and it is not for us to object or find fault with it. Lastly, This is said to be "an offering of a sweet savour," or "savour of rest, unto the Lord." The burning of flesh is unsavoury in itself; but this, as an act of obedience to a divine command, and a type of Christ, was well-pleasing to God; he was reconciled to the offerer, and did himself take a complacency in that reconciliation. He rested, and was refreshed with these institutions of his grace, as, at first, with his works of creation, Exod. xxxi. 17, rejoicing therein, Ps. civ. 41. Christ's offering of himself to God is said to be of "a sweet smelling savour," Eph. v. 2; and the spiritual sacrifices of Christians are said to be "acceptable to God, through Christ," 1 Pet. ii. 5.—Henry.

CHAP. II. MEAT-OFFERING.—The laws of the meat-offering were these; 1. The ingredients must always be fine flour and oil, two staple commodities of the land of Canaan, Deut. viii. 8. Oil was to them then in their food, what butter is now to us. If it was undressed, the oil must be poured upon the flour, ver. 1; if cooked, it must be mingled with the flour, ver. 4, &c. 2. If it was flour unbaked, beside the oil, it must have frankincense put upon it, which was to be burned with it, ver. 1, 2, for the perfuming of the altar; in allusion to which gospel ministers are said to be "a sweet savour unto God," 2 Cor. ii. 15. 3. If it was prepared, they might do it various ways, either bake it or fry it, or mix the flour and oil upon a plate; for the doing of each of which, conveniences were provided about the tabernacle. The law was very exact even about those offerings that were least costly; to intimate the cognizance God takes of the religious services performed with a devout mind, even by the poor of his people. 4. It was to be presented by the offerer to the priest, which is called "bringing it to the Lord," ver. 8, for the priests were God's receivers, and were ordained to other gifts. 5. Part of it was to be burnt upon the altar, for a memorial, that is, in token of their mindfulness of God's bounty to them, in giving them all things richly to enjoy. It was "an offering made by fire," ver. 2, 9. The consuming of it by fire might remind them that they deserved to have all the fruits of the earth thus burnt up, and that it was of the Lord's mercies that they were not. They might also learn, that as "meats are for the belly, and the belly for meats, so God shall destroy both it and them," 1 Cor. vi. 13, and that "man lives not by bread alone." This offering made by fire is here said to be "of a sweet savour unto the Lord;" and so are our spiritual offerings, which are made by the fire of holy love, particularly that of almsgiving, which is said to be "an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well-pleasing to God," Phil. iv. 18, and Heb. xiii. 16. "With such sacrifices God is well-pleased." 6. The remainder of the meat-offerings was to be given to the priests, ver. 3, 10. "It is a thing most holy," not to be eaten by the offerers, as the peace-offerings, (which, though holy, were not most holy,) but by the priests only and their families. Thus God provided that they who served at the altar, should live upon the altar, and live comfortably.—Henry.

SALT OF THE COVENANT.—Covenants were generally ratified at an amicable feast, in which salt was always used; hence, it became an emblem of friendship. Many scriptures represent reconciliation to God, and communion with him, as a feast to which the Lord invites us, and at which he ratifies his covenant with us. Salt is an emblem of incorruption; and while this use of it intimated the perpetuity, yea, eternity, of the covenant made with believers; it also represented the grace of the Holy Spirit, by which their services and worship are acceptable to God through Jesus Christ, and their example and conversation useful and edifying to mankind; in counteracting the effects of human depravity, and communicating a savour of piety around them.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—There is that excellency in Christ, and in his mediatory work, that no types and shadows, however varied and multiplied, can adequately represent: and our dependence on him is so entire, that we must never lose sight of it in any thing we do. Even our sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving, our works of mercy, charity, and righteousness, yea, every good work, must spring from his grace, and from love to him; ascend, as it were, with his sacrifice from the altar of burnt-offering, and be presented through his intercession; that "whatsoever we do in word and in deed, we may do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God, and the Father by him."—Scott.

[2] It was to be carried, skin and all, without being dissected, out of the camp, and there to be burnt in a fire on the ground. This was to signify that the offerer was in a perfect state of guilt, unfit to communicate with God; and that, like the offering itself, he deserved to be excluded from the society of his people, till he was reconciled by this sacrifice made in his stead; and thus Christ, who was made a sin-offering for us, suffered "without the camp," that is, "without the gate" of Jerusalem, of whose expiation for us this offering was a type and figure (Heb. xiii. 11, 12).—PYLE.

kinds of prosperity and comfort; and the language may imply, that, through the typical priesthood and atoning sacrifices, Israel would enjoy all blessings, in the favour of God dwelling among them upon a mercy-seat, while they adhered to his worship and service. —The burnt-offerings were wholly consumed on the altar; the priests had a part of the meat-offering; but the peace-offering was divided between the altar, the priests, and the offerer, and formed a kind of feast, in which the Lord, and his priests and people, met together.—Either male or female, of the herd or flock, if without blemish, might be offered in these sacrifices, both being good for food: but pigeons or turtle-doves are not mentioned; for, the division of such small creatures into the proper proportions would have been inconvenient.—The peace-offerings seem to have especially represented the application of the redemption of Christ to the heart and conscience; the communications of peace and comfort through him; and the sweet communion which his reconciled people hold with him, and with each other, in his ordinances; while "his flesh is meat indeed, and his blood is drink indeed" to their souls; and while they are enabled to exercise faith in his atonement, love and gratitude to him, and love to each other for his sake, with enlarged hearts rejoicing in each other's comfort, and communicating to one another's necessities.—The peace-offerings might likewise intimate, that all the blessings which sinners enjoy, come through the sacrifice of Christ; and that the greatest sweetness even of temporal mercies arises from receiving them, as the fruit of his atonement and the pledges of his love; and sharing them with his people. They were voluntary oblations, either in the performance of a vow, in acknowledgment of mercies received, in seeking some special blessing from God, or in expressing love to his worship, his priests, and people.—Scott.

BLOOD AND FAT FORBIDDEN.—A general rule laid down, that "all the fat is the Lord's," ver. 16, and a law made thereupon, that they "should eat neither fat nor blood," no, not in their private houses, ver. 17. 1. As for the fat, it is not meant of that which is interlarded with the meat, that they might eat, (Neh. viii. 10;) but the fat of the inwards, the suet, which was always God's part out of the sacrificed beasts; and therefore they must not eat of it, no, not out of the beasts that they killed for their common use. Thus would God preserve the honour of that which was sacred to himself. They must not only not feed upon that very fat which was to be the food of the altar, but not upon any like it, lest the "table of the Lord," (as the altar is called,) if something were not reserved peculiar to it, should become contemptible, and "the fruit thereof, even its meat, contemptible," Mal. i. 7, 12. 2. The blood was universally forbidden likewise, for the same reason that the fat was, because it was God's part of every sacrifice. The heathen drank the blood of their sacrifices; hence we read of their "drink-offerings of blood," Ps. xvi. 4. But God would not permit the blood that made atonement to be used as a common thing, Heb. x. 29.—Henry.

CHAP. IV. SIN-OFFERING FOR A PRIEST.—"If a soul sin." That is, "if any person sin." The soul is indeed the agent, the body only the instrument in committing sin: it must, however be allowed, that this exact precision is not observed in the language of the Scriptures.—The "sin-offering" seems to have been appointed for such violations of express prohibition, when ignorantly and heedlessly fallen into, (especially in those things which more immediately related to the worship of God,) as, if committed presumptuously, were punishable with death. "The priest that is anointed," is generally supposed to mean the high priest, who was most solemnly anointed: and, as he was the typical mediator between God and the people, and their appointed representative, the whole nation was more immediately concerned in his transgression, than in that of the other priests; who, (if not here included,) were under the same law in this respect to the common Israelites. If the high priest were so ignorant of the divine law, as to violate some express precept unwittingly, he must be very criminally negligent, and would be likely to mislead the people also: his crime therefore was peculiarly heinous.—The same original word is rendered both sin, and sin-offering, Dan. ix. 24; and this remark may throw light on some passages in the New Testament, Rom. viii. 3; 2 Cor. v. 21. The high priest himself, if he were exclusively meant in this law, was required to kill the sin offering, and to perform the several ceremonies here instituted. This might tend to awaken his conscience the more to a sense of his guilt. Laying his hand on the head of the innocent animal, as confessing his sin, and transferring to it his guilt, or desert of death; then shedding its blood, and witnessing its dying agonies; and afterwards sprinkling the atoning blood seven times before the vail, and applying it to the horns of the golden altar, evinced that this offence, though committed ignorantly, had polluted all his services; nor could any thing which he did be profitable, either to himself or the people, except it were expiated by the blood of the sin-offering. The seven-fold sprinkling, which was only used in extraordinary cases, showed the difficulty of atoning for his heinous crime.

SIN-OFFERING FOR THE CONGREGATION.—The sin of the whole congregation required the same expiation, as that of the high priest. By a criminal oversight or misconstruction of the law, it might happen that some prohibition of the ceremonial institutions should be generally violated, and thus become the sin of the nation at large; even when the worship at the sanctuary was regularly maintained, and idolatry carefully shunned: and in this case, when the error was discovered, the national sin-offering was appointed. —The elders, (who are distinguished from the congregation,) were directed to lay their hands on this sacrifice, as confessing their sin and the sin of the people, and typically laying the guilt upon the animal; not only as the representatives of the nation, but also as the principals in the crime, who had misled the people. It is not said, who should slay the sacrifice; but probably this was done by one of the elders, or perhaps of the priests, as the part of the high priest is separately mentioned. The other ceremonies exactly accord with those of the high priest's sin-offering.—Scott.

[10] It should be well remembered, that none of these sacrifices had in themselves any value sufficient to clear the sinner, and procure his forgiveness from God; they were only, by the mercy of God, instituted and accepted as a sign of the offender's repentance, and designed as figurative representations of a more full and perfect expiation to be hereafter made by Christ the Messiah, for the sins of mankind.—PYLE.

SIN-OFFERING FOR THE RULER.—Observe here, 1. That God takes notice of, and is displeased with, the sins of rulers. They who have power to call others to account, are themselves accountable to the Ruler of rulers, for, as high as they are, there is a higher than they. This intimated, in that here only the commandment transgressed is said to be the "commandment of the Lord his God," ver. 22. He is a prince to others, but let him know the Lord is a God to him. 2. The sin of the ruler, which he committed through ignorance, is supposed afterward to come to his knowledge, (ver. 23,) which must be either by the check of his own conscience, or by the reproof of his friends, both which we should all, even the best and greatest, not only submit to, but be thankful for. What we have done amiss, we should be very desirous to come to the knowledge of. "That which I see not, teach thou me, and show me wherein I have erred," are prayers we should put up to God every day; that though through ignorance we fall into sin, we may not through ignorance lie still in it. 3. The sin-offering for a ruler was to be "a kid of the goats;" not a bullock, as for the priest, and the whole congregation; nor was the blood of his sin-offering to be brought into the tabernacle, as of the other two, but it was all bestowed upon the brazen altar, ver. 25; nor was the flesh of it to be burnt, as that of the other two, without the camp; which intimated that the sin of a ruler, though worse than that of a common person, yet was not so heinous, nor of such pernicious consequence, as the sin of the high priest, or of the whole congregation. A kid of the goats was sufficient to be offered for a ruler, but a bullock for a tribe; to intimate that the ruler, though major singulis—greater than each, was minor universis—less than the whole. It is bad when great men give ill examples, but worse when all men follow them. 4. It is promised that the atonement shall be accepted, and the sin forgiven, ver. 26, to wit, if he repent and reform; for otherwise, God sware concerning Eli, a judge in Israel, that the iniquity of his house should not be purged with sacrifice nor offering for ever, 1 Sam. iii. 14.

SIN-OFFERING FOR AN INDIVIDUAL.—Here is the law of the sin-offering for a common person, which differs from that for a ruler only in this, that a private person might bring either a kid or a lamb, a ruler only a kid; and that for a ruler must be a male, for the other a female: in all the circumstances of the management of the offering they agreed. Observe, 1. The case supposed, "If any one of the common people sin through ignorance," ver. 27. The prophet supposes that they were not so likely as the great men to "know the way of the Lord, and the judgment of their God," Jer. v. 4, and yet, if they sin through ignorance, they must bring a sin-offering. Note, Even sins of ignorance need to be atoned for by sacrifice. To be able to plead, when we are charged with sin, that we did it ignorantly, and through the surprise of temptation, will not bring us off, if we be not interested in that great plea, "Christ hath died," and entitled to the benefit of that. We have all need to pray, with David, (and he was a ruler,) to be cleansed from "secret faults," the errors which we ourselves do not understand, or are not aware of, Ps. xix. 12. 2. That the sins of ignorance committed by a single person, a common, obscure person, did require a sacrifice; for, as the greatest are not above the censure, so the meanest are not below the cognizance of the divine justice. None of the common people, if offenders, were overlooked in a crowd. 3. That a sin-offering was not admitted only, but accepted, even from one of the common people, and an atonement made by it, ver. 31, 35. Here rich and poor, prince and peasant, meet together; they are both alike welcome to Christ, and to an interest in his sacrifice, upon the same terms. See Job xxxiv. 19. From all these laws concerning the sin-offerings, we may learn, (1.) To hate sin, and to watch against it. This is certainly a very bad thing, to make atonement for which so many innocent and useful creatures must be slain and mangled thus. (2.) To value Christ, the great and true sin-offering, whose blood cleanses from all sin, which it was not possible that the "blood of bulls and of goats should take away. Now if any man sin, Christ is the propitiation," 1 John ii. 1, 2, not for Jews only, but for Gentiles. And perhaps there was some allusion to this law concerning sacrifices for sins of ignorance, in that prayer of Christ's, just when he was offering up himself a sacrifice,—"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."—Henry.

CHAP. V. TRESPASS-OFFERING.—The difference between the sin-offering for the high priest, or the whole congregation, and that for the ruler, or a common Israelite, was briefly noted in the former chapter; and the distinction between the latter sin-offering and the trespass-offering, should here be clearly and precisely stated. But few things have more perplexed commentators: and the discordant, and even opposite, sentiments of the most learned and laborious critics, yield little satisfaction, at least to the author's mind.—It is evident on the one hand that the two words, translated sin-offering, and trespass-offering, are often used for each other, as the attentive reader even of the translation may observe; yet, on the other hand, the marginal references show, that these are frequently mentioned as distinct kinds of sacrifice; and indeed the blood of the sin-and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, then he shall be guilty in one of these.

5 And it shall be, when he shall be guilty in one of these things, that he shall [t]confess that he hath sinned in that thing.

6 And he shall bring his [k]trespass-offering unto the LORD for his sin which he hath sinned, [l]a female from the flock, a lamb or a kid of the goats, for a sin-offering: and [m]the priest shall make an atonement for him concerning his sin.

7 And [n]if *he be not able to bring a lamb, then he shall bring for his trespass which he hath committed, [o]two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, unto the LORD; [p]one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering.

8 And he shall bring them unto the priest, who shall offer that which is for the sin-offering first, and [q]wring off his head from his neck, but shall not divide it asunder.

9 And he shall [r]sprinkle of the blood of the sin-offering upon the side of the altar; and the [s]rest of the blood shall be wrung out at the bottom of the altar: it is a sin-offering.

10 And he shall offer the second for a burnt-offering, according to the [t]manner: and the priest [u]shall make an atonement for him, for his sin which he hath sinned, and it shall be forgiven him.

11 ¶ But [v]if he be not able to bring two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, then he that sinned shall bring for his offering [x]the tenth part of an ephah[2] of [y]fine flour for a sin-offering; he shall put [z]no oil upon it, neither shall he put any frankincense[3] thereon: [a]for it is a sin-offering.

12 Then shall he bring it to the priest, and the priest shall take his handful of it, even [b]a memorial thereof, and burn it on the altar, [c]according to the offerings made by fire unto the LORD: it is a sin-offering.

13 And [d]the priest shall make an atonement for him, as touching his sin that he hath sinned in one of these, and it shall be forgiven him; and the remnant [e]shall be the priest's, as a meat-offering.

14 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

15 If [f]a soul commit a trespass, and sin through ignorance, [g]in the holy things of the LORD; then he shall bring for his trespass, unto the LORD, [h]a ram without blemish out of the flocks, with [i]thy estimation by shekels of silver,[4] after [k]the shekel of the sanctuary, for a trespass-offering.

16 And he shall [l]make amends for the harm that he hath done in the holy thing, and shall add [m]the fifth part thereto, and give it unto the priest: [n]and the priest shall make an atonement for him with the ram of the trespass-offering,[5] and it shall be forgiven him.

17 ¶ And if [o]a soul sin, and commit any of these things which are forbidden to be done by the commandments of the LORD; [p]though he wist it not, yet is he guilty, [q]and shall bear his iniquity.

18 And he [r]shall bring a ram without blemish out of the flock, with thy estimation, [s]for a trespass-offering unto the priest: and [t]the priest shall make an atonement for him concerning his ignorance wherein he erred, and wist it not; and it shall be forgiven him.

19 It is a trespass-offering: he hath certainly [u]trespassed against the LORD.

The trespass-offering for sins done wittingly, 1. The offering at the consecration of a priest, 19.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 If a soul sin, and [a]commit a trespass against the LORD, and [b]lie unto his neighbour [c]in that which was delivered him to keep, or *in fellowship, or in a thing taken away by violence, or hath [d]deceived his neighbour;
3 Or [e]have found that which was lost, and lieth concerning it, and [f]sweareth falsely; in any of all these that a man doeth, sinning therein:
4 Then it shall be, [g]because he hath sinned and is guilty,[1] that he shall restore that [h]which he took violently away, or the thing which he hath deceitfully gotten, or that which was delivered him to keep, or the lost thing which he found,
5 Or all that about which he hath sworn falsely, he shall even [i]restore it in the principal, and shall add the fifth part more thereto, and give it unto him to whom it appertaineth, in the day [t]of his trespass-offering.
6 And he shall bring his trespass-offering unto the LORD, [k]a ram without blemish out of the flock, with thy estimation, for a trespass-offering unto the priest.
7 And the priest shall [l]make an atonement for him before the LORD: and it shall be forgiven him, for any thing of all that he hath done in trespassing therein.
8 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
9 Command Aaron and his sons, saying, This is the law of [m]the burnt-offering: it is the burnt-offering, [‡]because of [n]the burning upon the altar all night unto the morning, and the fire of the altar shall be burning in it.
10 And the priest shall put on his [o]linen garment, and his linen breeches shall he put upon his flesh and take up the ashes which offering was put on the horns of the altar, while that of the trespass-offering was sprinkled about the altar. (Ver. 9; chap. iv. 25, 30.) The word rendered "trespass-offering" signifies also trespass, (as that rendered "sin-offering" signifies also sin;) which is a strong proof that the guilt or liableness to punishment, was typically translated from the offender to the innocent animal that was to be sacrificed. The root whence it is derived signifies to be guilty, with reference either to actual criminality, or to the consciousness of that criminality; and the same word is used when the prophet says, "Thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin," or a trespass-offering, Isa. liii. 10. But this does not show the nature of the trespass-offering, or how it differed from the sin-offering.—In general, neither of them were voluntary oblations, as the peace-offerings, and many of the burnt-offerings were; but some of the sin-offerings were appointed at stated seasons, and others were required in particular cases, while all the trespass-offerings were occasional. The sin-offering seems to have been the expiation of offences committed, in matters of religion, from a mistake, or inadvertency respecting the law. But the trespass-offerings were required for the casual deviations from the ritual law, when known, through inattention or surprise; or for crimes committed against the moral precepts, which implied injustice to men. In short, all the cases, in which trespass-offerings were appointed, may be referred to the following heads: First, Transgressions of the ritual law, by oversight or surprise. When a man discovered his offence in this case, he was required to bring a trespass-offering, as guilty and needing an atonement and forgiveness from God, ver. 2, 3. The trespass-offering of the leper seems to have been of this nature; for amidst the various and exact rules laid down for his conduct, it could hardly be supposed that he had never once deviated from any of them, at least by oversight, chap. xiv. 12; and that required in a particular case of the Nazarite, was evidently of this kind, Numb. vi. 9—12. Secondly, Such as were appointed when a man had violated the moral law, in some particular, which was injurious to his neighbour; even if he had sinned wilfully and knowingly, provided some circumstances in the case exempted him from punishment by the magistrate. Thirdly, Such as were required, where an inadvertent infringement of a moral precept, of the first table, might also prove injurious to man. Lastly, Such as were appointed for trespasses inadvertently committed in holy things, which violated both the ritual and moral law, and were a robbery of God and an injustice to the priests, ver. 15—19; Mal. iii. 8, 9.—The burnt-offerings were typical atonements for sin in general, especially against the moral law; but these were superadded on particular occasions.

SINS OF IGNORANCE.—If upon recollection a man was led to suspect, that he had eaten, or otherwise used, some portion of that which was allotted to the priests, and which God had forbidden others to partake of; but yet he could not be certain, whether this had actually been the case, or not. This construction is gathered from the variety of terms used about it—"his ignorance wherein he erred, and wist, (or knew,) it not." It is therefore called the doubtful offering. Yet the man must consider himself as guilty, and burdened with the suspected iniquity; till he had brought his trespass-offering, and made restitution, according to the estimation of the priest, though without adding the fifth part. This would serve to render the people more circumspect in such things.—As the offences in these latter instances were more complicated, than in those of the former part of the chapter, a more valuable trespass-offering was required.—The last clause may be rendered a "trespass-offering certainly unto the LORD;" that is, by all means, in this doubtful case, let him take the surest course, and bring his trespass-offering to the Lord. —Scott.

CHAP. VI. DAILY BURNT-OFFERING.—In these verses we have the law of the burnt-offering, as far as it was the peculiar care of the priests. The daily sacrifice of a lamb, which was offered morning and evening for the whole congregation, is here chiefly referred to. 1. The priest must take care of the ashes of the burnt-offering, that they be decently disposed of, ver. 10, 11. He must clear the altar of them every morning, and put them on the east side of the altar, which was furthest from the sanctuary; this he must do in his linen garment, which he always wore when he did any service at the altar; and then he must shift himself, and put on other garments, either such as were his common wear, or (as some think) other priestly garments less honourable, and must "carry the ashes unto a clean place without the camp." Now, (1.) God would have this done, for the honour of his altar, and the sacrifices that were burnt upon it. Even the ashes of the sacrifice must be preserved, to testify the regard God had to it; by the burnt-offering he was honoured, and therefore thus it was honoured. And some think that this care, which was taken of the ashes of the sacrifice, typified the burial of our Saviour; his dead body (the ashes of his sacrifice) was carefully laid up in a garden, in a new sepulchre, which was a "clean place." It was also requisite that the altar should be kept as clean as might be, the fire upon it would burn the better; and it is decent in a house to have a clean fireside. (2.) God would have the priests themselves to keep it so, to teach them and us to stoop to the meanest services for the honour of God and of his altar. The priest himself must not only kindle the fire, but clean the hearth, and carry out the ashes. God's servants must think nothing below them but "always burning." This is much insisted on here, ver. 9, 12, and this express law is the fire hath [p]consumed, with the burnt-offering on the altar, and he shall put them [q]beside the altar.

11 And he shall [r]put off his garments, and put on other garments, and carry forth the ashes [s]without the camp unto a clean place.

12 And [t]the fire upon the altar shall be burning in it, it shall not be put out: and the priest shall [u]burn wood on it every morning, and lay the burnt-offering in order upon it, and he shall burn thereon the fat of the peace-offerings.

13 The fire shall ever[2] be burning upon the altar; it shall never go out.

14 ¶ And this is the law of [x]the meat-offering: the sons of Aaron shall offer it before the LORD, before the altar.

15 And he shall take of it his handful, of the flour of the meat-offering, and of the oil thereof, and all the frankincense which is upon the meat-offering, and shall burn it upon the altar, for a [y]sweet savour, even [z]the memorial of it unto the LORD.

16 And [a]the remainder thereof shall Aaron and his sons eat: with [b]unleavened bread [b]shall it be eaten in the holy place; in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation they shall eat it.

17 It shall not be [c]baken with leaven: I have given it unto them for their portion of my offerings made by fire: [d]it is most holy, as is the sin-offering, and as the trespass-offering.

18 [e]All the males among the children of Aaron shall eat of it: [f]it shall be a statute for ever in your generations concerning the offerings of the LORD made by fire; [g]every one that toucheth them shall be holy.

19 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

20 This is [h]the offering of Aaron, and of his sons, which they shall offer unto the LORD, in the day when he is anointed: [i]the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for [k]a meat-offering perpetual, half of it in the morning, and half thereof at night.

21 In [l]a pan it shall be made with oil, and when it is baken, thou shalt bring it in: and the baken pieces of the meat-offering shalt thou offer for a sweet savour unto the LORD.

22 And the priest of his sons, that [m]is anointed in his stead, shall offer it: it is a statute for ever unto the LORD, it shall be [n]wholly burnt.

23 For every meat-offering for the priest shall be wholly burnt; [o]it[3] shall not be eaten.

24 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

25 Speak unto Aaron and to his sons, saying, This is [p]the law of the sin-offering: [q]in the place where the burnt-offering is killed, shall the sin-offering be killed before the LORD; [r]it is most holy.

26 The [s]priest that offereth it for sin shall eat it: in the holy place shall it be eaten, [t]in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation.

27 Whatsoever shall [u]touch the flesh thereof shall be holy: and when there is sprinkled of the blood thereof upon any garment, thou shalt [x]wash that whereon it was sprinkled in the holy place.

28 But [y]the earthen vessel wherein it is sodden shall be broken: and if it be sodden in a brazen[4] pot, it shall be both scoured, and rinsed in water.

29 All [z]the males among the priests shall eat thereof: it is most holy.

30 And [a]no sin-offering, whereof any of the blood is brought into the tabernacle of the congregation, to reconcile withal in the holy place, shall be eaten: it shall be burnt in the fire.

CHAP. VII.

The law of the trespass-offering, 1, and of the peace-offerings, 11. The fat, 22, and the blood are forbidden, 26.

LIKEWISE this is [a]the law of the trespass-offering: [b]it is most holy.

2 In [c]the place where they kill the burnt-offering shall they kill the trespass-offering: and [d]the blood thereof shall he sprinkle round about upon the altar.

3 And he shall offer of it [e]all the fat thereof; the rump, and the fat that covereth the inwards,

4 And the two kidneys, and the fat that is on them, which is by the flanks, and the caul that is above the liver, with the kidneys, it shall he take away.

5 And the priest shall [f]burn them upon the altar, for an offering made by fire unto the LORD: it is a trespass-offering.

6 Every [g]man among the priests shall eat thereof; it shall be eaten in the holy place: it is most holy.

7 As the sin-offering is, so is [h]the trespass-offering: there is one law for them: the priest that maketh atonement therewith shall have it.

8 And the priest that offereth any man's burnt-offering, even the priest shall have to himself [1]the skin[1] of the burnt-offering which he hath offered.

9 And all [k]the meat-offering that is baken in the oven, and all that is dressed in the frying-pan, and [*]in the pan, [l]shall be the priest's that offereth it.

10 And every meat-offering mingled with oil, and dry,[2] shall all the sons of Aaron have, [m]one as much as another.

[2] It can admit of little doubt, that the perpetual sacred fires of the heathens, whether Persians, Greeks, Romans, Indians, &c., were copied from this Divine original amongst the Jews. The antiquity of sacred fires among the Greeks and Romans is well known. Theophrastus informs us, that this rite of burning perpetual fire to the gods had formed a part of their worship from time immemorial, being used as an expressive symbol or figure of their immortality. The sacred fire among the Persians was viewed with such superstitious regard, that if ever it were extinguished they would only rekindle it by fire lighted up from the sun.—BIBLIOTH. BIBL.

given, ver. 13, "The fire shall ever be burning upon the altar, it shall never go out." We may suppose that no day passed without some extraordinary sacrifices, which were always offered between the morning and evening lamb; so that from morning to night the fire on the altar was kept of course. But to preserve it "all night unto the morning," ver. 9, required some care. Those that keep good houses, never let their kitchen fire go out; therefore God would thus give an instance of his good housekeeping. The first fire upon the altar came "from heaven," chap. ix. 24, so that by keeping that up continually with constant supply of fuel, all their sacrifices throughout all their generations might be said to be consumed with that fire from heaven, in token of God's acceptance. If, through carelessness, they should ever let it go out, they could not expect to have it so kindled again. Accordingly, the Jews tell us, that the fire never did go out upon the altar, till the captivity in Babylon. This is referred to, Isa. xxxi. 9, where God is said "to have his fire in Zion, and his furnace in Jerusalem." By this law we are taught to keep up in our minds a constant disposition to all acts of piety and devotion, and habitual affection to divine things, so as to be always ready to every good word and work. We must not only not "quench the Spirit," but we must "stir up the gift" that is in us. Though we be not always sacrificing, yet we must keep the fire of holy love always burning; and thus we must pray always.—Henry.

OFFERING OF AARON AND HIS SONS.—This oblation seems to have been required of the high priest alone, "from the day in which he was anointed," every morning and evening as long as he continued in that office; and then in like manner of his successor: for, "by the sons of Aaron" may be understood, his descendants and successors in the high priesthood, in their generations. Perhaps, the words "anointed in his stead," may signify, not only the person who succeeded to the high priesthood, when the high priest died, but also, the next in succession, as anointed to officiate in his stead, while living, should any thing incapacitate him.—The whole of this meat-offering, when duly prepared, was consumed on the altar, probably being laid upon the daily burnt-offering by the priest who officiated: and, neither of this prescribed oblation, nor of the voluntary meat-offerings of the priests, must any part be eaten; but the whole must be dedicated to the Lord.—The priests typically bore and expiated the sins of the people, but they could not actually atone for them: they therefore in respect of their own sacrifices, and some others, ate no part, but burnt the whole; which was a typical translation of the guilt from themselves and the people to Christ and his sacrifice, who actually bore and expiated them.—Scott.

LAW OF MEAT-OFFERING.—1. It must be "eaten unleavened," ver. 16. What was offered to God must have no leaven in it, and the priests must have it as the altar had it, and no otherwise. Thus must we keep the feasts of the Lord with the "unleavened bread of sincerity and truth." 2. It must be eaten in "the court of the tabernacle," (here called the "holy place,") in some room prepared by the side of the court for this purpose. It was a great crime to carry any of it out of the court. The very eating of it was a sacred rite by which they were to honour God; and therefore it must be done in a religious manner, and with a holy reverence, which was preserved by confining it to the holy place. 3. The males only must eat of it, ver. 18. Of the lesser holy things, as the first-fruits and tithes, and the shoulder and breasts of the peace-offerings, the "daughters" of the priests might eat, for they might be carried out of the court; but this was of the most holy things, which being to be eaten only in the tabernacle, the "sons" of Aaron only might eat of it. 4. The priests only, that were clean, might eat of it; "Every one that toucheth them shall be holy," ver. 18. Holy things for holy persons.—Henry.

CHAP. VII. SACRIFICIAL REGULATIONS.—Observe here, 1. Concerning the trespass-offering; that being much of the same nature with the sin-offering, it was to be governed by the same rules, ver. 6. When the blood and fat were offered to God to make atonement, the priests were to eat the flesh, as that of the sin-offering, in the holy place. The Jews have a tradition (as we have it from the learned Bishop Patrick) concerning the sprinkling of the blood of the trespass-offering "round about upon the altar," "That there was a scarlet line which went round about the altar exactly in the middle, and the blood of the burnt-offerings was sprinkled round about above the line, but that of the trespass-offerings and peace-offerings round about below the line." As to the flesh of the trespass-offering, the right to it belonged to the priest that offered it, ver. 7. He that did the work must have the wages; this was an encouragement to the priests to give diligent attendance on the altar; the more ready and busy they were, the more they got. Note, The more diligent we are in the services of religion, the more we shall reap of the advantages of it. But any of the priests, and the males of their families, might be invited by him to whom it belonged to partake with him, ver. 6. "Every male among the priests shall eat thereof," that is, may eat thereof, "in the holy place." And, no doubt, it was the usage to treat one another with those perquisites of their office, by which friendship and fellowship were kept up among the priests. Freely they had received, and must freely give. It seems the offerer was not himself to have any share of his trespass-offering, as he was to have of his peace-offering; but it was all divided between the altar and the priest. They offered peace-offerings in thankfulness for mercy, and then it was proper to feast; but they offered trespass-offerings in sorrow for sin, and 11 ¶ And this is the law of [n]the sacrifice of peace-offerings, which he shall offer unto the LORD.

12 If he offer it for a [o]thanksgiving, then he shall offer with the sacrifice of thanksgiving unleavened cakes mingled with oil, and [p]unleavened wafers anointed with oil, and cakes mingled with oil, of fine flour, fried.

13 Besides the cakes, he shall offer for his offering [q]leavened bread, with the sacrifice of thanksgiving of his peace-offerings.

14 And of it he shall offer one out of the whole oblation, for [r]an heave-offering unto the LORD, and it shall be [s]the priest's that sprinkleth the blood of the peace-offerings.

15 And the flesh of the sacrifice of his peace-offerings for thanksgiving shall [t]be eaten the same day that it is offered: he shall not leave[3] any of it until the morning.

16 But if the sacrifice of his offering [u]be a vow, or [x]a voluntary offering, it shall be eaten the same day that he offereth his sacrifice: and on the morrow [y]also the remainder of it shall be eaten.

17 But the remainder of the flesh of the sacrifice [z]on the third day shall be [a]burnt with fire.

18 And if any of the flesh of the sacrifice of his peace-offerings be eaten at all on the third day, [b]it shall not be accepted, neither shall it [c]be imputed unto him that offereth it: it shall be [d]an abomination, and the soul that eateth of it shall [e]bear[4] his iniquity.

19 And the flesh that [f]toucheth any unclean thing shall not be eaten, it shall be burnt with fire: and as for the flesh, all that be clean shall eat thereof.

20 But the soul that eateth of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace-offerings, that pertain unto the LORD, [g]having his uncleanness upon him, even that soul shall be cut off from his people.

21 Moreover, the soul that shall touch any unclean thing, as [h]the uncleanness of man, or any [i]unclean beast, or any [k]abominable unclean thing, and eat of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace-offerings which pertain unto the LORD, even that soul shall be [l]cut off from his people.

22 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

23 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, Ye shall eat no manner of [m]fat,[5] of ox, or of sheep, or of goat.

24 And the fat of the [†]beast that dieth of itself, and the fat of that which is torn with beasts, may be used in any other use: but ye shall in no wise eat of it.

25 For whosoever eateth the fat of the [‡]beast, of which men offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD, even the soul that eateth it [n]shall be cut off from his people.

26 Moreover, [o]ye shall eat no manner of blood, whether it be of fowl or of beast, in any of your dwellings.

27 Whatsoever soul it be that eateth any manner of blood, even [p]that soul shall be cut off from his people.

28 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

29 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, [q]He that offereth the sacrifice of his peace-offerings unto the LORD shall bring his oblation unto the LORD of the sacrifice of his peace-offerings.

30 [r]His own hands shall bring the offerings of the LORD made by fire; the fat with the breast, it shall he bring, that [s]the breast may be waved for a wave-offering before the LORD.

31 And the priest shall burn the fat upon the altar: but [t]the breast shall be Aaron's and his sons'.[6]

32 And [u]the right shoulder shall ye give unto the priest for an heave-offering, of the sacrifices of your peace-offerings.

33 He among the sons of Aaron [x]that offereth the blood of the peace-offerings, and the fat, shall have the right shoulder for his part.

34 For [y]the wave-breast and the heave-shoulder have I taken of the children of Israel, from off the sacrifices of their peace-offerings, and have given them unto Aaron the priest, and unto his sons, [z]by a statute for ever, from among the children of Israel.

35 ¶ This is the portion[7] [a]of the anointing of Aaron, and of the anointing of his sons, out of the offerings of the LORD made by fire, in the day when [b]he presented them, to minister unto the LORD in the priest's office;

36 Which the LORD commanded to be given them of the children of Israel, in the day that he anointed them, by a statute for ever, throughout their generations.

37 This is [c]the law of the burnt-offering, [d]of the meat-offering, [e]and of the sin-offering, [f]and of the trespass-offering, and [g]of the consecrations, and [h]of the sacrifice of the peace-offerings;

38 Which the LORD commanded Moses in mount Sinai, in the day that he [i]commanded the children of Israel to offer their oblations unto the LORD, in the wilderness of Sinai.

then fasting was more proper, in token of holy mourning, and a resolution to abstain from sin. 2. Concerning the burnt-offering; it is here appointed that the priest that offered it should have the skin, ver. 8, which, no doubt, he might make money of. "This" (the Jews say) "is meant only for the burnt-offerings which were offered by particular persons; for the profit of the skins of the daily burnt-offerings for the congregation went to the repair of the sanctuary." Some suggest, that this appointment will help us to understand God's clothing our first parents with "coats of skins," Gen. iii. 21. It is probable that the beasts whose skins they were, were offered in sacrifice as whole burnt-offerings, and that Adam was the priest that offered them; and then God gave him the skins, as his fee, to make clothes of for himself and his wife, in remembrance of which, the skins ever after pertained to the priest; and see Gen. xxvii. 16. 3. Concerning the meat-offering: if it was dressed, it was fit to be eaten immediately; and therefore the priest that offered it was to have it, ver. 9. If it was dry, there was not so much occasion for being in haste to use it; and therefore an equal dividend of it must be made among all the priests that were then in waiting, ver. 10.

SACRIFICIAL REGULATIONS CONTINUED.—The rites and ceremonies about the peace-offerings are again enlarged upon. 1. If it was offered for a thanksgiving, a meat-offering must be offered with it, cakes of several sorts, and wafers, ver. 12, and (which was peculiar to the peace-offerings) leavened bread must be offered, not to be burned upon the altar, that was forbidden, chap. ii. 11, but to be eaten with the flesh of the sacrifice, that nothing might be wanting to make it a complete and pleasant feast: for unleavened bread was less grateful to the taste; and therefore, though enjoined in the passover for a particular reason, yet in other festivals, leavened bread, which was lighter and more pleasant, was appointed, that men might feast at God's table as well as at their own. And some think that a meat-offering is required to be brought with every peace-offering, as well as with that of thanksgiving, by that law here, ver. 29, which requires an oblation with it, that the table might be as well furnished as the altar. 2. The flesh of the peace-offerings, both that which was the priest's share, and that which was the officer's, must be eaten quickly, and not kept long, either raw or dressed, cold. If it was a peace-offering for thanksgiving, it must be all eaten the same day, ver. 15; if a vow, or voluntary offering, it must be eaten either the same day or the day after, ver. 16. If any was left beyond the time limited, it was to be burnt, ver. 17; and if any person ate of it, it should be [illegible] upon as a very high misdemeanour, ver. 18. Though they were not obliged [illegible] the holy place as those offerings that are called most holy, but [illegible] there, yet God would by this law [illegible] and religiously to observe it: that whereas they might keep other meat cold in the house as long as they thought fit, and warm it again if they pleased, and eat it three or four days after, they might not do so with the flesh of their peace-offerings; that must be eaten immediately. (1.) Because God would not have that holy flesh to be in danger of putrefying, or being fly-blown; to prevent which, it must be salted with fire, (as the expression is, Mark ix. 49,) if it were kept; as, if it was used, it must be salted with salt. (2.) Because God would not have his people to be niggardly and sparing, and distrustful of providence, but cheerfully to enjoy what God gives them, (Eccl. viii. 15,) and to do good with it, and not to be anxiously solicitous for the morrow. (3.) The flesh of the peace-offerings was God's treat, and therefore God would have the disposal of it; and he orders it to be used generously for the entertainment of their friends, and charitably for the relief of the poor; to show that he is a bountiful Benefactor, "giving us all things richly to enjoy," the bread of the day in its day. If the sacrifice was a thanksgiving, they were especially obliged thus to testify their holy joy in God's goodness by their holy feasting. This law is made very strict, ver. 18, that if the offerer did not take care to have all his offering eaten by himself, or his family, his friends, or the poor, within the time limited by the law; and if, in the event of any part being left, he should burn it, (which was the most decent way of disposing of it, the sacrifices upon the altar being "consumed by fire,") then his offering should not be accepted, nor imputed to him. Note, All the benefit of our religious services is lost, if we do not improve them, and manage ourselves aright afterward. They are not acceptable to God, if they have not a due influence upon ourselves. If a man seemed generous in bringing a peace-offering, and yet afterward proved sneaking and paltry in the using of it, it was as if he had never brought it; nay, "it shall be an abomination." Note, There is no mean between God's acceptance and his abhorrence. If our persons and performances are sincere and upright, they are accepted; if not, they are an abomination, Prov. xv. 8. He that eats it after the time appointed, shall "bear his iniquity," that is, he shall be "cut off from his people," as it is explained, chap. xix. 8, where this law is repeated. This law of eating the peace-offerings before the third day, that they might not putrefy, is applicable to the resurrection of Christ after two days, that, being God's Holy One, he might not see corruption, Ps. xvi. 10. And some think that it instructs us speedily, and without delay, to partake of Christ and his grace; feeding and feasting thereupon by faith, to-day, "while it is called to-day," (Heb. iii. 13, 14,) for it will be too late shortly.—Henry.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 Take [a]Aaron and his sons with him, and [b]the garments, and the [c]anointing oil, and [d]a bullock for the sin-offering, and two rams, and a basket of unleavened bread;
3 And [e]gather thou all the congregation[1] together unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.
4 And Moses [f]did as the LORD commanded him; and the assembly was gathered together unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.
5 And Moses said unto the congregation, This is the thing which the LORD [g]commanded to be done.
6 And Moses brought Aaron and his sons, and [h]washed them with water.
7 And [i]he put upon him the coat, and girded him with the girdle, and clothed him with the robe, and put the ephod upon him, and he girded him with the curious girdle of the ephod, and bound it unto him therewith.
8 And he put [k]the breastplate upon him: also he put in the breastplate [l]the Urim and the Thummim.
9 And he put [m]the mitre upon his head; also upon the mitre, even upon his fore-front, did he put the golden plate, the holy crown; as the LORD commanded Moses.
10 And Moses took [n]the anointing oil, and anointed the tabernacle and all that was therein, and sanctified them.
11 And [o]he sprinkled thereof upon the altar seven times, and anointed the altar, and all his vessels, both the laver and his foot, to sanctify them.
12 And [p]he poured of the anointing oil upon Aaron's head, and anointed him to sanctify him.
13 And Moses [q]brought Aaron's sons, and put coats upon them, and girded them with girdles, and *put bonnets upon them; as the LORD commanded Moses.
14 ¶ And [r]he brought the bullock for the sin-offering: and Aaron and his sons [s]laid their hands upon the head of the bullock for the sin-offering.
15 And [t]he slew it, and [u]Moses took the blood, and put it upon the horns of the altar round about with his finger, and purified the altar; and poured the blood at the bottom of the altar, and sanctified it, [x]to make reconciliation upon it.
16 And he took [y]all the fat that was upon the inwards, and the caul above the liver, and the two kidneys, and their fat, and Moses burned it upon the altar.
17 But [z]the bullock and his hide, his flesh, and his dung, he burnt with fire without the camp; as the LORD commanded Moses.
18 ¶ And he brought [a]the ram for the burnt-offering: and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the ram.
19 And he[2] killed it, and Moses sprinkled the blood upon the altar round about.
20 And he cut the ram into pieces; and Moses burnt the head, and the pieces, and the fat.
21 And he washed the inwards and the legs in water; and Moses burnt the whole ram upon the altar: it was a burnt-sacrifice for [b]a sweet savour, and an offering made by fire unto the LORD; as the LORD commanded Moses.
22 ¶ And he brought the other ram, [c]the ram of consecration: and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the ram.
23 And he slew it, and Moses [d]took of the blood[3] of it, and put it upon the tip of Aaron's right ear, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot.
24 And he brought Aaron's sons, and Moses put of the blood upon the tip of their right ear, and upon the thumbs of their right hands, and upon the great toes of their right feet: and Moses sprinkled the blood upon the altar round about.
25 And he took [e]the fat, and the rump, and all the fat that was upon the inwards, and the caul above the liver, and the two kidneys, and their fat, and the right shoulder:
26 And out of the basket of unleavened bread, that was before the LORD, he took one unleavened cake, and a cake of oiled bread, and one wafer, and put them on the fat, and upon the right shoulder:
27 And he put all upon Aaron's hands, and upon his sons' hands, [f]and waved them for a wave-offering before the LORD.
28 And Moses took them from off their hands, and burnt them on the altar, upon the burnt-offering: [g]they were consecrations for a sweet savour: it is an offering made by fire unto the LORD.
29 And Moses took [h]the breast, and waved it for a wave-offering before the LORD: for of the ram of consecration it was Moses' part; as the LORD commanded Moses.
30 And Moses took of [i]the anointing oil, and of the blood which was upon the altar, and sprinkled it upon Aaron, and upon his garments, and upon his sons, and upon his sons' garments with him; and sanctified Aaron, and his garments, and his sons, and his sons' garments with him.
31 ¶ And Moses said unto Aaron, and to his sons, [k]Boil the flesh at the door[4] of the tabernacle of the congregation: and there [l]eat it with the bread that is in the basket of consecrations, as I commanded, saying, Aaron and his sons shall eat it.

to signify that they ought now to purify themselves from all sinful dispositions and inclinations, and ever after to keep themselves pure. Christ "washes those from their sins in his own blood," whom he makes to our God kings and priests, Rev. i. 5, 6; and those that draw near to God must be washed in "pure water," Heb. x. 22. Though they were ever so clean before, and no filth was to be seen upon them, yet they must be washed, to signify their purification from sin, with which their souls were polluted, how clean soever their bodies were. 2. They were clothed with the holy garments; Aaron with his, ver. 7—9, which typified the dignity of Christ, our great High Priest; and his sons with theirs, ver. 13, which typified the decency of Christians, who are spiritual priests. Christ wears the "breastplate of judgment," and the "holy crown;" for the church's High Priest is her Prophet and King. All believers are clothed with the robe of righteousness, and girt with the girdle of truth, resolution, and close application; and their heads are bound, as the word here is, with the bonnet or diadem of beauty, the beauty of holiness. 3. The high priest was anointed, and, it should seem, the holy things were anointed at the same time; some think that they were anointed before, but that it is mentioned here, because Aaron was anointed with the same oil that they were anointed with: but the manner of relating it here makes it more probable that it was done at the same time, and that the seven days employed in consecrating the altar were coincident with the seven days of the priests' consecration. The tabernacle, and all its utensils, had some of the anointing oil put upon them with Moses' finger, ver. 10, so had the altar, ver. 11; these were to sanctify the gold and the gift, (Matth. xxiii. 17—19,) and therefore must themselves be thus sanctified; but he poured it out more plentifully upon the head of Aaron, ver. 12, so that it ran down to the "skirts of his garments," because his unction was to typify the anointing of Christ with the Spirit, which was not given in measure to him. Yet all believers also have received the anointing, which puts an indelible character upon them, 1 John ii. 27.—Henry.

THE SACRIFICES OF CONSECRATION.—The sin-offering implied that Aaron and his sons deserved to have their blood shed; and, after death, to be made a sacrifice to the offended justice of God, instead of being able to bear, or atone for, the sins of the people, and being honoured as intercessors for them, and typical representatives of the Saviour. The burnt-offering denoted, that, being pardoned and accepted through the atonement of Christ, they willingly and thankfully dedicated themselves without reserve, to be consecrated unto God for this sacred ministry. The ram of consecration was their peace-offering; and represented that, as reconciled unto God, they had fellowship with him, and delighted in his service, and in being wholly employed in it; that he would accept and honour their services and ministrations; that they were thankful for past and present benefits, and confided in him for future sufficiency and acceptance. Accordingly, the several laws prescribed in the foregoing chapters were observed by Moses, the officiating priest; with only such additions and variations as had a peculiar reference to their entire separation to God for the work of the priesthood.—Scott.

SOLEMN INSTALMENT OF THE PRIESTHOOD.—Aaron and his sons must not stir out of the court of the tabernacle for seven days, ver. 33. The priesthood being a good warfare, they must thus learn to endure hardness, and to disentangle themselves from the affairs of this life, 2 Tim. ii. 3, 4. Being consecrated to their service, they must "give themselves wholly to it," and "attend continually to this very thing." Thus Christ's apostles were appointed to "wait for the promise of the Father," Acts i. 4. During this time appointed for their consecration, they were daily to repeat the same sacrifices which were offered the first day, ver. 34. This shows the imperfection of the legal sacrifices, which, because they could not take away sin, were often repeated, (Heb. x. 1, 2,) but were here repeated seven times, (a number of perfection,) because they typified that "one offering, which perfected for ever them that were sanctified." They attended to "keep the charge of the Lord;" we have every one of us a charge to keep, an eternal God to glorify, an immortal soul to provide for, needful duty to be done, our generation to serve; and it must be our daily care to keep this charge, for it is the charge of the Lord our Master, who will shortly call us to an account about it, and it is at our utmost peril if we neglect it. Keep it, "that ye die not;" it is death, eternal death, to betray the trust we are charged with; by the consideration of this, we must be kept in awe. Lastly, we are told, ver. 36, that "Aaron and his sons did all that was commanded." Thus their consecration was completed; and thus they set an example, before the people, of an exact obedience to the laws of sacrifices now newly given, and then they could with the better grace teach them.—Thus the "covenant of peace," Numb. xxv. 12, "of life and peace," Mal. ii. 5, was made with Aaron and his sons; but, after all the ceremonies that were used in their consecration, there was one point of ratification which was reserved to be the honour and establishment of Christ's priesthood, which was this, that they were "made priests without an oath, but Christ with an oath," Heb. vii. 21, for neither such priests nor their priesthood, could continue, but Christ's is a perpetual and unchangeable priesthood.—Gospel ministers are compared to them who served at the altar, for they "minister about holy things," 1 Cor. ix. 13; they are God's mouth to the people, and the people's to God, the pastors and teachers Christ has appointed to continue in the church to the end of the world: they seem to be meant in that promise which points at gospel-times, Isa. lxvi. 21—"I will take of them for priests and for Levites." No man may take this honour to himself, but he who upon trial is

AND it came to pass on [a]the eighth day, that Moses called Aaron and his sons, and the elders of Israel;

2 And he said unto Aaron, Take thee [b]a young calf for a sin-offering, and [c]a ram for a burnt-offering, without blemish, and offer them before the LORD.

3 And unto the children of Israel thou shalt speak, saying, [d]Take ye a kid of the goats for a sin-offering; and [e]a calf, and a lamb, [f]both of the first year, without blemish, for a burnt-offering;

4 Also [g]a bullock and a ram for peace-offerings, to sacrifice before the LORD; [h]and a meat-offering mingled with oil: for to-day the LORD will appear unto you.

5 ¶ And they brought that which Moses commanded, before the tabernacle of the congregation: [i]and all the congregation drew near, and stood before the LORD.

6 And Moses said, This is the thing which the LORD commanded that ye should do: and [k]the glory of the LORD shall appear unto you.[1]

7 And Moses said unto Aaron, Go unto the altar, and [l]offer thy sin-offering, and thy burnt-offering, and make an atonement for thyself, and for the people, and [m]offer the offering of the people, and make an atonement for them; as the LORD commanded.

8 ¶ Aaron therefore went unto the altar, [n]and slew the calf of the sin-offering, which was for himself.

9 And the sons of Aaron brought the blood unto him: and [o]he dipped his finger in the blood, and put it upon the horns of the altar, and poured out the blood at the bottom of the altar:

11 And [r]the flesh and the hide he burnt with fire, without the camp.

12 And he slew [s]the burnt-offering; and Aaron's sons presented unto him the blood, which he sprinkled round about upon the altar.

13 And they presented the burnt-offering unto him, with the pieces thereof, and the head: and he burnt them upon the altar.

14 And he did wash the inwards and the legs, and burnt them upon the burnt-offering on the altar.

15 ¶ And he brought the people's offering,[2] and took [t]the goat, which was the sin-offering for the people, and slew it, and offered it for sin, as the first.

CHAP. IX. AARON'S ENTRANCE UPON OFFICE.—On the 8th day, after the consecration of Aaron and his sons had begun, Aaron was directed to enter on his sacerdotal ministrations; but, though so many sin-offerings had been brought, and so many solemn rites of purification had been exactly observed, his first oblation must be another sin-offering for himself! As, however, no particular offence was to be expiated, but merely the defects of his preceding services, a calf of the first year, instead of a young bullock, was appointed. Some, however, think that he was thus reminded of his sin in making the golden calf. After offering this, and his own burnt-offering, the next sacrifice was a sin-offering for the people; not a young bullock, as required for any special transgression, but a kid of the goats, as on the great day of atonement. After the sin-offering and burnt-offering of the people had been sacrificed, peace-offerings were added, on which they might feast before God; but, as the priests would have a part of the oblations brought by the people, they presented no peace-offering. During the preceding days, there had been no peculiar discoveries of the Divine presence or glory; and the sacrifices seem to have been offered with common fire, as on former occasions: but now, in honour of Aaron's typical priesthood, and to sanction what had been done, the Lord intended to display his presence and glory, and the people must therefore prepare to meet him.

AARON'S BENEDICTION.—When Aaron had finished his sacred work at the altar, he blessed the people before he left the place; that is, he prayed for them, pronounced a blessing on them in the name of God, and encouraged their hopes of the Divine acceptance in their services. This seems to have been always considered as a part of his priestly office; and orders are afterwards given about it. He then came down, (for the altar seems to have been rather raised above the rest of the court,) and he entered into the tabernacle with Moses, who doubtless directed him how to perform the appointed services there, as he had before shown him to order the sacrifices at the altar. Then they [illegible] in again blessing the people; and, while thus employed, the Divine glory [illegible] descendant from the cloud, resting on the tabernacle, and probably filling it, [illegible] Lord's acceptance of it [illegible] dwelling-place in Israel.—Scott.

[illegible] LORD.—Whether [illegible] from heaven, or out of the most holy [illegible] which all the people saw, it [illegible] acceptance. (1.) It signified the turning away of God's wrath from them. God's wrath is a consuming fire; this fire might justly have fastened upon the people, and consumed them for their sins; but its fastening upon the sacrifice, and consuming that, signified God's acceptance of that, as an atonement for the sinner. (2.) It signified God's entering into covenant and communion with them: they ate their part of the sacrifice, and the fire of the Lord ate up his part: and thus he did, as it were, "sup with them, and they with him," Rev. iii. 20. 2. This fire did, as it were, take possession of the altar. The fire was thus kindled in God's house, which was to continue as long as the house stood, as we read before, chap. vi. 13. This also was a figure of good things to come: The Spirit descended upon the apostles in fire, Acts ii. 3, so ratifying their commission, as this spoken of here did the priests. Now from henceforward, (1.) All their sacrifices and incense must be offered with this fire. Note, Nothing goes to God but what comes from him. We must have grace, that holy fire, from the God of grace, else we cannot "serve him acceptably," Heb. xii. 28. (2.) The priests must keep it burning with a constant supply of fuel, and the fuel must be wood, the cleanest of fuel. Thus those to whom God has given grace, must take heed of quenching the Spirit.—Henry.

CHAP. X. STRANGE FIRE.—The golden calf had occasioned a lamentable delay in erecting the tabernacle: and now, the sin of Nadab and Abihu caused an awful interruption in the opening of the service. Next to Moses and Aaron, none stood higher, or were more likely to be honourable in Israel, than these two young men. Perhaps they were elated with this distinction, and were influenced by pride and ostentation; it is also probable they were in some measure heated with wine. Being fully consecrated, and considering the burning of incense as the most honourable part of their office, they were impatient to enter upon it; and at the season when the people were prostrated in adoration of the manifested presence and glory of God, they rashly and presumptuously, without orders, which they should have waited for, both at once, which was never practised, and with fire taken, not from the altar of burnt-offering, but probably from under the peace-offerings, attempted to enter the tabernacle to burn incense, though it was not the hour at which this service was appointed to be done. Perhaps they intended to place the censers on the golden altar. This conduct evidenced great irreverence, and might have been a very bad precedent to their brethren and successors; to prevent which, the Lord [illegible] to make them an example to the Old Testament church, at its first forming, [illegible] the fire from his presence to slay them suddenly, without consuming their [illegible] as [illegible] at the first estab[illegible] and put fire therein, and [c]put incense thereon, and offered [d]strange fire before the LORD, [e]which he commanded them not.

2 And there went out [f]fire from the LORD, and devoured them; and [g]they died before the LORD.

3 Then Moses said unto Aaron, This is it that the LORD spake, saying, [h]I will be sanctified in them that come nigh me, and [i]before all the people I will be glorified. And [k]Aaron held his peace.

4 And Moses called Mishael and Elzaphan, the sons of [l]Uzziel, the uncle of Aaron, and said unto them, Come near, [m]carry your brethren from before the sanctuary out of the camp.

5 So they went near, and carried them in their coats out of the camp; as Moses had said.

6 ¶ And Moses said unto Aaron, and unto Eleazar, and unto Ithamar his sons, [n]Uncover not your heads, neither rend your clothes; lest ye die, and lest [o]wrath come upon all the people: but let your brethren, the whole house of Israel, bewail the burning which the LORD hath kindled.

7 And [p]ye shall not go out from the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, lest ye die: for [q]the anointing oil of the LORD is upon you. And they did according to the word of Moses.

8 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Aaron, saying,

9 Do [r]not drink wine nor strong drink, thou, nor thy sons with thee, when ye go into the tabernacle of the congregation; lest ye die. [s]It shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations:

10 And that ye may [t]put difference between holy and unholy, and between unclean and clean:

11 And [u]that ye may teach the children of Israel all the statutes which the LORD hath spoken unto them by the hand of Moses.

12 ¶ And Moses spake unto Aaron, and unto Eleazar, and unto Ithamar, his sons that were left, [x]Take the meat-offering that remaineth of the offerings of the LORD made by fire, and eat it without leaven beside the altar: [y]for it is most holy.

13 And ye shall eat it in the holy place, because it is thy due and thy sons' due, of the sacrifices of the LORD made by fire: for so I am commanded.

14 And [z]the wave-breast and heave-shoulder shall ye eat in a clean place; thou, and thy sons, and thy daughters with thee: for they be thy due, and thy sons' due, which are given out of the sacrifices of peace-offerings of the children of Israel.

15 The heave-shoulder and the wave-breast shall they bring, with the offerings made by fire of the fat, to wave it for a wave-offering before the LORD; and it shall be thine, and thy sons' with thee, by a statute for ever; as the LORD hath commanded.

16 ¶ And Moses diligently sought [a]the goat of the sin-offering, and, behold, it was burnt: and he was [b]angry with Eleazar and Ithamar, the sons of Aaron which were left alive, saying,

17 Wherefore have ye not eaten the sin-offering in the holy place, seeing it is most holy, and God hath given it you [c]to bear the iniquity of the congregation,[1] to make atonement for them before the LORD?

18 Behold, [d]the blood of it was not brought in within the holy place: ye should indeed have eaten it in the holy place, [e]as I commanded.

19 And Aaron said unto Moses, Behold, [f]this day have they offered their sin-offering, and their burnt-offering, before the LORD; and such things have befallen me: and if I had eaten the sin-offering to-day, [g]should it have been accepted in the sight of the LORD?

20 And when Moses heard that, [h]he was content.

CONDIGN PUNISHMENT.—Aaron's sons died. Might it not have sufficed if they had been only struck with a leprosy, as Uzziah, or struck dumb, as Zechariah, and both by the altar of incense? No; they were both struck dead. The wages of this sin was death. 1. They died suddenly, in the very act of their sin, and had not time so much as to cry, "Lord have mercy upon us!" Though God is long suffering to us-ward, yet sometimes he makes quick work with sinners; sentence is executed speedily: presumptuous sinners bring upon themselves a swift destruction, and are justly denied even space to repent. 2. They died "before the Lord," that is, before the vail that covered the mercy-seat; for even mercy itself will not suffer its own glory to be affronted. They that sinned before the Lord, died before him. Damned sinners are said to be tormented "in the presence of the Lamb," intimating that he does not interpose in their behalf, Rev. xiv. 10. 3. They died by fire, as by fire they sinned. They slighted the fire that came from before the Lord to consume the sacrifices, and thought other fire would do every jot as well; and now God justly made them feel the power of that fire which they did not reverence. Thus, they that hate to be refined by the fire of divine grace, will undoubtedly be ruined by the fire of divine wrath. The fire did not burn them to ashes, as it had done the sacrifices, nor so much as singe their coats, ver. 5, but, like lightning, struck them dead in an instant: by these different effects of the same fire, God would show that it was no common fire, but kindled "by the breath of the Almighty," Isa. xxx. 33. 4. It is twice taken notice of in scripture, that they "died childless," Numb. iii. 4. and 1 Chron. xxiv. 2.

THE PROHIBITION.—Observe here, 1. The prohibition itself, "Do not drink wine nor strong drink." At other times they were allowed it, (it was not expected that every priest should be a Nazarite,) but during the time of their ministration they were forbidden it. This was one of the laws in Ezekiel's temple, Ezek. xliv. 21; and so it is required of gospel ministers, that they be "not given to wine," 1 Tim. iii. 3. Note, Drunkenness is bad in any, but it is especially scandalous and pernicious in ministers, who, of all men, ought to have the clearest heads and cleanest hearts. 2. The penalty annexed to the prohibition, "Lest ye die, lest ye die" when ye are in drink, "and so that day come upon you unawares," Luke xxi. 34. Or, "Lest ye do that which will make you liable to be cut off by the hand of God." 3. The reason assigned for this prohibition. They must needs be sober, else they could not duly discharge their office; they will be in danger of "erring through wine," Isa. xxviii. 7. They must be sure to keep sober, (1.) That they might be able to distinguish themselves in their ministrations, between that which was sacred and that which was common, and might never confound them, ver. 10. It concerns the Lord's ministers to put a difference between holy and unholy, both things and persons, that they may separate "between the precious and the vile," Jer. xv. 19. (2.) That they might be able to "teach the people," ver. 11, for that was a part of the priests' work, Deut. xxxiii. 10, and those that are addicted to drunkenness are very unfit to teach people God's statutes.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—With what solemn attention should we hear these words of the great and terrible LORD God, "I will be sanctified in them that come nigh me, and before all the people I will be glorified!" Contemplating with holy awe his majesty, purity, and avenging justice, we may well exclaim, "My flesh trembleth for fear of thee, and I am afraid of thy judgments." Nay, even the discoveries of his boundless mercy, as revealed in the gospel, and of the way in which that mercy is exercised, are suited to form our spirits to humble reverence united with filial confidence. Alas! when we consider from what motives, and in what manner, great numbers of those who are called the "priests of the LORD," draw nigh to him in their sacred services, and what effects their spirit, conduct, and ministrations are suited to produce on the people, we cannot but wonder that examples of severity, like that before us, are not frequently made. But assuredly, unless repentance intervene, the Lord will, before the assembled world, "be glorified" in the dreadful punishment of those who have thus openly dishonoured him, and led others also to despise his ordinances or revile his truth. It behoves us, however, to beware, not only of profaneness, or gross irreverence in this sacred work, but likewise of strange fire.—Scott.

CHAP. XI. CLEAN AND UNCLEAN.—The Creator pronounced all his works separately good, and altogether when finished very good: yet the distinction between clean and unclean animals was known even before the flood; though probably it only related to sacrifices. But, at this time, very particular laws were enacted respecting the people's diet, and the ceremonial uncleanness contracted by touching the carcases of unclean animals. These laws seem to have been intended, 1st, As a test of obedience, like the prohibition to Adam of "the tree of knowledge;" and to teach the Israelites habits of self-denial, and the government of their appetites. 2d, To keep them distinct from other nations, both by throwing hinderances in the way of their social intercourse with them, and by establishing the distinction between clean and unclean, which was applicable to persons as well as things: when therefore this distinction was no longer to be observed, Peter was instructed by a vision, which had relation to the distinction of meats, "not to call any man common or unclean." Many also of these forbidden animals were occasions of superstition and idolatry to the heathens. 3d, To teach them to make distinctions between holy and unholy, in the choice of companions, and in forming intimate

A. M. 2514.—B. C. 1490.

10 And all that have not fins and scales,[2] in the seas, and in the rivers, of all that move in the waters, and of any living thing, which is in the waters; [k]they shall be an abomination unto you.

11 They shall be even an abomination unto you: ye shall not eat of their flesh, but ye shall have their carcases in abomination.

12 Whatsoever hath no fins nor scales in the waters, that shall be an abomination unto you.

13 ¶ And these are they which ye shall have in abomination among the fowls,[3] they shall not be eaten; they are an abomination: [l]the eagle, and the ossifrage, and the ospray,

14 And the vulture, and the kite, after his kind:

15 Every [m]raven after his kind:

16 And [n]the owl, and the night-hawk, and the cuckoo, and the hawk, after his kind,

17 And the little owl, and the cormorant, and the great owl,

18 And the swan, and the pelican, and the gier-eagle,

19 And the stork, the heron after her kind, and the lapwing, and the bat.[4]

20 All fowls that [o]creep,[5] going upon all four, shall be an abomination unto you.

21 Yet these may ye eat, of every flying creeping thing that goeth upon all four, which have legs above their feet, to leap withal upon the earth:

22 Even these of them ye may eat: [p]the locust after his kind, and the bald locust after his kind, and the beetle after his kind, and the grasshopper after his kind.

23 But all other flying creeping things, which have four feet, shall be an abomination unto you.

24 And for these ye shall be unclean: whosoever [q]toucheth the carcase of them shall be unclean until the even.

25 And whosoever beareth ought of the carcase of them shall [r]wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even.

26 The carcases of every beast which divideth the hoof, and is not cloven-footed, nor cheweth the cud, are unclean unto you: every one that toucheth them shall be unclean.

27 And whatsoever goeth upon his paws, among all manner of beasts, that go on all four, those are unclean unto you: whoso toucheth their carcase shall be unclean until the even.

28 And he that beareth the carcase of them shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even: they are unclean unto you.

29 ¶ These also shall be unclean unto you among the [s]creeping things that creep upon the earth; the weasel, and the [t]mouse, and the tortoise after his kind,

30 And the ferret, and the chameleon, and the lizard, and the snail, and the mole.

31 These are unclean to you among all that creep: whosoever doth touch them, when they be dead, shall be unclean until the even.

32 And upon whatsoever any of them, when they are dead, doth fall, it shall be unclean; whether it be any vessel of wood,[6] or raiment, or skin, or sack, whatsoever vessel it be, wherein any work is done, [u]it must be put into water, and it shall be unclean until the even; so it shall be cleansed.

33 And every earthen vessel whereinto any of them falleth, whatsoever is in it shall be unclean; and [x]ye shall break it.

34 Of all meat which may be eaten, that on which such water cometh shall be unclean: and all drink that may be drunk in every such vessel shall be unclean.

35 And every thing whereupon any part of their carcase falleth shall be unclean; whether it be oven, or ranges for pots, they shall be broken down: for they are unclean, and shall be unclean unto you.

36 Nevertheless, a fountain or pit, []wherein there is* plenty of water, shall be clean: but that which toucheth their carcase shall be unclean.

37 And if any part of their carcase fall upon any [y]sowing-seed[7] which is to be sown, it shall be clean.

38 But if any water be put upon the seed,[8] and any part of their carcase fall thereon, it shall be unclean unto you.

39 And if any beast of which ye may eat, die; he that [z]toucheth the carcase thereof shall be unclean until the even.

40 And he that [a]eateth of the carcase of it shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even: he also that beareth the carcase of it shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even.

41 And every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth shall be an abomination: it shall not be eaten.

42 Whatsoever [b]goeth upon the belly, and whatsoever goeth upon all four, or whatsoever [†]hath more feet among all creeping things that creep upon the earth; them ye shall not eat, for they are an abomination.

43 Ye [c]shall not make [‡]yourselves abominable with any creeping thing that creepeth, neither shall ye make yourselves unclean with them, that ye should be defiled thereby.

44 For [d]I am the LORD your God: ye shall therefore sanctify yourselves, and [•]ye shall be holy;[9] for I am holy: neither shall ye defile yourselves with any manner of creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.

45 For I am the LORD [f]that bringeth you

[4] Moses, beginning the catalogue with the noblest of birds, the eagle, ends with the vilest, which is the bat. The name in Hebrew, as also in Greek, signifies it to be a bird of night, or darkness. It is observable, generally, that the birds forbidden are either rapacious, and live on flesh, or are night-birds, or haunt marshes and lakes, or are heavy and not easily raised from the ground, or live on dung and coarse diet. On the contrary, the birds allowed by the law of Moses, are those that live upon a cleaner food.—LEWIS.

[8] The reason of this difference was, that the seed to be sown went through many alterations, before it became food, which took away the pollution. Wet seed might be supposed to have received some tincture from the carcase, which dry did not; and, not being so fit to be sown till it was dry, was in that time to be cleansed.—LEWIS.

connections. And, 4thly, The propensities of these animals taught them what manner of persons they ought to be: for, if the pure, useful, gentle, patient nature of the animals appointed for sacrifice, were emblematic of the Saviour's character; it is obvious to conclude, that the exclusive prescription of some animals for the diet of the Lord's people was also significant. Some have even thought that the allowance of the slaughter of innocent animals, for the food of sinful man, forms a continued type of the purchase and application of the salvation of Christ, and of our transformation into his image, while we spiritually "eat his flesh and drink his blood."

MODES OF DISTINCTION.—The fox, the dog, the lion, the wolf, and indeed animals in general which are carnivorous, neither chew the cud nor divide the hoof: other animals do only the one, and are therefore unclean. The former are apt emblems of the crafty, the covetous, the cruel, and fierce: the latter of the lewd, the sensual, and the carnally minded; whilst the sheep and ox, and other animals which unite the two, aptly teach us what we ought to be, and with whom we should associate. The foot of the camel is divided on the upper part of it, but it is strongly joined beneath; so that he does not "part the hoof." It is doubted whether the words, rendered coney and hare, be properly translated; because it is not known that these animals chew the cud. They were, however, unclean. The swine is the emblem of filthiness; but it is marked as unclean on the same ground as the other animals. It is probable, that the peculiar aversion of the Jews to the swine, arose from those animals being commonly sacrificed in the worship of idolaters. Some think that the flesh of the unclean animals was prohibited as unwholesome; yet, the flesh of hares and rabbits seems to be as wholesome as that of sheep and goats.—The Israelites were not only forbidden to eat the flesh of the unclean beasts, but they must not touch their dead bodies: and consequently the use of their skins, and even of their fat, was interdicted. Frogs, amphibious creatures, sea-monsters, eels, and several species of fishes, were thus prohibited as an abomination; but the emblem is very obscure: some of them may represent such persons as attempt to reconcile in their conduct the service of God and mammon.—Here the critics find abundance of work; and if this law were now in force, it would be necessary to decide upon the meaning of the original words, many of which are used in no other part of Scripture, except in the parallel passage in Deuteronomy. (Deut. xiv. 11—20.) Many of the unclean birds are fierce and ravenous; others feed very grossly; several instinctively love darkness and desolate places; and few of them are generally eaten at present. The harmless loving dove, and such as were of a cleanly nature, were allowed for food: and the emblem is easily applied. The several species of "locusts," here excepted from the general prohibition, (for the words rendered "beetle" and "grasshopper," are supposed to mean different kinds of locusts,) have, besides four feet on which to walk or crawl on the earth, two longer legs on which they leap. Locusts have been eaten by many nations, and are at this day. "After his kind," means all of this kind. Not only those beasts, which have single hoofs, as horses and asses, were unclean; but such, likewise, as divided the feet into paws, or more than two parts, as lions, tigers, and other wild beasts. When dead. The unclean animals did not render a person unclean who touched them when alive; for many of them were beasts of burden, as the horse, ass, and camel. Yet even with this limitation, the law would be to us extremely burdensome: for instance, a dead mouse, cat, weasel, or squirrel, falling upon earthen vessels, ovens, or ranges, would render it necessary to destroy them; and even when vermin or reptiles were killed, the removal of their carcases, or those of any animal that died of itself, would occasion pollution, ver. 32—35. This indeed was only ceremonial; yet, it would often exclude persons from public ordinances and society; and much circumspection, in properly purifying themselves and their furniture, would be requisite, and a constant circumspection to avoid contracting defilement. This evidently represented the necessity of the "sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience;" the daily pursuit of true holiness, in the exercise of "repentance towards God, and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ;" and habitual watchfulness and self-examination. If water, from any vessel thus rendered unclean, fell on such food as was before clean, this must not afterwards be eaten; nor must water be drunk from such a vessel. But water from a well or pit, into which any carcase had fallen, was not unclean; though every thing which touched the carcase was. This exception seemed necessary, in order that water for the various ablutions might be procured. Corn for food, if the carcase of any creature fell into it, must not be used till washed and cleansed: but this was not needful in seed-corn, except it was steeped in water; and then it must be washed in other water.—Scott.

REASONS OF THE LAW.—We have, the exposition of this law, or a key to let us into the meaning of it. It was not intended merely for a bill of fare, or as the directions of a physician about their diet, but God would hereby teach them to sanctify themselves, to be holy, ver. 44. That is, (1.) They must hereby learn to put a difference between good and evil, and to reckon it could not be all alike what they did, when it was not all alike what they ate. (2.) To maintain a constant observance of the divine law, and to govern themselves by that in all their actions, even those that are common, which ought to be performed "after a godly sort," 3 John 6. Even eating and drinking must be by rule, and "to the glory of God," 1 Cor. x. 31. (3.) To distinguish themselves from all their neighbours, as a people set apart for God, and obliged not to walk as other Gentiles: and all this is "holiness." Thus these "rudiments of the world" were their tutors and 46 This is [h]the law of the beasts, and of the fowl, and of every living creature that moveth in the waters, and of every creature that creepeth upon the earth:

47 To [i]make a difference between the unclean and the clean, and between the beast that may be eaten, and the beast that may not be eaten.

Women's purifications, 1, and offerings, 6.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, [a]If a woman have conceived seed, and born a man-child: then she shall be unclean seven days;[1] [b]according to the days of the separation for her infirmity shall she be unclean.

3 And in the [c]eighth day the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised.

4 And she shall then continue [d]in the blood of her purifying three and thirty days: she shall touch no hallowed thing, nor come into the sanctuary,[2] until the days of her purifying be fulfilled.

5 But if she bear a *maid-child, then she shall be unclean two weeks, as in her separation; and she shall continue in the blood of her purifying threescore and six days.

6 ¶ And when the days of her purifying are fulfilled, for a son, or for a daughter, she shall bring [f]a lamb *of the first year for a burnt-offering, and a young pigeon or a turtle-dove for a sin-offering, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation unto the priest;

7 Who shall offer it before the LORD, and [g]make an atonement for her, and she shall [h]be cleansed from the issue of her blood. This is the law for her that hath born [i]a male or a female.

8 And if [†]she be not [k]able to bring a lamb, then she shall bring two turtles, or two young pigeons; the one for the burnt-offering, and the other for a sin-offering: and the priest shall [l]make an atonement for her, and she shall be clean.

of leprosy;[1] then [c]he shall be brought unto Aaron the priest, or unto one of his sons the priests:

3 And the priest [d]shall look on the plague in the skin of the flesh: and when the hair in the plague is turned white, and the plague in sight be [*]deeper than the skin of his flesh, it is a plague of leprosy: and the priest shall look on him, and [e]pronounce him unclean.

governors, Gal. iv. 2, 3, to bring them to that which is the revival of our first state in Adam, and the earnest of our best state with Christ, that is "holiness," without which no man shall see the Lord. This is indeed the great design of all the ordinances, that by them we may sanctify ourselves, and learn to be holy. Even this law concerning their food, which seemed to stoop so very low, aimed thus high, for it was the statute-law of heaven under the Old Testament as well as the New, that "without holiness no man shall see the Lord." The caution therefore, ver. 43, is, "Ye shall not make yourselves abominable." Note, By having fellowship with sin, which is abominable, we make ourselves abominable. That man is truly miserable who is in the sight of God abominable; and none are so but those that make themselves so.—Henry.

CHAP. XII. CHILDBIRTH—LAW FOR THE MOTHER.—1. There was some time of strict separation immediately after the birth, which continued seven days for a son, and fourteen days for a daughter, ver. 2, 5. 2. There was also a longer time appointed for their purifying; thirty-three days more, (forty in all,) if the birth were a male, and double that time if a female, ver. 4, 5. During this time, they were only separated from the sanctuary, and forbidden to eat of the passover, or peace-offerings, or, if a priest's wife, to eat of any thing that was holy to the Lord. Why the time of both those was double for a female to what it was for a male, I can assign no reason but the will of the Law-Maker; in Christ Jesus no difference is made of male and female, Gal. iii. 28; Col. iii. 11. But this ceremonial uncleanness, which the law laid women in childbed under, was to signify the pollution of sin, which we are all conceived and born in, Ps. li. 5. For if the root be impure, so is the branch, "Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean?" If sin had not entered, nothing but purity and honour had attended all the productions of that great blessing, "Be fruitful and multiply;" but now that the nature of man is degenerated, the propagation of that nature is laid under these marks of disgrace, because of the sin and corruption that are propagated with it, and in remembrance of the curse upon the woman that was first in the transgression, That "in sorrow" (to which it is here further added, "in shame") she should "bring forth children." And the exclusion of the woman for so many days from the sanctuary, and all participation of the holy things, signified that our original corruption (that sinning sin which we brought into the world with us) would have excluded us for ever from the enjoyment of God and his favours, if he had not graciously provided for our purifying.—Henry.

CHAP. XIII. LEPROSY.—As the law, contained in the preceding chapter, was easily understood and applied, it was addressed to Moses only; but as that contained in this chapter and the next involved many difficulties, of which the priests were the appointed judges, it was given to Aaron likewise. Whatever diseases, in some respects like that here described, had been known in other nations, it is evident from the very language used, that this disease was in great measure peculiar to Israel. It is called "the plague of leprosy," which implies that it was generally, if not always, inflicted by the immediate judgment of God. Indeed, this must be evident from a careful consideration of the Scriptures referred to in the margin. No remedy is anywhere mentioned: nay, it is implied in the answer of the king of Israel respecting the leprosy of Naaman, that it could not be cured but by the immediate power of God, 2 Kings v. 7. When any one supposed that he was visited with this disorder, or it was suspected by those about him, he was not directed to consult a physician, but to apply to the priests: great care was required, and many particular rules given, in order to distinguish it from other maladies; and when it was removed, the diseased person is more frequently said to be cleansed than healed. It does not appear to have been infectious, as many seem to suppose; but, as ceremonial pollution was communicated to all who touched the leper, he was excluded from the society of the people, as well as from the courts of the Lord; and when the leprosy was cleansed, he was not readmitted till after divers sacrifices and purifications. All this seems to represent the state of a sinner, whose heart is entirely unsanctified, and in whom sin has dominion: whatever his profession may be, he has yet no benefit from the great sacrifice for sin, nor is he meet for communion with God, or his people on earth, much less in heaven, unless he be cleansed; and as we proceed we shall perceive many other things admitting of an apt accommodation. A few hints, however, must suffice on this intricate, and to us not very interesting, subject. Yet we must suppose that the all-wise Legislator had some important meaning in these institutions; and therefore we should not blame the sober attempts of those who modestly point out what seems to them to have been intended. Indeed, the Scriptures referred to, in general, give the best intimations on the subject.—Scott.

LAW OF LEPROSY.—1. Several rules are here laid down, by which the priest must go, in making his judgment. (1.) If the sore were but skin-deep, it was to be hoped it was not the leprosy, ver. 4. But if it was "deeper than the skin," the man must be pronounced unclean, ver. 3. The infirmities that consist with grace, do not sink deep into the soul, but "the mind" still "serves the law of God," and the "inward man delights in it," Rom. vii. 22, 25. But if the matter be really worse than it shows, and the inwards be infected, the case is dangerous. (2.) If the sore "be at a stay," and do not "spread," it is no leprosy, ver. 5, 6. But if it "spread much abroad," and continue to do so after several inspections, the case is bad, ver. 7, 8. If men do not grow worse, but changed unto white; he shall come unto the priest:

17 And the priest shall see him; and, behold, if the plague be turned into white; then the priest shall pronounce him clean that hath the plague: he is clean.

18 ¶ The flesh also, in which, even in the skin thereof, was a [r]boil, and is healed,

19 And in the place of the boil there be a white rising, or a bright spot, white, and somewhat reddish, and it be shewed to the priest:

20 And if, when the priest seeth it, behold, it be [s]in sight lower than the skin, and the hair thereof be turned white; the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is a plague of leprosy broken out of the boil.

21 But if the priest look on it, and, behold, there be no white hairs therein, and if it be not lower than the skin, but be somewhat[5] dark; then the priest shall shut him up seven days.

22 And if it spread much abroad in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean; it is a plague.

23 But if the bright spot [t]stay in his place, and spread not, it is a burning boil; and the priest shall pronounce him clean.

24 ¶ Or if there be any flesh, in the skin whereof there is [‡]a hot burning, and the quick flesh that burneth have a white bright spot, somewhat reddish or white;

25 Then the priest shall look upon it: and, behold, if the hair in the bright spot be [u]turned white, and it be in sight deeper than the skin; it is a leprosy broken out of the burning: wherefore the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is the plague of leprosy.

26 But if the priest look on it, and, behold, there be no white hair on the bright spot, and it be no lower than the other skin, but be somewhat dark; [x]then the priest shall shut him up seven days.

27 And the priest shall look upon him the seventh day; and if it be spread much abroad in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: [y]it is the plague of leprosy.

28 And if the bright spot stay in his place, and spread not in the skin, but it be somewhat dark; it is a rising of the burning, and the priest shall pronounce him clean; for it is an inflammation[6] of the burning.

29 ¶ If a man or woman hath a plague [z]upon the head or the beard;[7]

30 Then the priest shall see the plague: and, behold, if it be in sight deeper than the skin, and there be in it a yellow thin hair; then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is a dry [a]scall, even a leprosy upon the head or beard.

31 And if the priest look on the plague of the scall, and, behold, it be not in sight deeper[8] than the skin; and that there is no black hair in it: then the priest shall shut up him that hath the plague of the scall, seven days.

32 And in the seventh day the priest shall look on the plague: and, behold, if the scall spread not, and there be in it no [b]yellow hair, and the scall be not in sight deeper than the skin;

33 He shall be shaven, but the scall shall he not shave: and the priest shall shut up him that hath the scall seven days more.

34 And in [c]the seventh day the priest shall look on the scall: and, behold, if the scall [d]be not spread in the skin, nor be in sight deeper than the skin; then the priest shall pronounce him clean: [e]and he shall wash his clothes, and be clean.

35 But if the scall [f]spread much in the skin after his cleansing;

36 Then the priest shall look on him: and, behold, if the scall be spread in the skin, the priest shall not seek for yellow hair; he is unclean.

37 But if the scall be in his sight at a stay,[9] and that there is black hair grown up therein; the scall is healed, he is clean: and the priest shall pronounce him clean.

38 ¶ If a man also, or a woman, have in the skin of their flesh, bright spots, even white bright spots;

39 Then the priest shall look: and, behold, [g]if the bright spots in the skin of their flesh be darkish white; it is a freckled spot that groweth in the skin; he is clean.

40 ¶ And the man whose [§]hair is fallen off his head, he is bald: yet is he clean.

41 And he that hath his hair fallen off from the part of his head toward his face, he is forehead-bald: yet is he clean.

42 And if there be in the bald head, or bald forehead, a white reddish sore; it is a leprosy sprung up in his bald head, or his bald forehead.[10]

43 Then the priest shall look upon it: and, behold, if the rising of the sore be white reddish in his bald head, or in his bald forehead, as the leprosy appeareth in the skin of the flesh;

44 He is a leprous man, he is unclean: the priest shall pronounce him [h]utterly unclean, his plague is in his head.

45 And the leper in whom the plague is, [i]his clothes shall be rent, and his head bare, and he shall [k]put a covering upon his upper lip, and shall cry, [l]Unclean, unclean.[11]

46 All the days wherein the plague shall be in him, he shall be defiled; he is unclean: he shall dwell alone, [m]without the camp shall his habitation be.

[7] Maimonides tells us that, in this sort of leprosy the hair on the head or beard fell off by the roots, and the place of the hair remained bare. This seems to have been that kind of disease which, Pliny says, came into Italy in the middle of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, and was called Mentagra, because it commonly began in the chin, and which was so filthy that any deathwas preferable to it.—Patrick.

a stop be put to the course of their sins, and their corruptions be checked, it is to be hoped they will grow better; but if sin get ground, and they become worse every day, they are going down-hill. (3.) If there were "proud, raw flesh" in the rising, the priest needed not to wait any longer, it was certainly a leprosy, ver. 10, 11. Nor is there any surer indication of the badness of a man's spiritual state, and the heart's rising in self-conceit, confidence in the flesh, and resistance of the reproofs of the word, and strivings of the Spirit. (4.) If the eruption, whatever it was, "covered all the skin" from head to foot, it was no leprosy, ver. 12, 13, for it was an evidence that the vitals were sound and strong, and nature hereby helped itself, throwing out what was burdensome and pernicious. There is hope in the small-pox when they come out well; so, if men freely confess their sins and hide them not, there is no danger comparable to theirs that "cover their sins." Some gather this from it, that there is more hope of the profane than the hypocrites. The publicans and harlots went into the kingdom of heaven before Scribes and Pharisees. In one respect, the sudden breakings-out of passion, though bad enough, are not so dangerous as malice concealed. Others gather this, That if we judge ourselves we shall not be judged; if we see and own that there is "no health in us, no soundness in our flesh," by reason of sin, we shall "find grace in the eyes of the Lord." 2 The priest must take time in making his judgment, and not give it rashly. If the matter looked suspicious, he must shut up the patient "seven days," and then "seven days" more that his judgment might be "according to truth." This teaches all, both ministers and people, not to be hasty in their censures, nor to judge any thing "before the time." If "some men's sins go before unto judgment," the sins of other's "follow after," and so men's "good works;" therefore let nothing be done "suddenly," 1 Tim. v. 22, 24, 25. 3. If the person suspected were found to be clean, yet he must "wash his clothes," ver. 6, because he had been under the suspicion, and there had been in him that which gave ground for the suspicion. Even the prisoner that is acquitted must go down on his knees. We have need to be washed in the blood of Christ from our spots, though they be not leprosy spots; for who can say, "I am pure from sin;" though there are those who, through grace, are "innocent from the great transgression."—Henry.

Treatment of Leprosy.—We have, 1. Provisos, that neither a freckled skin nor a bald head should be mistaken for a leprosy, ver. 38—41. Every deformity must not forthwith be made a ceremonial defilement. Elisha was jeered for his bald head, 2 Kings ii. 23, but they were the children of Bethel who turned it to his reproach, that knew not the judgments of their God. 2. A particular brand set upon the leprosy, if at any time it did appear in a bald head, ver. 44. "The plague is in his head, he is utterly unclean." If the leprosy of sin have seized the head, if the judgment be corrupted, and wicked principles, which countenance and support wicked practices, be embraced, it is an "utter uncleanness," from which few are ever cleansed. Soundness in the faith keeps the leprosy from the head, and saves conscience from being shipwrecked. 3. Directions what must be done with the "convicted leper." When the priest, upon mature deliberation, had solemnly pronounced him unclean, (1.) He must pronounce himself so, ver. 45. He must put himself into the posture of a mourner, and cry, "Unclean, unclean." The leprosy was not itself a sin, but it was a sad token of God's displeasure, and a sore affliction to him that was under it. It was a reproach to his name, put a full stop to his business in the world, cut him off from conversation with his friends and relations, condemned him to banishment till he was cleansed, shut him out from the sanctuary, and was, in effect, the ruin of all the comfort he could have in this world. Heman, it would seem, either was a leper, or alludes to the melancholy condition of a leper, Ps. lxxxviii. 8, &c. He must, therefore, [1.] Humble himself under the mighty hand of God, not insisting upon his cleanness, when the priest had pronounced him unclean, but justifying God, and accepting the "punishment of his iniquity." He must signify this, by "rending his clothes, uncovering" his head, and "covering his upper lip;" all tokens of shame and confusion of face, and very significant of that self-loathing and self-abasement which should fill the hearts of penitents, the language of which is self-judging. Thus must we take to ourselves the shame that belongs to us, and with broken hearts call ourselves by our own name, "unclean, unclean;" heart unclean, life unclean; unclean by original corruption, unclean by actual transgression; "unclean," and therefore worthy to be for ever excluded from communion with God, and all hope of happiness in him. "We are all as an unclean thing," Isa. lxiv. 6; "unclean," and therefore "undone," if infinite mercy do not interpose. [2.] He must give warning to others to take heed of coming near him. Wherever he went, he must cry to those he saw at a distance, "'I am unclean, unclean,' take heed of touching me." Not that the leprosy was catching, but by the touch of a leper, ceremonial uncleanness was contracted. Every one, therefore, was concerned to avoid it; and the leper himself must give notice of the danger. And this was all that the law could do, in that it was weak through the flesh; it taught the leper to cry, "Unclean, unclean;" but the gospel has put another cry into the lepers' mouths, Luke xvii. 12, 13, where we find ten lepers crying with a loud voice, "Jesus, Master, have mercy on us." The law only shows us our disease; the gospel shows us our help in Christ. (2.) He must then be shut out of the camp, and afterward, when they came to Canaan, out of the city, town, or village, where he lived, and "dwell alone," ver. 46, associating with none but those that were lepers like himself. When king Uzziah became a leper, he was banished his palace, and "dwelt in a several house," 2 Chron. xxvi. 21.

54 Then the priest shall command that they wash the thing wherein the plague is, and he shall shut it up seven days more.

55 And the priest shall look on the plague [r]after that it is washed: and, behold, if the plague have not changed his colour, and the plague be not spread, it is unclean; thou shalt burn it in the fire: it is fret inward, whether [†]it be bare within or without.

56 And if the priest look, and, behold, the plague be somewhat dark after the washing of it; then he shall rend it out of the garment, or out of the skin, or out of the warp, or out of the woof.

57 And if it appear still[14] in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in any thing of skin; it is a spreading plague: thou [s]shalt burn that wherein the plague is with fire.

58 And the garment, either warp or woof, or whatsoever thing of skin it be, which thou shalt wash, if the plague be departed from them, then it shall [t]be washed the second time, and shall be clean.

59 This is the law of the plague of leprosy in a garment of woollen or linen, either in the warp or woof, or any thing of skins, to pronounce it clean, or to pronounce it unclean.

9 But it shall be on the seventh day, that he shall [u]shave all his hair off his head, and his beard, and his eyebrows, even all his hair he shall shave off: and he shall wash his clothes, also he shall wash his flesh in water, and he shall be clean.

And see 2 Kings vii. 3. This typified the purity which ought to be preserved in the gospel-church, by the solemn and authoritative exclusion of scandalous sinners, that hate to be reformed, from the communion of the faithful; "Put away from among yourselves that wicked person," 1 Cor. v. 13.

LEPROSY IN CLOTHES.—This is the law concerning the plague of leprosy in a garment, whether linen or woollen. A leprosy in a garment, with discernible indications of it, the colour changed by it, the garment fretted, the nap worn off, and this in some one particular part of the garment, and increasing when it was shut up, and not to be got out by washing, is a thing which to us now is altogether unaccountable. The learned confess that it was a sign and a miracle in Israel, an extraordinary punishment inflicted by the Divine power, as a token of great displeasure against a person or family. 1. The process was much the same with that concerning a leprous person. The garment suspected to be tainted, was not to be burnt immediately, though, it may be, there would have been no great loss of it; for in no case must sentence be given merely upon a surmise; but it must be "showed to the priest." If, upon search, it was found that there was a leprous spot, (the Jews say no bigger than a bean,) it must be burnt, or, at least that part of the garment in which the spot was, ver. 52, 57. If the cause of the suspicion was gone, it must be washed, and then might be used, ver. 58. 2. The signification also was much the same, to intimate the great malignity there is in sin: it not only defiles the sinner's conscience, but it brings a stain upon all his employments and enjoyments, all he has, and all he does. "To them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure," Tit. i. 15. And we are taught hereby to hate even "the garments spotted with the flesh," Jude ver. 23. Those that make their clothes servants to their pride and lust, may see them thereby tainted with a leprosy, and doomed to the fire, Isa. iii. 18—24. But the ornament of "the hidden man of the heart is incorruptible," 1 Pet. iii. 4. The robes of righteousness never fret, nor are moth-eaten.—Henry.

CHAP. XIV. MEANING OF THE SACRIFICE FOR THE LEPER.—The "two birds," one slain over springing water, in an earthen vessel, and the other set at liberty, having been dipped in this mixture of blood and water, may either signify Christ shedding his blood for sinners, and then rising and ascending into heaven, there to appear in the presence of God for us: or the bird that was slain may represent the Saviour dying for our sins; and the living bird, the sinner preserved and liberated, by being washed in his atoning blood, and the purifying grace of his Spirit; and, being set free from sin and Satan, "seeking those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God." The "cedar-wood," a supposed emblem of the soundness of the cleansed leper's flesh, may denote the sincerity of the true convert's heart, and the incorruptible nature of true grace: the "scarlet," as distinguished from the glistening whiteness of the leprosy, might imply that the man was recovered to his former ruddy complexion, and represent the true penitent as come to himself and to his right mind: the "hyssop," a shrub commonly used in the legal sprinklings, might signify faith, of small estimation among men, but of great efficacy in applying the salvation of Christ to the soul; or, that mean instruments may be useful in directing sinners to Christ. These were to be dipped in the blood and water; for all our sincerity, repentance, and faith, are derived from the Holy Spirit, and are accepted only through the blood of the Saviour.—Scott.

PURIFICATION OF THE LEPER.—To complete the purification of the leper, on the eighth day, after the former solemnity performed without the camp, and, as it should seem, before he returned to his own habitation, he was to attend "at the door of the tabernacle," and was there to be "presented to the Lord," with his offerings, ver. 11. Observe here, 1. That the mercies of God oblige us to present ourselves to him, Rom. xii. 1. 2. When God has restored us to the liberty of ordinances again, after restraint by sickness, distance, or otherwise, we should take the first opportunity of testifying our respect to God, and our affection to his sanctuary, by a diligent improvement of the liberty we are restored to. When Christ had healed the impotent man, he soon after "found him in the temple," John v. 14. When Hezekiah asks, "What is the sign that I shall go up to the house of the Lord?" he means, "What is the sign that I shall recover?" intimating, that, if God restored him his health, so that he should be able to go abroad, the house of the Lord should be the first place he would go to. 3. When we "present ourselves before the Lord," we must present our offerings, devoting to God with ourselves all we have and can do. 4. Both we and our offerings must be "presented before the Lord" by the Priest that made us clean, even our Lord Jesus, else neither we nor they can be accepted. Three lambs the cleansed leper was to bring, with a meat-offering, and a log of oil, which was about half a pint. Now, (1.) Most of the ceremony peculiar to this case was about the trespass-offering, the lamb for which was offered first, ver. 12. And, beside the usual rites with which the trespass-offering was offered, some of the blood was to be put upon the ear, and thumb, and great toe of the leper that was to be cleansed, ver. 14. The very same ceremony that was used in the consecration of the priests, chap. viii. 23, 24. It was a mortification to them to see the same purification necessary for them that was for a leper. The Jews say, that the leper stood without the gate of the tabernacle, and the priest within, and thus the ceremony was performed through the gate, signifying that now he was admitted with other Israelites to attend in the courts of the Lord's house again, and was as welcome as ever; though he

15 And the priest shall take some of the log of [m]oil, and pour it into the palm of his own left hand:

16 And the priest shall dip his right finger in the oil that is in his left hand, and shall sprinkle of the oil with his finger seven times [n]before the LORD.

17 And of the rest of the oil that is in his hand shall the priest put upon [o]the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot, upon the blood of the trespass-offering.

18 And [p]the remnant of the oil that is in the priest's hand he shall pour upon the head of him that is to be cleansed: and the priest shall make [q]an atonement for him[3] before the LORD.

19 And the priest shall offer [r]the sin-offering, and make an atonement for him that is to be cleansed from his uncleanness, and afterward he shall kill the burnt-offering:[4]

20 And the priest shall [s]offer the burnt-offering and the meat-offering upon the altar: and the priest shall make an atonement for him, and he shall be clean.

21 And if he be [t]poor,[5] and [u]cannot get so much; then he shall take [u]one lamb for a trespass-offering [l]to be waved, to make an atonement for him, and one tenth-deal of fine flour mingled with oil for a meat-offering, and a log of oil;

22 And two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, such as he is able to get; and the one shall be a sin-offering, and the other a burnt-offering.

23 And he shall bring them on the eighth day, for his cleansing, unto the priest, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, before the LORD.

24 And [x]the priest shall take the lamb of the trespass-offering, and the log of oil, and the priest shall wave them for a wave-offering before the LORD.

25 And he shall kill the lamb of the trespass-offering, and the priest shall take some of the blood of [y]the trespass-offering, and put it upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot.

26 And the priest shall pour of the oil into the palm of his own left hand.

27 And the priest shall sprinkle with his right finger some of the oil that is in his left hand seven times before the LORD.

28 And the priest shall put of the oil that is in his hand upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot, upon the place of the blood of the trespass-offering.

29 And the rest of the oil that is in the priest's hand he shall put upon the head of him that is to be cleansed, [z]to make an atonement for him before the LORD.

30 And he shall offer the [a]one of the turtle-doves, or of the young pigeons, such as he can get;

31 Even such as he is able to get, the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, with the meat-offering. And the priest shall make an atonement for him that is to be cleansed, before the LORD.

32 This is [b]the law of him in whom is the plague of leprosy, [c]whose hand is not able to get that which pertaineth to his cleansing.

33 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

34 When [d]ye be come into the land of Canaan,[6] [e]which I give to you for a possession, and [f]I put the plague of leprosy in a house of the land of your possession;

35 And he that owneth the house shall come and tell the priest, saying, It seemeth to me there is as it were [g]a plague in the house:

36 Then the priest shall command that they [*]empty the house, before the priest go into it to see the plague, that all that is in the house [h]be not made unclean:[7] and afterward the priest shall go in to see the house.

37 And he shall look on the plague, and, behold, if the plague be in the walls of the house, [i]with hollow strakes,[8] greenish or reddish, which in sight are lower than the wall;

38 Then the priest shall go out of the house to the door of the house, and shut up the house seven days.

39 And the priest shall come again the seventh day, and shall look: and, behold, if the plague be [k]spread in the walls of the house;

40 Then the priest shall command that they [l]take away the stones in which the plague is, and they shall cast them into an unclean place without the city.

41 And he shall cause the house to be scraped within round about, and they shall pour out the dust that they scrape off, without the city, [m]into an unclean place.

42 And [n]they shall take other stones, and put them in the place of those stones: and he shall take other mortar, and shall plaster the house.

43 And if [o]the plague come again, and break out in the house, after that he hath taken away the stones, and after he hath scraped the house, and after it is plastered;

[3] This seems to suppose that the leprosy was inflicted for some sin, which, by this sacrifice, was to be taken away; but the expression to "make atonement" does not always signify "to take away sin," but sometimes merely to make a thing or person fit for holy uses. Thus Moses is said to make atonement for the altar, Ex. xxix. 36, 37.—PATRICK.

[5] It was the peculiar goodness of God, to make a merciful provision that the poor should not be charged with too costly sacrifices, and yet should partake of their benefit as much as the rich. This was peculiarly apparent in the case of cleansing the leper, where special provision is made for less costly offerings, whenever the person was unable to bear a heavy charge.—LEWIS.

[8] Respecting the leprosy in houses, it has been supposed by some that it was a wasting of the walls caused by small insects, called stone-worms, which live upon the stone and eat it gradually away. These worms commonly stick to those parts of buildings which are most moist, and easily penetrated; hence those parts are apt to be discoloured with green or reddish hues.—CALMET.

had been a leper, and though perhaps the name might stick by him as long as he lived, (as we read of one who, probably, was cleansed by our Lord Jesus, who yet afterward is called "Simon the leper," Matt. xxvi. 3,) yet he was as freely admitted as ever to communion with God and man. After the blood of the offering had been put with the priest's finger upon the extremities of the body, to include the whole, some of the oil that he brought, which was first waved, and then sprinkled before the Lord, was in like manner put in the same places upon the blood. "The blood" (says the learned Bishop Patrick) "seems to have been a token of forgiveness; the oil, of healing;" for God first "forgiveth our iniquities," and then "healeth our diseases," Ps. ciii. 3. See Isa. xxxviii. 17. Wherever the blood of Christ is applied for justification, the oil of the Spirit is applied for sanctification; for these two are inseparable, and both necessary to our acceptance with God. Nor shall our former leprosy, if it be healed by repentance, be any bar to these glorious privileges. Cleansed lepers are as welcome to the blood and the oil as consecrated priests. "Such were some of you, but ye are washed." When the leper was sprinkled, the water must have blood in it, ver. 5; when he was anointed, the oil must have blood under it, to signify that all the graces and comforts of the Spirit, all his purifying, dignifying influences, are owing to the death of Christ: it is by his blood alone that we are sanctified. (2.) Beside this, there must be a sin-offering and a burnt-offering, a lamb for each, ver. 19, 20. By each of these offerings, it is said, the priests shall "make an atonement for him." 1. His moral guilt shall be removed; the sin for which the leprosy was sent shall be pardoned, and all the sins he had been guilty of in his afflicted state. Note, The removal of any outward trouble is then doubly comfortable to us, when at the same time God gives us some assurance of the forgiveness of our sins. If we "receive the atonement," we have reason to rejoice, Rom. v. 11. 2. His ceremonial pollution shall be removed, which had kept him from the participation of the holy things. And this is called "making an atonement for him," because our restoration to the privileges of God's children, typified hereby, is owing purely to the great Propitiation. When the atonement is made for him, he shall be clean, both to his own satisfaction, and to his reputation among his neighbours; he shall retrieve both his credit and his comfort; and both these true penitents become entitled to both ease and honour, by their interest in the atonement. The burnt-offering, beside the atonement that was made by it, was a thankful acknowledgment of God's mercy to him: and the more immediate the hand of God was both in the sickness and in the cure, the more reason he had thus to give glory to him; and thus, as our Saviour speaks, Mark i. 44, to "offer for his cleansing" all "those things which Moses commanded for a testimony unto them."

LEPROSY IN A HOUSE.—This is the law concerning the leprosy in a house. Now that they were in the wilderness, they dwelt in tents, and had no houses; and therefore this law is made only an appendix to the former laws concerning the leprosy, because it related, not to their present state, but to their future settlement. The leprosy in a house is as unaccountable as the leprosy in a garment; but, if we see not what natural causes of it can be assigned, we may resolve it into the power of the God of nature, who here says, "I put the leprosy in a house," ver. 34, as his curse is said to "enter into a house," and "consume it with the timber and stones thereof," Zech. v. 4. Now, 1. It is supposed that, even in Canaan itself, the land of promise, their houses might be infected with a leprosy. Though it was a holy land, that would not secure them from this plague, while the inhabitants were many of them so unholy. Thus, a place and a name in the visible church will not secure wicked people from God's judgments. 2. It is likewise taken for granted that the owner of the house will make the priest acquainted with it, as soon as he sees the least cause to suspect the leprosy in his house, v. 35. "It seemeth to me there is as it were a plague in the house." Sin, where that reigns in a house, is a plague there as it is in a heart. And masters of families should be aware and afraid of the first appearance of gross sin in their families, and put away the iniquity, whatever it is, far from their tabernacles, Job xxii. 23. They should be jealous with a godly jealousy concerning those under their charge, lest they be drawn into sin, and take early advice, if it but seem that there is a plague in the house, lest the contagion spread, and many be by it defiled and destroyed. 3. If the priest, upon search, find that the leprosy is got into the house, he must try to cure it, by taking out that part of the building that was infected, ver. 40, 41. This was like cutting off a gangrened limb, for the preservation of the rest of the body. Corruption should be purged out in time, before it spread; for "a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump." "If thy right hand offend thee cut it off." 4. If yet it remained in the house, the whole house must be pulled down, and all the materials carried to the dunghill, ver. 44, 45. The owner had better be without a dwelling, than live in one that was infected. Note, The leprosy of sin, if it be obstinate under the methods of cure, will at last be the ruin of families and churches. 5. If the taking out of the infected stones cure the house and the leprosy did not spread any further, then the house must be cleansed; not only aired, that it might be healthful, but purified from the ceremonial pollution, that it might be fit to be the habitation of an Israelite. The ceremony of its cleansing was much the same with that of cleansing a leprous person, v. 49, &c.—Henry.

[9] Moses, therefore, it would appear, never suffered a leprous house to stand. The injury which such houses might do to the health of the inhabitants, or to the articles they contained, was of more consequence, in his estimation, than the buildings themselves. Those to whom this appears strange, and who lament the fate of a house pulled down by legal authority, probably think of large and magnificent houses like ours, of many stories high, which cost a great deal of money, and in the second story of which the people are generally secure from all danger of the saltpetre: but the houses of those days were low, and of very little value.—MICHAELIS.

[10] If he did but enter within the door of the house, while it remained under a suspicion of being defiled, he contracted a defilement himself, under which he lay till night. Which strict care to keep the Israelites free from all such pollutions, is an admonish- to us (as Conradus Pellicanus well notes) to avoid all suspected places and company: according to the exhortation of the apostle, "Abstain from all appearance of evil."—KIDDER.

Hereby was figured the pollution that cometh to the souls of men, by the impure doctrines which false prophets and heretics spit out of their mouths (2 Pet. ii. 1-3. 1 Tim. iv. 1, 2. Tit. i. 9, 10, 11); as may be gathered by the contrary, when Christ, by spitting on men, opened and loosed the eyes, ears, and tongues of the blind, deaf, and dumb (Mark viii. 23; vii. 33. John ix. 6), whereby the power and efficacy of the word out of the mouth of Christ was signified. — AINSWORTH.

[3] It is somewhat doubtful whether these words, "hath not washed his hands in water," belong to him that had the issue or to him that his hands touched. Most understand it of the former. But the Syriac takes it to refer to the man that was touched by him, who, if he did not immediately wash his hands with water, was to be cleansed after a more laborious manner, by washing his clothes, and bathing himself in water. But I do not see how washing of his hands could cleanse him, when the man that had the issue touched perhaps some other part of his body.—PATRICK.

rebuked the idolatry or iniquity which men committed in their houses, and the dishonest or sacrilegious gain which they brought into them, when the magistrate did not detect and punish them. Indeed, the plague of leprosy in general may well be considered as one of the punishments in those cases, where it is said, "that man shall bear his iniquity," and yet the criminal escaped the sword of the magistrate. Many expositors endeavour to account in part for this singular disorder, from natural causes; and, likewise, consider many of these rules and restrictions as cautions against infections; but there is not the most remote intimation in these laws, or anywhere in Scripture, that the disorder was at all infectious. The methods to be taken in respect of the leprosy in houses, are very similar to those prescribed in the other cases; and also the ceremonies of purification, when the plague was removed; only no sacrifices were in this case brought to the altar. It might represent the prevalence of sin in families, churches, and nations; and it very aptly described the state of Israel, when idolatry had so infected the whole nation, that, as unclean, it must be demolished, and carried captive to Babylon, the unclean metropolis of idolatry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—When "God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love, wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, quickens us" by his Spirit, we soon evidence the change, by sincerely repenting, and forsaking all our evil ways, we discover a right judgment and disposition of heart, and become the servants of the Lord; but especially we are led, by the ministry of the word, to see the suitableness and preciousness of the atoning blood and the sanctifying grace of Jesus Christ; and, gladly washing in "this fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness," we, in heart and affection, ascend whither the risen Saviour is gone before. They who are thus delivered from the prevailing power of sin, endeavour continually to "cleanse themselves" more and more "from all" remaining "filthiness of flesh and spirit, and to perfect holiness in the fear of God:" and without needless delay, yet with previous examination and serious preparation, they should deem it their duty and privilege to seek admission to the communion of the saints; that with them they may publicly profess their faith, and their grateful love to the Saviour, in the ordinance of his appointment. Considering themselves as bought with a price, they now desire to do all in the name of Christ, and through him "to glorify God with body and spirit, which are his." This is the true cleansing of a leper, and his subsequent admission into the courts of the Lord's house; or the consecration of an unclean sinner to the spiritual priesthood.—Scott.

CHAP. XV. CEREMONIAL UNCLEANNESS.—The reasons given for all these laws (which, we are ready to think, might very well have been spared) we have, ver. 31. 1. "Thus shall ye separate the children of Israel" (for to them only, and their servants and proselytes, these laws pertained,) "from their uncleanness:" that is, (1.) By these laws they were taught their privilege and honour, that they were "purified unto God a peculiar people," and were intended by the holy God for a kingdom of priests, a holy nation; for that was a defilement to them which was not so to others. (2.) They were also taught their duty, which was to preserve the honour of their purity, and to keep themselves from all sinful pollutions. It was easy for them to argue, that, if those pollutions which were natural, unavoidable, involuntary, their affliction and not their sin, rendered them for the time so odious, that they were not fit for communion either with God or man, much more abominable and filthy were they, if they sinned against the light and law of nature, by drunkenness, adultery, fraud, and the like sins, which defile the very mind and conscience. And if these ceremonial pollutions could not be done away but by sacrifice and offering, something greater and much more valuable must be expected and depended upon for the purifying of the soul from the uncleanness of sin. 2. Thus shall ye prevent their dying in their uncleanness by the hand of God's justice, if, while they were under any of these defilements, they should come near the sanctuary. Note, It is a dangerous thing to die in our uncleanness: and it is our fault if we do, since we have not only fair warning given us, but also such gracious provision made by his gospel for our cleansing, if at any time we be defiled. 3. In all these laws there seems to be a special regard had to the honour of the tabernacle, which none must approach to in their uncleanness, that they "defile not my tabernacle." Infinite Wisdom took this course to preserve in the minds of that careless people a continual dread of, and veneration for, the manifestations of God's glory and presence among them in his sanctuary. Now that the tabernacle of God was with men, familiarity would be apt to breed contempt, and therefore the law made so many things of frequent incidence to be ceremonial pollutions, and to involve an incapacity of drawing near to the sanctuary, (making death the penalty,) that so they might approach with great caution and reverence, and serious preparation, and fear of being found unfit. Thus they were taught ever to draw near to God with an awful, humble sense of their distance and danger, and an exact observance of every thing that was required, in order to their safety and acceptance. And what duty must we learn from all this? Let us bless God that we are not under the yoke of these carnal ordinances; that, as nothing can destroy us, so nothing can defile us, but sin. They may now partake of the Lord's supper, who durst not then eat of the peace-offerings. And the defilement we contract by our sins of daily infirmity, we may be cleansed of in secret by the renewed acts of repentance and faith, without bathing in water, or bringing an offering to the door of the tabernacle.—Henry.

25 And if a woman have an issue of her blood [r]many days out of the time of her separation, or if it run beyond the time of her separation; all the days of the issue of her uncleanness shall be as the days of her separation: she shall be unclean.

26 Every bed whereon she lieth all the days of her issue shall be unto her as the bed of her separation: and whatsoever she sitteth upon shall be unclean, as the uncleanness of her separation.

27 And whosoever toucheth those things shall be unclean, and [s]shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water,[7] and be unclean until the even.

28 But if she be cleansed of her issue, then she shall [t]number to herself seven days, and after that she shall be clean.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, after [b]the death of the two sons of Aaron, when they offered before the LORD, and died;

2 And the LORD said unto Moses, Speak unto Aaron thy brother, that [b]he come not at all times into the holy place within the vail, before the mercy-seat, which is upon the ark: [c]that he die not: for I will appear [d]in the cloud upon [e]the mercy-seat.

4 He shall put on the [i]holy linen coat, and he shall have the linen breeches upon his flesh, and shall be girded with the linen girdle, and with the linen mitre shall he be attired: these are holy garments; [k]therefore shall he wash his flesh in water, and so put them on.

5 And he shall take of the congregation of the children of Israel, [l]two kids of the goats for a sin-offering, and one ram for a burnt-offering.

6 And Aaron shall offer his bullock of the sin-offering, [m]which is for himself, and make [n]an atonement for himself, and for his house.[1]

8 And Aaron shall [p]cast lots upon the two goats;[2] one lot for the LORD, and the other lot for the *scape-goat.

9 And Aaron shall bring the goat [q]upon which the LORD's lot [†]fell, and offer him for a sin-offering.

10 But the goat, on which the lot fell to be [r]the scape-goat,[3] shall be presented alive before the LORD, [s]to make an atonement with him, and to [t]let him go for a scape-goat into the wilderness.

11 ¶ And Aaron shall bring [u]the bullock of the sin-offering, which is for himself, and shall make an atonement for himself, and for his house, and shall kill the bullock of the sin-offering, which is for himself.

12 And he shall take a censer full of burning coals of fire [x]from off the altar before the LORD, and his hands full of [y]sweet incense beaten small, and bring it within the vail.

13 And he shall put the incense upon the fire before the LORD, that [z]the cloud of the incense may cover the mercy-seat that is upon the testimony, that he die not.

14 And he shall take of [a]the blood of the bullock, and sprinkle it with his finger upon the mercy-seat eastward: and before the mercy-seat shall he sprinkle of the blood with his finger seven times.

REASON OF THESE LAWS.—These laws were principally intended to impress the minds of the Israelites with reverence for the sanctuary; on the one hand, to show them what need they had of circumspection and purity of heart and life, in order to worship the holy God with acceptance; and on the other hand, that being sinners in a world full of temptations and defilements, they would continually need forgiveness, through the great atonement typified by all the sacrifices, and the sanctification of the Spirit shadowed forth by all the purifications. While they were encamped in the desert, it would not be very burdensome to bring the prescribed oblations; but after they were settled in Canaan, many of them at a great distance from the tabernacle, this would become much more difficult. We may, however, observe, that many of the cases stated, only required such washings as might anywhere be performed; and that those respecting which sacrifices were appointed, would more rarely occur; and provided these were brought when the person who had been unclean first came to the sanctuary, it would suffice, though distance or other hinderances prevented its being done immediately, at the expiration of the seven days.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—We have great cause for thankfulness, that we need fear no defilement but that of sin; and have no occasion for any of these ceremonial and burdensome purifications; yet, when we consider how nearly we are beset with occasions of moral uncleanness, by day and by night, alone and in company, nay, sleeping as well as awake, we may well say with David, "Who can understand his errors? Cleanse thou me from my secret sins." And these laws may remind us that God sees all those things which are totally concealed from human eyes, and escape the censure of mortal men. Being unholy creatures, and having to do with such a holy God, we must for ever have been banished from his presence, had he not said, "from all their filthiness will I cleanse them;" and both provided the fountain for our purification, and appointed the means. In the daily exercise of self-examination, repentance, and faith in the one sin-offering of Christ; and by daily prayer for his sanctifying grace, we seek and find this purification, and this purity of heart with which we shall be admitted "to see God." Whilst we observe the rule of God's word, and aim at his glory, through Jesus Christ, all things become pure to us: but every thing is an occasion of increasing and communicating defilement to the impenitent and unbelieving. With serious recollection and humble reverence we should approach our holy heart-searching God in his ordinances: and in our daily walk be careful to "possess our vessels in sanctification and honour;" consulting expediency, and avoiding excess in things most lawful, and being careful not to be brought under the power of any. Many of our diseases may remind us of our personal transgressions: all our infirmities evince that we are sinners: thence we should learn patience, and take occasion to humble ourselves before God; more earnestly to seek forgiveness; and to wait with cheerful expectation for the coming of him "who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working, whereby he is able even to subdue all things to himself."—Scott.

CHAP. XVI. SCAPE-GOAT.—The word rendered "the scape-goat," is Azazel, or Gnazazel, and is compounded of Gnes, a goat, and azal, to go away: signifying "the goat which went away." But the Jews say, that the place, to which the goat was led, is intended, and not the goat itself. Probably, however, our translation is as expressive of the meaning of the type, as any other for which it could be changed. The other goat was allotted to the Lord, to be sacrificed to him; and this was sent away into a separate place, at a distance from the tents and dwellings of Israel. The dying goat represented Christ suffering for our sins; "the scape-goat," Christ rising to effectuate the purposes of his death, in the actual forgiveness and justification of his believing people. A goat was clean by the law, yet not cleanly as the sheep in the opinion of man; nay, goats are the emblem of the wicked in the representation of the day of judgment, Matt xxv. 31, 32: thus Christ seemed to men a sinner, but was absolutely sinless; and when numbered of God as a sacrifice. Two kids of the goats having been provided as a sin-offering, it was decided by lot, which should be slain, and which should escape. A lot is a solemn appeal to God in a doubtful matter relative to practice, as an oath is in testimonies and engagements: and each of them ought to be the last resource, when other methods of decision fail; and used as a solemn act of religion, or not at all. It is therefore an unanswerable objection to all lotteries and games of chance, that they are a profanation of a religious ordinance; for so it is everywhere spoken of in Scripture. They are an appeal to God to decide, (for, "the lot is cast into the lap, but the whole disposal of it is of the LORD,") in a matter of covetousness or of diversion; and so, from a species of "taking his name in vain," not much unlike rash and profane swearing in trifling conversation, or when men are striking bargains.—Scott.

DISMISSAL OF THE GOAT.—The goat was sent away immediately by the hand of a fit person, pitched upon for the purpose, into a wilderness, a land not inhabited: and God allowed them to make this construction of it, that the sending away of the goat was the sending away of their sins by a free and full remission; ver. 22. "He shall bear upon him all their iniquities." The losing of the goat was a sign to them, that "the sins of Israel should be sought for and not found," Jer. l. 20. The later Jews had a custom to tie one shred of scarlet cloth to the horns of the goat, and another to the gate of the 16 And he shall make [d]an atonement for the holy place, because of the uncleanness of the children of Israel, and because of their transgressions in all their sins, and so shall he do for the tabernacle of the congregation that [e]remaineth among them, in the midst of their uncleanness.

17 And there shall be [f]no man in the tabernacle of the congregation, when he goeth in to make an atonement in the holy place, until he come out, [g]and have made an atonement for himself, and for his household, and for all the congregation of Israel.

28 And he that burneth them [b]shall wash his clothes, and bathe his flesh in water, and afterward he shall come into the camp.

29 ¶ And this shall be a statute for ever unto you: that [c]in the seventh month, on the tenth day of the month, ye [d]shall afflict your souls,[7] and [e]do no work at all, whether it be one of your own country, or a stranger that sojourneth among you.

30 For on that day shall the priest make an atonement for you, [f]to cleanse you, that ye may be clean from all your sins before the LORD.

31 It shall be [g]a sabbath of rest unto you, and ye shall afflict your souls by a statute for ever.

33 And he shall make [l]an atonement for the holy sanctuary; and he shall make an atonement for the tabernacle of the congregation, and for the altar; and he shall make an atonement for the priests, and for all the people of the congregation.

temple, or to the top of the rock where the goat was lost, and they concluded that if they turned white, as they say it usually did, the sins of Israel were forgiven, as it is written, "Though your sins have been as scarlet, they shall be as wool;" and they add, that, for forty years before the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, the scarlet cloth never changed colour at all; which is a fair confession, that, having rejected the substance, the shadow stood them in no stead. 1. The high priest must then put off his linen garments in the tabernacle, and leave them there, the Jews say, never to be worn more by himself or any other, for they made new ones every year; and he must bathe himself in water, put on his rich clothes, and then offer both his own and the people's burnt-offerings, ver. 23, 24. When we have the comfort of our pardon, God must have the glory of it. If we have the benefit of the sacrifice of atonement, we must not grudge the sacrifices of acknowledgment. And it should seem the burning of the fat of the sin-offering was deferred till now, ver. 25, that it might be consumed with the burnt-offerings. 2. The flesh of both those sin offerings, whose blood was taken within the vail, was to be all burnt, not upon the altar, but at a distance without the camp, to signify both our putting away of sin by true repentance and the spirit of burning, and God's putting it away by a full remission, so that it shall never rise up in judgment against us. 3. He that took the scape-goat into the wilderness, and they that burned the sin offering were to be looked upon as ceremonially unclean, and must not come into the camp till they had washed their clothes and bathed their flesh in water. Which signified the defiling nature of sin; even the sacrifice, which was but made sin, was defiling: also the imperfection of the legal sacrifices; they were so far from taking away sin, that even they left some stain upon those that touched them.—Henry.

GREAT DAY OF ATONEMENT.—None except the high priest was allowed to perform the solemn service of this day; and "he could not continue by reason of death:" it was therefore appointed that he, among Aaron's descendants, who was anointed to the high priesthood, through succeeding generations, should thus make atonement for the sanctuary, the priests, and the people, once every year. Moses anointed and consecrated Aaron, and probably Eleazar; but it is not expressly said by whom the high priests, in succession, should be anointed. It is generally thought that the eldest son of the high priest, if a proper person, or the next in succession was previously anointed and consecrated, that he might officiate, if any thing occurred to prevent the high priest, as sickness, or ceremonial uncleanness; and then, of course, he entered on that office when his predecessor died. It is probable, in this case, that the high priest himself anointed his successor; otherwise, in ordinary circumstances, we may suppose that the chief of the priests, in age or authority, anointed the eldest of the sons of the deceased high priest, who had no defect or impediment. The words rendered, "whom he shall anoint," seem only to mean, who shall be anointed; and may be rendered, "whom One shall anoint." Many learned men imagine that these atonements expiated nothing but the guilt contracted by transgressing the ceremonial law; and they seem to think it actually prevailed for the full and final pardon of these offences to all for whom they were offered; but the varied expressions used on this occasion, shows that all kinds of sins were alike atoned for, ver. 16, 21; and the apostle's argument proves that no sin was thus actually pardoned, as to the conscience. All true believers using these as means of grace, were pardoned and accepted for the sake of the great Anti-type, and his atonement: the temporal punishment for sins of every kind was averted by the offering in that case instituted; but there were many crimes for which no sacrifice was appointed. The annual expiation of national guilt, however, prevented the forfeiture of the national covenant; but, in idolatrous times, it was either utterly neglected or very carelessly attended to, and when the substance came all these shadows lost their use and efficacy: for the words rendered "everlasting," and "for ever," in this connection mean perpetual during that typical dispensation.—Scott.

CHAP. XVII. PLACE OF SACRIFICE.—The language of this passage evidently means, that the Israelites, while in the wilderness, must not kill any of those animals which were appointed to be sacrificed, even for food, elsewhere, either in the camp, or without, but must bring them all as peace-offerings to the door of the tabernacle; that the blood might be sprinkled, the fat burnt on the altar, and a due portion allotted to the priest, according to the laws before given. It may be supposed that few animals, in proportion to the multitudes of Israel, would at this time be slain; the manna being their principal sustenance: and when they came into Canaan, and many of them lived far from the sanctuary, they might kill cattle for food in any place, Deut. xii. 15. In the meanwhile, the transgression of this law would be imputed to any Israelite as a capital crime, even as if he had committed murder; and, if the magistrate did not punish him, God himself would "cut him off from among his people." This law was intended to honour the Divine institutions, and to put an end to the custom of offering sacrifices "in the open field," or in any place indiscriminately, by habituating the people to bring all their oblations to the tabernacle; nay, to present the animals slain for food as a sacrifice to God.

MIXED MULTITUDE.—A mixed multitude accompanied Israel out of Egypt, many of whom, probably, had before this returned; but some might still continue, and strangers from other parts might come on different occasions. None of these, however, were per-priest, [h] and offer them for peace-offerings unto the LORD.

6 And the priest shall [i] sprinkle the blood upon the altar of the LORD, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and [k] burn the fat for a sweet savour unto the LORD.

7 And they shall no more offer their sacrifices [1] unto devils, [2] after whom they have [m] gone a whoring. This shall be a statute for ever unto them throughout their generations.

8 And thou shalt say unto them, Whatsoever man there be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers which sojourn among you, [n] that offereth a burnt-offering or sacrifice,

9 And bringeth it not unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, to offer it unto the LORD; even that man shall be cut off from among his people.

10 ¶ And whatsoever man there be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, [o] that eateth any manner of blood; [p] I will even set my face against that soul that eateth blood, [3] and will cut him off from among his people. [4]

11 For the life of the flesh is in the blood, and [q] I have given it to you upon the altar, to make an atonement for your souls: for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul.

12 Therefore I said unto the children of Israel, No soul of you shall eat blood, [r] neither shall any stranger that sojourneth among you eat blood.

13 And whatsoever man there be of the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, which * hunteth and catcheth any beast [5] or fowl that may be eaten, he shall even [s] pour out the blood thereof, and cover it with dust.

14 For it is [t] the life of all flesh, the blood of it is for the life thereof: therefore I said unto the children of Israel, Ye shall eat the blood of no manner of flesh: for the life of all flesh is the blood thereof: whosoever eateth it shall be cut off.

15 ¶ And [u] every soul that eateth [†] that which died of itself, or that which was torn with beasts, whether it be one of your own country, or a stranger, he shall [x] both wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even: then shall he be clean.

16 But if he wash them not, nor bathe his flesh; then [y] he shall bear his iniquity.

18 Neither shalt thou take [†] a wife to her sister, [q] to vex her, to uncover her nakedness, beside the other in her life-time.

19 ¶ Also thou shalt not approach unto a woman to uncover her nakedness, [r] as long as she is put apart for her uncleanness.

20 Moreover, [s] thou shalt not lie carnally

mitted in the camp of Israel, while sojourning in the wilderness, or afterwards, as residing among them in the land of Canaan; to offer sacrifices of any kind to their idols or any sacrifice even to JEHOVAH, except at the sanctuary: and if any one resolutely violated this law, he as well as the rebellious Israelite, would be cut off from among his people. It is certain that, in after ages, many uncircumcised persons brought sacrifices to the temple, which were offered by the priests in their behalf, though they themselves might not enter into the inner court: and it does not appear that this was a violation of the law.—Scott.

BLOOD NOT TO BE EATEN.—A reason is given for this law, ver. 11, because "it is the blood that makes atonement for the soul;" and "therefore" it was appointed to make atonement with, because "the life of the flesh is blood:" the sinner deserved to die, therefore the sacrifice must die; now the blood being so the life, that ordinarily beasts were killed for man's use by the drawing out of all their blood, God appointed the sprinkling or pouring out of the blood of the sacrifice upon the altar, to signify that the life of the sacrifice was given to God instead of the sinner's life, and as a ransom or counter-price for it; therefore "without shedding of blood there was no remission," Heb. ix. 22. For this reason they must eat no blood, and, 1. It was then a very good reason; for God would, by this means, preserve the honour of that way of atonement which he had instituted, and keep up in the minds of the people a reverent regard to it. The blood of the covenant being then a sensible object, no blood must be either eaten, or trodden under foot as a common thing; as they must have no ointment or perfume like that which God ordered them to make himself. But, 2, This reason is now superseded, which intimates that the law itself was ceremonial, and is now no longer in force: the blood of Christ, who is come, (and we are to look for no other,) is that alone which makes atonement for the soul, and of which the blood of the sacrifices was an imperfect type: the coming of the substance does away the shadow. The blood of beasts is no longer the ransom, but Christ's blood only.—Henry.

CHAP. XVIII. LAW OF MARRIAGE.—Marriage is a divine institution; that, and the Sabbath, the eldest of all others, of equal standing with man upon the earth: it is intended for the comfort of human life, and the decent and honourable propagation of the human race, such as became the dignity of man's nature above that of the beasts. It is "honourable in all," and these laws are for the support of the honour of it. It was requisite that a divine ordinance should be subject to divine rules and restraints, especially because it concerns a thing wherein the corrupt nature of man is as apt as in any thing to be wilful and impetuous in its desires, and impatient of check. Yet these prohibitions, beside their being enacted by an incontestible authority, are in themselves highly reasonable and equitable. 1. By marriage two were to become one flesh, therefore those that before were in a sense one flesh by nature, could not, without the greatest absurdity, become one flesh by institution; for the institution was designed to unite those who before were not united. 2. Marriage puts an equality between husband and wife; "Is she not thy companion, taken out of thy side?" Therefore if those who before were superior and inferior, should intermarry, (which is the case in most of the instances here laid down,) the order of nature would be taken away by a positive institution, which must by no means be allowed. The inequality between master and servant, noble and ignoble, is founded in consent and custom, and there is no harm done if that be taken away by the equality of marriage; but the inequality between parents and children, uncles and nieces, aunts and nephews, either by blood or marriage, is founded in nature, and is therefore perpetual, and cannot without confusion be taken away by the equality of marriage, the institution of which, though ancient, is subsequent to the order of nature. The relations forbidden are most of them plainly described; and it is generally laid down as a rule, that what relations of a man's own he is bound up from marrying with, the same relations of his wife he is likewise forbidden to marry with, for they two are one. That law which forbids marrying a brother's wife, ver. 16, had an exception peculiar to the Jewish state, that if a man died without issue, his brother, or next of kin, should marry the widow, and raise up seed to the deceased, Deut. xxv. 5, for reasons which held good only in that commonwealth; and therefore now that those reasons have ceased, the exception ceases, and the law is in force, that a man must in no case marry his brother's widow. That article, ver. 18, which forbids a man to "take a wife to her sister," supposes a connivance at polygamy, as some other laws then did, (Exod. xxi. 10; Deut. xxi. 15,) but forbids a man's marrying two sisters, as Jacob did, because between them who had before been equal, there would be apt to arise greater jealousies and animosities than between wives that were not so nearly related. If the sister of the wife be taken for the concubine, or secondary wife, nothing can be more vexing in her life, or as long as she lives.—Henry. Ver. 18. Some think that this verse contains an express prohibition of polygamy: supposing the word sister merely to signify a wife, which the person spoken of had already married. But though the Mosaic law contains no explicit allowance of polygamy, yet there is no other passage which favours the interpretation of this text as a direct law against it, and many things in the whole subsequent history imply a connivance at it. The context also seems to suggest a more literal interpretation; namely, the marrying of two sisters, either at once, or the one after the other. This conduct in Jacob proved a source of vexation both to Leah and Rachel, who were more jealous of 21 And thou shalt not let any of thy seed [t]pass through the fire [u]to Molech, neither shalt thou [x]profane the name of thy God: I am the LORD.

22 Thou shalt not lie with [y]mankind, as with womankind: it is abomination.

23 Neither shalt thou lie with any [z]beast to defile thyself therewith: neither shall any woman stand before a beast to lie down thereto: it is [a]confusion.

24 [b]Defile not ye yourselves in any of these things: [c]for in all these the nations are defiled which I cast out before you.

25 And [d]the land is defiled: [e]therefore I do visit the iniquity thereof upon it, and the land itself [f]vomiteth out her inhabitants.

26 Ye shall therefore [g]keep my statutes and my judgments, and shall not commit any of these abominations; neither any of your own nation, [h]nor any stranger that sojourneth among you:

27 (For all these [i]abominations have the men of the land done, which were before you, and the land is defiled;)

28 That the land [k]spue not you out also, when ye defile it, as it spued out the nations that were before you.

29 For whosoever shall commit any of these abominations, even the souls that commit them shall be [l]cut off from among their people.

30 Therefore shall ye keep mine ordinance, that ye commit not any one of these [m]abominable customs, which were committed before you, and that ye defile not yourselves therein: [n]I am the LORD your God.

A repetition of sundry laws.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 Speak unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, and say unto them, [a]Ye shall be holy: for I the LORD your God am holy.

3 Ye shall [b]fear every man his mother and his father, and [c]keep my sabbaths: I am the LORD your God.

4 Turn ye [d]not unto idols, nor make to yourselves [e]molten gods: I am the LORD your God.

5 And if ye offer [f]a sacrifice of peace-offerings unto the LORD; [g]ye shall offer it at your own will.

6 It [h]shall be eaten the same day ye offer it, and on the morrow: and if ought remain until the third day, it shall be burnt in the fire.

7 And if it be eaten at all on the third day, it is [i]abominable; [k]it shall not be accepted.

8 Therefore every one that eateth it shall bear his iniquity, because he hath profaned the hallowed thing of the LORD: and that soul shall be cut off from among his people.

9 And when [l]ye reap the harvest of your land, thou shalt not wholly reap the corners of thy field, neither shalt thou gather the gleanings of thy harvest.

10 And thou shalt not [m]glean thy vineyard, neither shalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard: [n]thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger: I am the LORD your God.

11 ¶ Ye [o]shall not steal, neither deal falsely, neither [p]lie one to another.

12 And [q]ye shall not swear by my name falsely, neither shalt thou [r]profane the name of thy God: I am the LORD.

13 Thou shalt not [s]defraud thy neighbour, neither rob him; [t]the wages of him that is hired shall not abide with thee all night until the morning.

14 Thou shalt not [u]curse the deaf, nor put a stumbling-block before the blind, but shalt [x]fear thy God: I am the LORD.

15 Ye shall do [y]no unrighteousness in judgment; thou shalt not respect the person of the poor, nor honour the person of the mighty: but in righteousness shalt thou judge thy neighbour.

16 Thou shalt not go up and down [z]as a tale-bearer among thy people; neither shalt thou [a]stand against the blood of thy neighbour: I am the LORD.

17 Thou shalt not [b]hate thy brother in thine heart: thou shalt in any wise [c]rebuke thy neighbour, [*]and not suffer sin upon him.

18 Thou shalt not [d]avenge, nor bear any grudge against the children of thy people, but [e]thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself: I am the LORD.

19 ¶ Ye shall keep my statutes. Thou shalt not let [f]thy cattle gender with a diverse kind: thou shalt not sow thy field with [g]mingled seed: neither shall a garment mingled of linen and woollen come upon thee.

20 And whosoever lieth carnally with a woman that is a bondmaid [†]betrothed to an husband, and not at all redeemed, nor freedom given her; [‡]she shall be scourged: [h]they shall not be put to death, because she was not free.

21 And he shall bring his [i]trespass-offering unto the LORD, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, even a ram for a trespass-offering.

22 And the priest shall make an atonement for him with the ram of the trespass-offering before the LORD, for his sin which he hath done: [k]and the sin which he hath done shall be forgiven him.

each other than of the handmaidens whom they willingly gave to their husband: and perhaps it would be found on trial, that those who before had lived together in the intimate equality of this near relationship, would be more apt to rival each other, if married to the same man, than strangers would be: at least their jealousies and bickerings would be more unseemly and distressing. The words "in her lifetime," may be joined in construction with "to vex her," as meaning "to vex her during all the rest of her life;" otherwise they would seem to imply an allowance to marry the sister of a deceased wife, which we can hardly suppose was intended; seeing a woman might not in ordinary cases marry the brother of her deceased husband. These are all the restrictions on marriage, which are contained in the Divine law; and such as pride, covetousness, or human policy have superadded, do not seem to have proved beneficial to mankind.—Scott.

CHAP. XIX. OBEDIENCE OF CHILDREN.—God commanded that children be obedient to their parents, ver. 3, "Ye shall fear every man his mother and his father." 1. The fear here required is the same with the honour commanded by the fifth commandment. See Mal. i. 6. It includes inward reverence and esteem, outward expressions of respect, obedience to the lawful commands of parents, care and endeavour to please them and make them easy, and to avoid every thing that may offend and grieve them, and incur their displeasure. The Jewish doctors ask, "What is this fear that is owing to a father?" And they answer, "It is not to stand in his way, nor to sit in his place, nor to contradict what he says, or to carp at it, not to call him by his name, either living or dead, but 'My Father,' or 'Sir;' it is to provide for him if he be poor, and the like." 2. Children, when they grow up to be men, must not think themselves discharged from this duty; every man, though he is a wise man, and a great man, yet must reverence his parents, because they are his parents. 3. The mother is put first, which is not usual, to show the duty is equally owing to both; if the mother survive the father, still she must be reverenced and obeyed. 4. It is added, "and keep my Sabbaths." If God provides by his law for the preserving of the honour of parents parents must use their authority over their children, for the preserving of the honour of God, particularly the honour of his Sabbaths, the custody of which is very much committed to parents by the fourth commandment, "Thou, and thy son, and thy daughter." The ruin of young people has often been observed to begin in the contempt of their parents, and the profanation of the Sabbath-day. Fitly therefore are these two precepts here put together in the beginning of this abridgment of the statutes, "Ye shall fear every man his mother and his father, and keep my Sabbaths." Those are hopeful children, and likely to do well, that make conscience of honouring their parents, and keeping holy the Sabbath-day. 5. The reason added to both these precepts is, "'I am the Lord your God;' the Lord of the Sabbath, and the God of your parents."

BROTHERLY LOVE.—We are here required to put off all malice, and to put on brotherly love, ver. 18. 1. We must be ill-affected to none: "Thou shalt not avenge, nor bear any grudge;" to the same purport with that, ver. 17, "Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thine heart;" for malice is murder begun. If our brother has done us an injury, we must not return it upon him, that is avenging; we must not upon every occasion upbraid him with it, that is bearing a grudge; but we must both forgive it and forget it, for thus we are forgiven of God. It is a most ill-natured thing, and the bane of friendship, to retain the resentment of affronts and injuries, and to let that "sword devour for ever." 2. We must be well-affected to all: "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." We often wrong ourselves, but we soon forgive ourselves those wrongs, and they do not at all lessen our love to ourselves; and in like manner we should love our neighbour. Our Saviour has made this the second great commandment of the law, Matt. xxii. 39, and the apostle shows how it is the summary of all the laws of the second table, Rom. xiii. 9, 10; Gal. v. 14. We must love our neighbour as truly as we love ourselves, and without dissimulation; we must evidence our love to our neighbour in the same way as that by which we evidence our love to ourselves, preventing his hurt, and procuring his good, to the utmost of our power. We must do to our neighbour as we would be done to ourselves, Matt. vii. 12, putting "our souls into his soul's stead," Job xvi. 4, 5. Nay, we must in many cases deny ourselves for the good of our neighbour, as St. Paul, 1 Cor. ix. 19, &c. Herein the gospel goes beyond even that excellent precept of the law; for Christ, by laying down his life for us, has taught us even to "lay down our lives for the brethren," in some cases, 1 John iii. 16, and so to love our neighbour better than ourselves.—Henry.

PUNISHMENT OF IMPURITY.—As the woman spoken of in ver. 20—22, was neither fully married, nor yet in any degree set at liberty, her case was made different from a free woman espoused to a husband; for then both parties would have been adjudged to death. Yet the crime was heinous, and must not be passed over; but "there must be a scourging," a most severe scourging, as the word implies;) probably of the man as well as of the woman; and he must also offer a trespass-offering for his sin, as the ransom of his life; which the woman, having no property, was not expected to do. The legal sacrifices could not atone for sin, as pertaining to the conscience, in such a manner that the impenitent should be actually forgiven in respect of the eternal judgment; and the penitent and believing, whether sin-offerings or trespass-offerings were required or not, were certainly justified or pardoned through the Saviour that was to come: there was there-

Of giving seed to Molech, 1. Of wizards, 6. Of cursing parents, &c., 9.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Again, thou shalt say to the children of Israel, [a]Whosoever he be of the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn in Israel, that [b]giveth any of his seed unto Molech, he shall surely be put to death: [c]the people of the land shall stone him with stones.

3 And [d]I will set my face against that man, and will cut him off from among his people: because he hath given of his seed unto Molech, [e]to defile my sanctuary, and to [f]profane my holy name.

4 And if the people of the land do any ways [g]hide their eyes from the man, when he giveth of his seed unto Molech, [h]and kill him not;

fore no real difference in the situation of the two parties; both were rescued from death; and their final salvation, or the contrary, depended on something widely different from the ceremonial institutions. The words rendered "betrothed to an husband," are translated in the margin, "reproached by, or for man;" as if they implied that the woman was previously of suspicious character; and this has been by some considered as the ground of the difference between this and other cases of a similar kind.

VARIOUS LAWS.—Whatever was unfit for use was accounted uncircumcised, till that unfitness was removed, or ceased. The fruit of young trees was therefore to be thus deemed unclean, during three years; and either to be destroyed before it was ripe, or left to perish. On the fourth year, it was consecrated as a thank-offering to praise the Lord: but in the fifth, the owner might eat of it, and expect a blessing to render the increase abundant. Some suppose that this law had reference to the idolatrous customs of the surrounding nations: but it also might be intended to teach the people to wait patiently the Lord's time for every desirable good, and not to yield to the eagerness of their natural appetites and inclinations. Thus he also waits for the maturity of our fruits of righteousness; though our first attempts to glorify him may be unmeet for that purpose, even as the fruits of these young trees, whilst they were to be accounted uncircumcised.—Use, &c. ver. 26. Astrological calculations, or other attempts at prediction or fortune-telling; the use of spells and charms for the cure of diseases; with many other practices, too frequent among professing Christians, are attempts to revive this worship of Satan, and should be abhorred as his very ordinances: being means used to get help and information elsewhere, instead of depending on God, submitting to him, and waiting for all needful good from him, in the use of lawful means, ver. 31. Some explain the words, "Thou shalt not mar the corners of thy beard," ver. 27, as forbidding the Israelites to shave their beards: but if this had been intended, it would have been more plainly expressed. The meaning of the several clauses is not very clear; but they all were doubtless superstitious practices of the heathens. And perhaps the prohibition of the 29th verse has also relation to the very common practices of many idolaters in honour of their infamous deities: and nothing could so promote lewdness as to make it a part of religion.—Scott.

CHAP. XX. MOLOCH.—Moloch is supposed to have been an idol, worshipped by the Ammonites and neighbouring nations, to whom they sometimes offered their children as sacrifices; according to some authors, in the following manner: An image of an enormous size, made of hollow iron, was heated with great fires beneath; and when it was sufficiently hot, they put the children into its arms, where they were burnt to death: meantime their cries were drowned in the noise of drums or trumpets, and of musical instruments played on for that purpose. At other times the children only passed through a fire, or between two fires, and were thus devoted to this demon. The former, however, is supposed to be here meant.—Nothing can be conceived more horrible than such practices. Nothing can more demonstrate the madness and desperate wickedness of the human heart, and the power of Satan, than that there should be any need to enact such laws as this, and to prohibit parents from such cruelty to their own offspring on pain of death; except it be that, notwithstanding, numbers of Israelites were, from age to age, so infatuated as to persist in this barbarity! Committed by them, it was the highest imaginable contempt of the name, sanctuary, and worship of God; and a shameful violation of their national covenant. So that the very strangers, who were allowed to sojourn among them, must pay that respect to the sanctuary of JEHOVAH, who dwelt among his people, and to his holy name, as to stand aloof from such abominations, on the same penalty as native Israelites: and if the criminal escaped the sword of the magistrate, through vile connivance, God determined to execute vengeance on him, on his family, and on all who abetted this spiritual whoredom.—Ten thousands of sacrifices equally horrible, are offered in India, annually; and connived at by British rulers.—Scott.

SEVERAL LAWS RE-ENJOINED.—These verses repeat and inculcate what had been said before; for to that unthinking, forgetful people it was requisite that there should be line upon line, and that general rules, with their reasons, should be frequently insisted on, for the enforcement of particular laws, and making them more effectual. Three things we are here reminded of: 1. Their dignity. (1.) They had the "Lord for their God," ver. 24. They were his, his care, his choice, his treasure, his jewels, his kingdom of priests, ver. 26, "that ye should be mine." Happy the people, and truly great, that is in such a case. (2.) Their God was a holy God, ver. 26, infinitely advanced above all others. His holiness is his glory, and it was their honour to be related to him, while their neighbours were the infamous worshippers of impure and filthy spirits. (3.) The great God had separated them from other people, ver. 24, and again, ver. 26. Other nations were the common, they were the enclosure, beautified and enriched with peculiar privileges, and designed for peculiar honours: let them therefore value themselves accordingly, preserve their honour, and not lay it in the dust, by walking in the way of the heathen. 2. Their duty; this is inferred from their dignity. God had done more for them than for others, and therefore expected more from them than from others. And what is it that the Lord their God requires, in consideration of the great things done and designed? (1.) "Ye shall keep all my statutes," ver. 22; and there was all the reason in the world that they should, for the statutes were their honour, and obedience to them would be their lasting comfort. (2.) "Ye shall not walk in the manners of the nations," nakedness, it is a wicked thing; and they shall be cut off in the sight of their people: he hath uncovered his sister's nakedness; he shall bear his iniquity.

18 And if a man shall lie with a woman [g]having her sickness, and shall uncover her nakedness, he hath [*]discovered her fountain, and she hath uncovered the fountain of her blood: and both of them shall be cut off from among their people.

19 And thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy [h]mother's sister, nor of thy father's sister; for he [i]uncovereth his near kin: they shall bear their iniquity.

20 And if a man shall lie with his [k]uncle's wife, he hath uncovered his uncle's nakedness: they shall bear their sin; they shall die [l]childless.[s]

21 And if a man shall take [m]his brother's wife, it is [t]an unclean thing; he hath uncovered his brother's nakedness: they shall be childless.

22 ¶ Ye shall therefore keep all my [n]statutes, and all my [o]judgments, and do them; that the land whither I bring you to dwell therein [p]spue[4] you not out.

23 And ye shall not walk [q]in the manners of the nations which I cast out before you: for they committed all these things, and [r]therefore I abhorred them.

24 But [s]I have said unto you, Ye shall inherit their land, and I will give it unto you to possess it, a land that floweth with milk and honey: I am the LORD your God, [t]which have separated you from other people.

25 Ye shall therefore [u]put difference between clean beasts and unclean, and between unclean fowls and clean: and ye shall not make your souls [x]abominable by beast, or by fowl, or by any manner of living thing that [y]creepeth on the ground, which I have separated from you as unclean.

26 And ye shall be holy unto me: for I [z]the LORD am holy, and have [a]severed you from other people, that ye should be mine.

27 A man also or woman that hath [b]a familiar spirit, or that is a wizard, shall surely be put to death: they shall stone them with stones; [b]their blood shall be upon them.

ver. 23. Being separated from them, they must not associate with them, nor learn their ways. The manners of the nations were bad enough in them, but would be much worse in God's people. (3.) Ye shall "put difference between clean and unclean," ver. 25. This is holiness, to discern between things that differ, not to live at large, as if we might say and do any thing, but to speak and act with caution. (4.) "Ye shall not make your souls abominable," ver. 25. Our constant care must be to preserve the honour, by preserving the purity of our own souls, and never to do any thing to make them abominable to God and to our own consciences. 3. Their danger. (1.) They were going into an infected place, ver. 24, "Ye shall inherit their land." A land "flowing indeed with milk and honey," which they would have the comfort of, if they kept their integrity; but withal, it was a land full of idols, idolatries, and superstitious usages, which they would be apt to fall in love with, having brought from Egypt with them a strange disposition to take that infection. (2.) If they took the infection, it would be of pernicious consequence to them. The Canaanites were to be expelled for these very sins; "they committed all these things, and therefore I abhorred them," ver. 23. See what an evil thing sin is, it provokes God to abhor his own creatures, whereas otherwise he delights in the works of his own hands. And if the Israelites trod in the steps of their impiety, they must expect that the land would spue them out too, ver. 22, as he had told them before, chap. xviii. 28. If God spared not the natural branches, but broke them off, neither would he spare those who were grafted in, if they degenerated. Thus the rejection of the Jews stands for a warning to all Christian churches, to take heed lest the kingdom of God be taken from them. Those that sin like others, must expect to smart like them; and their profession of relation to God will be no security to them.—Henry.

CHAP. XXI. PURITY OF THE PRIESTHOOD.—They must take care not to disparage themselves in their mourning for the dead. All that mourned for the dead were supposed to come near the body, if not to touch it: and the Jews say, "It made a man ceremonially unclean to come within six feet of a dead corpse;" nay, it is declared, (Num. xix. 14,) that all who come into the tent where the dead body lies shall be unclean seven days. Therefore all the mourners that attended the funeral could not but defile themselves, so as not to be fit to come into the sanctuary for seven days: for this reason, it is ordered, 1. The priests were never to put themselves under this incapacity of coming into the sanctuary, unless it were for one of their nearest relations, ver. 1—3. He was permitted to do it for a parent or a child, for a brother or an unmarried sister, and therefore, no doubt, (though this is not mentioned,) for the wife of his bosom; for Ezekiel, a priest, would have mourned for his wife, if he had not been particularly prohibited, Ezek. xxiv. 17. By this allowance, God put an honour upon natural affection, and favoured it so far as to dispense with the attendance of his servants for seven days, while they indulged themselves in their sorrow for the death of their dear relations; but, beyond this period, weeping must not hinder sowing, nor their affection to their relations take them off from the service of the sanctuary. Nor was it at all allowed for the death of any other, no, not of a "chief man among the people," as some read it, ver. 4. They must not defile themselves, no, not for the high priest himself, unless thus akin to them. Though "there is a friend that is nearer than a brother," yet the priests must not pay this respect to the best friend they had, except he were a relation, lest, if it were allowed for one, others would expect it, and so they should be frequently taken off from their work: and it is hereby intimated that there is a particular affection to be reserved for those that are thus near akin to us; and when any such are removed by death, we ought to be affected with it, and lay it to heart, as the near approach of death to ourselves, and an alarm to us to prepare to follow. 2. That they must not be extravagant in the expressions of their mourning, no, not for their dearest relations, ver. 5. Their mourning must not be either, (1.) Superstitious, according to the manner of the heathen, who cut off the hair, and let out their blood, in honour of the imaginary deities which presided (as they thought) in the congregation of the dead, that they might engage them to be propitious to their departed friends. Even the superstitious rites used of old at funerals, are an indication of the ancient belief of the immortality of the soul, and its existence in a separate state: and though the rites themselves were forbidden by the divine law, because they were performed to false gods, yet the decent respect which nature teaches, and the law allows, to be paid to the remains of our deceased friends, shows that we are not to look upon them as lost. Nor, (2.) Must it be passionate or immoderate. Note, God's ministers must be examples to others of patience under affliction, particularly that which touches in a very tender part, the death of their near relations. They are supposed to know more than others of the reasons why we must "not sorrow as those that have no hope," 1 Thess. iv. 13, and therefore they ought to be eminently calm and composed, that they may be able to comfort others with the same comforts wherewith they are themselves comforted of God. The people were forbidden to mourn for the dead with superstitious rites, chap. xix. 27, 28, and what was unlawful to them was much more unlawful to the priest. The reason given for their peculiar care not to defile themselves, we have, ver. 6, "because" they offered "the bread of their God," even "the offerings of the Lord made by fire," which were the provisions of God's house and table. They are highly honoured, and therefore must not stain their honour by making themselves slaves to their passions; they are 21 No man that hath a blemish of the seed of Aaron the priest shall come nigh to offer the offerings of the LORD made by fire; he hath a blemish, he shall not come nigh [d]to offer the bread of his God.

Divers laws

22 He shall eat the bread of his God,[4] both [e]of the most holy, and [f]of the holy;

23 Only he shall not [g]go in unto the vail, nor come nigh unto the altar, because he hath a blemish; that he [h]profane not my sanctuaries: for I the LORD do sanctify them.

24 And Moses told it unto [i]Aaron, and to his sons, and unto all the children of Israel.

CHAP. XXII.

The priests in their uncleanness to abstain from holy things, 1. Who may eat of the holy things, 10. Divers laws for offerings, 18.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 Speak unto Aaron and to his sons, that they [a]separate[1] themselves from the holy things of the children of Israel, and that they [b]profane not my holy name in those things which they [c]hallow unto me: I am the LORD.

3 Say unto them, Whosoever he be of all your seed, among your generations, that goeth unto the holy things, which the children of Israel hallow unto the LORD, [d]having his uncleanness upon him, that soul shall be cut off [e]from my presence: I am the LORD.

4 What man soever of the seed of Aaron is [f]a leper, or hath a *running issue, he shall not eat of the [g]holy things [h]until he be clean. And whoso toucheth any thing that is [i]unclean by the dead, or a [k]man whose seed goeth from him;

5 Or [l]whosoever toucheth any creeping thing, whereby he may be made unclean, [m]or a man of whom he may take uncleanness, whatsoever uncleanness he hath;

6 The [n]soul which hath touched any such shall be unclean until even, and shall not eat of the holy things, unless he wash his flesh with water.

7 And when the sun is down, he shall be clean, and shall afterward eat of the holy things; [o]because it is his food.

8 That which [p]dieth of itself, or is torn with beasts, he shall not eat, to defile himself therewith: I am the LORD.

9 They shall therefore keep mine ordinance, lest they [q]bear sin for it, and die therefore, if they profane it: I the LORD do sanctify them.

10 ¶ There shall [r]no stranger[2] eat of the holy thing: a sojourner of the priest, or an hired servant, shall not eat of the holy thing.

11 But if the priest buy any soul with [t]his money, he shall eat of it, and he that is born in his house: they shall eat of his meat.

12 If the priest's daughter also be married unto [‡]a stranger, she may not eat of an offering of the holy things.

13 But if the priest's daughter be a widow, or divorced, and have no child, and is [s]returned unto her father's house, [t]as in her youth, she shall eat of her father's meat; but there shall no stranger eat thereof.

14 ¶ And if a man [u]eat of the holy thing unwittingly, then he shall put the fifth part thereof unto it, and shall give it unto the priest, with the holy thing.

15 And they shall not [x]profane the holy things of the children of Israel, which they offer unto the LORD;

16 Or [§]suffer them [y]to bear the iniquity of trespass, when they eat their holy things; [z]for I the LORD do sanctify them.

17 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

18 Speak unto Aaron, and to his sons, and unto all the children of Israel, and say unto them, [a]Whatsoever he be of the house of Israel, or [b]of the strangers in Israel, that will offer his oblation for all his [c]vows,[3] and for all his [d]free-will-offerings, which they will offer unto the LORD for a burnt-offering;

19 Ye shall offer at your own will [e]a male without blemish of the beeves, of the sheep, or of the goats.

20 But whatsoever [f]hath a blemish,[4] that shall ye not offer: for it shall not be acceptable for you.

21 And whosoever offereth a sacrifice [g]of peace-offerings unto the LORD, [h]to accomplish his vow or a free-will-offering, in beeves or [i]sheep, it shall be perfect to be accepted: there shall be no blemish therein.

22 [j]Blind, or broken, or maimed, or having a wen, or scurvy, or scabbed, ye shall not offer these unto the LORD, nor make an offering by fire of them upon the altar unto the LORD.

23 Either a bullock or a [*]lamb that hath any thing superfluous or lacking in his parts, that mayest thou offer for a free-will-offering; but for a vow it shall not be accepted.

24 Ye shall not offer unto the LORD that which is bruised, or crushed, or [k]broken, or cut; neither shall ye make any offering thereof in your land.

25 Neither from [l]a stranger's hand shall ye offer [m]the bread of your God of any of these; because their corruption is in them, and blemishes be in them: they shall not be accepted for you.

26 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, continually employed in sacred service, and therefore must not be either diverted from, or disfitted for, the services they were called to. If they pollute themselves, they profane the name of their God on whom they attend: if the servants are rude, and of ill behaviour, it is a reflection upon the master, as if he kept a loose and disorderly house. Note, All that either offer or eat the bread of our God must be holy in all manner of conversation, or else they profane that name which they pretend to sanctify.—Henry.

CHAP. XXII. PECULIAR SANCTITY OF THE PRIESTHOOD.—Those that had a natural blemish, though they were forbidden to do the priest's work, yet they were allowed to eat of the holy things; and the Jewish writers say, that, "to keep them from idleness, they were employed in the wood-room, to pick out that which was worm-eaten, that it might not be used in the fire upon the altar; they might also be employed in the judgment of leprosy:" but those that were under any ceremonial uncleanness, which possibly they contracted by their own fault, might not so much as eat of the holy things while they continued in their pollutions. 1. Some pollutions were permanent, as a leprosy, or a running issue, ver. 4. These separated the people from the sanctuary, and God would show that they were so far from being less objectionable, that really they were more so in a priest. 2. Others were more transient, as the touching of a dead body, or any thing else that was unclean, from which, after a certain time, a man was cleansed by bathing his flesh in water, ver. 6. But whoever was thus defiled might not "eat of the holy things," under pain of God's highest displeasure, who said it, and ratified the saying, "That soul shall be cut off from my presence," ver. 3. Our being in the presence of God, and attending upon him, will be so far from securing us, that it will but the more expose us to God's wrath, if we dare to draw nigh to him in our uncleanness. The destruction shall come "from the presence of the Lord," 2 Thess. i. 9, as the fire by which Nadab and Abihu came "from before the Lord." Thus they who profane the holy word of God will be cut off by that word which they make so light of; it shall condemn them. They are again warned of their danger, if they eat the holy thing in their uncleanness, (ver. 9,) "lest they bear sin, and die therefore." Note, (1.) Those contract great guilt who profane sacred things, by touching them with unhallowed hands. Eating the holy things signified an interest in the atonement; but if they ate of them in their uncleanness, they were so far from lessening their guilt, that they increased it; they shall "bear sin." (2.) Sin is a burthen which, if infinite mercy prevent not, will certainly sink those that bear it; they shall "die therefore." Even priests may be ruined by their pollutions and presumptions.

PERFECTION OF THE VICTIMS.—Whatever was offered in sacrifice to God should be without blemish, otherwise it could not be accepted. This had often been mentioned in the particular institutions of the several sorts of offering. Now, here, 1. They are told what was to be accounted a blemish which rendered a beast unfit for sacrifice; if it was blind, or lame, had a wen, or the mange, ver. 22; if it was bruised, or crushed, or broken, or cut, ver. 24; that is, as the Jewish writers understand it, if it was, any of these ways, castrated: if bulls and rams were made into oxen and wethers, they might not be offered. 2. A difference is made between what was brought as a free-will offering, and what was brought as a vow, ver. 23. And though none that had any of the forementioned blemishes might be brought for either, yet if a beast had any thing superfluous or lacking, that is, as the Jews understand it, if there was a disproportion, or inequality between those parts that are pairs, when one eye, or ear, or leg, is bigger than it should be, or less than it should be; if there was no other blemish than this, it might be accepted for a free-will offering, which a man had not before laid himself, nor had the divine law laid him, under any particular obligation to; but for a vow it might not be accepted. Thus God would teach us to make conscience of performing our promises to him very exactly, and not afterward to abate in quantity or value of what we had solemnly engaged to devote to him. What was, before the vow, in our own power, as in the case of a free-will offering, afterward is not, Acts v. 4. 3. It is again and again declared, that no sacrifice should be accepted, if it was thus blemished, ver. 20, 21. According to this law great care was taken to search all the beasts that were brought to be sacrificed, that there might, to a certainty, be no blemish in them. A blemished sacrifice might not be accepted even "from the hand of a stranger," though to such all possible encouragement should be given to do honour to the God of Israel, ver. 25. By this it appears that strangers were expected to come to the house of God from a "far country," (1 Kings viii. 41, 42,) and that they should be welcome, and their offerings accepted, as those of Darius, Ezra vi. 9, 10; Isa. lvi. 6, 7.—That no beast should be offered in sacrifice before it was eight days old, ver. 26, 27. It was provided before, that the firstlings of their cattle, which were to be dedicated to God, should not be brought him till after the eighth day, Exod. xxii. 30. Here it is provided, that no creature should be offered in sacrifice, till it was eight days old complete. Sooner than that, it was not fit to be used at men's tables, and therefore not at God's altar. The Jews say, "It was because the Sabbath sanctifies all things, and nothing should be offered to God till at least one Sabbath had passed over it." It was in conformity to the law of circumcision, which children were to receive on the eighth day. Christ was sacrificed for us, not in his infancy, though then Herod sought to slay him, but in the prime of his time.—That the flesh of their thank-offerings should be eaten on the same day that they were sacrificed, ver. 29, 30. is brought forth, then it shall be [n]seven days under the dam; and from the eighth day and thenceforth it shall be accepted for an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

a repetition of what we had before, chap. vii. 15; xix. 6, 7. The chapter concludes with such a general charge as we have often met with, to "keep God's commandments," and not to "profane his holy name," ver. 31, 32. Those that profess God's name, if they do not make conscience of keeping his commandments, do but profane his name. The general reasons are added: God's authority over them, "I am the Lord:" His interest in them, I am "your God:" The title he had to them by redemption, "I brought you out of the land of Egypt," on purpose that I might be your God: The designs of his grace concerning them, "I am the Lord that hallow you:" And the resolutions of his justice, if he had not honour from them, to "get him honour" upon them, I will be "hallowed among the children of Israel." God will be a loser in his glory by no man at last; but sooner or later will recover his right, either in the repentance of sinners, or in their ruin.—Henry.

CHAP. XXIII. FEAST OF FIRST-FRUITS.—We have an order for the offering of a sheaf of the first-fruits, upon the second day of the feast of unleavened bread: the first is called the Sabbath, because it was observed as a Sabbath, ver. 11, and on the morrow after, they had this solemnity. A sheaf or handful of new corn was brought to the priest, who was to heave it up, in token of his presenting it to the "God of heaven," and to wave it to and fro before the Lord, as the "Lord of the whole earth," and this should be accepted for them as a thankful acknowledgment of God's mercy to them in clothing their fields with corn and of their dependence upon God, and desire toward him, for the preserving of it to their use. For it was the expression both of prayer and praise, ver. 11. A lamb for a burnt-offering was to be offered with it, ver. 12. As the sacrifice of animals was generally attended with meat-offerings, so this sacrifice of corn was attended with a burnt-offering, that bread and flesh might be set together on God's table. They are forbidden to eat of their new corn till this handful was offered to God; for it was fit, if God and Israel feast together, that he should be served first. And the offering of this sheaf of first-fruits in the name of the whole congregation, did, as it were, sanctify to them their whole harvest, and give them a comfortable use of all the rest; for then we may "eat our bread with joy," when we have, in some measure, performed our duty to God, and God has accepted our works, for thus all our enjoyments become clean to us. Now, this law was given now, though there was no occasion for putting it in execution till they came to Canaan: in the wilderness they sowed no corn; but God's feeding them there with "bread from heaven" obliged them hereafter not to grudge him his share of their bread out of the earth. We find that when they came into Canaan, the manna ceased upon the very day that the sheaf of first-fruits was offered, they [illegible] of the old corn the day before, Josh. v. 11, and then on this day they offered the first-fruits, by which they became entitled to the new corn too, ver. 12, so that there was no more occasion for manna.—Henry.

FEAST OF PENTECOST.—By the time of the "feast of weeks," or the Pentecost, the barley-harvest, which was eared and nearly ripe at the feast of the passover, would be gathered in; and the wheat harvest ripe and in part reaped. Of this latter the people therefore must make another acknowledgment "out of their habitations," as the first-fruits were "from the field:" in fine flour made into bread, and leavened as for food, not for sacrifice. This was to be accompanied with burnt-offerings, a sin-offering, and peace-offerings: all denoting their unworthiness in themselves, their acceptance through Christ, devotedness to God, consequent comfortable use of their substance, and communion with God and with their brethren. Two bullocks and but one ram are mentioned in Numbers; but the reason of this difference is not evident: perhaps it was left to the option of the priests or rulers, Num. xxviii. 27. The feast is supposed to have been held in remembrance of the giving of the law, fifty days after the departure of the people out of Egypt; and to have looked forward to the pouring out of the Holy Spirit, fifty days after Christ's resurrection; who having finished and presented his perfect obedience and acceptable sacrifice, as the first-fruits unto the Father; through the gift of the Holy Ghost to the apostles, and by the conversion of three thousand souls at once, presented the other first-fruits of the Christian church, as an earnest of that harvest of innumerable multitudes, which hath been gathering, and shall yet be gathered, in all ages and nations to the end of time.—Scott.

FEAST OF TRUMPETS.—Here is, 1. The institution of the feast of trumpets, on the first day of the seventh month, ver. 24, 25. That which was now the seventh month had been reckoned the first month, and the year of jubilee was still to begin with this month, chap. xxv. 8, so that this was their new-year's day. It was to be as their other yearly Sabbaths, a day of holy rest, "Ye shall do no servile work therein;" and a day of holy work, "Ye shall offer an offering to the Lord;" concerning which particular directions were afterward given, Num. xxix. 1. That which is here made peculiar to this festival is, that it was "a memorial of blowing of trumpets." They blew the trumpet every new moon, Ps. lxxxi. 3; but in the new moon of the seventh month it was to be done with more than ordinary solemnity; for they began to blow at sunrise and continued till sunset. Now, (1.) This is here said to be a memorial, perhaps, of the sound of the trumpet upon mount Sinai when the law was given which must never be forgotten. Some think that it was a memorial of the creation of the world, which is supposed to have been in autumn; for which reason this year, till now, the first month. The [illegible] of the month, shall ye have a sabbath, a memorial of blowing of trumpets, an holy convocation.

25 Ye shall do no servile work therein; but ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

26 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

27 Also on [t]the tenth day of this seventh month there shall be a day of atonement: it shall be an holy convocation unto you; and ye shall [k]afflict your souls, and [l]offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

28 And ye shall do no work in that same day: for it is [m]a day of atonement, to make an atonement for you before the LORD your God.

29 For whatsoever soul it be [n]that shall not be afflicted in that same day, he shall be cut off from among his people.

30 And whatsoever soul it be that doeth any work in that same day, [o]the same soul will I destroy from among his people.

31 Ye shall do no manner of work: it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations in all your dwellings.

32 It shall be unto you [p]a sabbath of rest, and ye shall [q]afflict your souls: in the ninth day[6] of the month at even, from even unto even, shall ye [†]celebrate your sabbath.

33 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

34 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, [r]The fifteenth day of this seventh month shall be the feast of tabernacles[7] for seven days unto the LORD.

35 On the first day shall be [s]an holy convocation: ye shall do no servile work therein.

36 [t]Seven days ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD: on [u]the eighth day shall be an holy convocation unto you; and ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD: it is a [‡]solemn assembly; and ye shall do no servile work therein.

37 These are [x]the feasts of the LORD, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations, to offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD, a burnt-offering, and a meat-offering, a sacrifice, and drink-offerings, every thing upon his day:

38 Beside [y]the sabbaths of the LORD, [z]and beside your gifts, and beside all your vows, and beside all your free-will-offerings, which ye give unto the LORD.

39 Also in the fifteenth day of the seventh month, [a]when ye have gathered in the fruit of the land, ye shall keep a feast unto the LORD seven days: [b]on the first day shall be a sabbath, and on the eighth day shall be a sabbath.

40 And ye shall take you on the first day [c]the [§]boughs[§] of goodly trees, branches [d]of palm-trees, and the boughs of thick trees, and willows of the brook;[9] and ye shall [e]rejoice before the LORD your God seven days.

41 And ye shall keep it a feast unto the LORD seven days in the year: it shall be a statute for ever in your generations; ye shall celebrate it in the seventh month.

42 Ye shall dwell [f]in booths seven days: all that are Israelites born shall dwell in booths;

43 That [g]your generations may know that I made the children of Israel to dwell in booths, when I brought them out of the land of Egypt: I am the LORD your God.

44 And Moses [h]declared unto the children of Israel the feasts of the LORD.

4 He shall order the lamps upon the [c]pure candlestick before the LORD continually.

5 ¶ And thou shalt take fine flour, and bake [d]twelve cakes thereof: two tenth-deals shall be in one cake.

which God made the world is called "the voice of his thunder," Ps. civ. 7, fitly therefore was it commemorated by blowing of trumpets; or a memorial of shouting, as the Chaldee renders it; for when the "foundations of the earth were fastened, all the sons of God shouted for joy," Job xxxviii. 6, 7. (2.) The Jewish writers supposed it to have a spiritual signification. Now, at beginning of the year, they were called by this sound of trumpet to shake off their spiritual drowsiness; to search and try their ways and to amend them; the day of atonement was the ninth day after this; and thus they were awakened to prepare for that day, by sincere and serious repentance, that it might be indeed to them a day of atonement. And they say, "The devout Jews exercised themselves more in good works between the feast of trumpets and the day of expiation than at any other time of the year." (3.) It was typical of the preaching of the gospel, by which joyful sound souls were called in to serve God, and keep a spiritual feast to him. The conversion of the nations to the faith of Christ is said to be by the "blowing of a great trumpet," Isa. xxvii. 13. 2. A repetition of the law of the day of atonement, that is, so much of it as concerned the people. (1.) They must on this day rest from all manner of work; and not only from servile works, as on other annual festivals; it must be as strict a rest as that of the weekly Sabbath, ver. 28, 30, 31. The reason is, "For it is a day of atonement." Note, The humbling of our souls for sin, and the making of our peace with God, is work that requires the whole man, and the closest application of mind imaginable, and all little enough. He that would do the work of a day of atonement in its day, as it should be done, had needs lay aside the thoughts of every thing else. On that day God "spake peace unto his people and unto his saints;" and therefore they must lay aside all their worldly business, that they might the more clearly and the more reverently hear that voice of joy and gladness. Fasting days should be days of rest. (2.) They must afflict their souls, and this upon pain of being cut off by the hand of God, ver. 27, 29, 32. They must mortify the body, and deny the appetites of it, in token of their sorrow for the sins they had committed, and the mortifying of their indwelling corruptions. Every soul must be afflicted, because every soul was polluted, and guilty before God: while none have fulfilled the laws of innocency, none are exempt from the law of repentance. Beside that, every man must sigh and cry for the "abominations of the land." (3.) This day must be observed "from even to even;" ver. 32, "ye shall afflict your souls," that is, "Ye shall begin your fast, and the expression of your humiliation, in the 'ninth day of the month at even.'" They were to leave off all their worldly labour, and compose themselves to the work of the day approaching, some time before sunset on the ninth day, and not to take any food (except children and sick people) till after sunset on the tenth day. Note, The eves of solemn days ought to be employed in solemn preparation. When work for God and our souls is to be done, we should not straiten ourselves in time for the doing of it; for how can we spend our time better? Of this Sabbath the rule here is to be understood, "From even unto even shall ye celebrate your Sabbath.

FEAST OF TABERNACLES.—During the first seven days of this feast, all the people were to leave their houses, and the women and children in them, and to dwell in booths made of the boughs of thick trees, particularly palm-trees, ver. 40, 42. The Jews make the taking of the branches to be a distinct ceremony from the making of the booths. It is said indeed, Neh. viii. 15, that they "made their booths of the branches of trees," which they might do, and yet use that further expression of joy, the carrying of palm branches in their hands, which appears to have been a token of triumph upon other occasions, John xii. 13, and is alluded to Rev. vii. 9. The eighth day some make a distinct feast of itself, but it is called, John vii. 37, "that great day of the feast;" it was the day on which they returned from their booths to settle again in their own houses. Now, this feast was to be kept in remembrance of their dwelling in tents in the wilderness. Thus it is expounded here, ver. 43, "That your generations may know," not only by the written history, but by this ocular tradition, "that I made the children of Israel to dwell in booths." Thus it kept in perpetual remembrance the meanness of their beginning, and the low and desolate state out of which God advanced that people. Note, Those that are comfortably fixed, ought often to call to mind their former unsettled state, when they were but little in their own eyes.—Henry.

CHAP. XXIV. THE SHEW-BREAD.—These loaves of bread, one for each tribe, presented before the Lord every week, and afterwards eaten by the priests, might typify Christ, as the bread of life and the continual food of the souls of his people, having offered himself unto God for them. Or they may denote the services of believers, presented before God through him, and accepted for his sake. Or the whole may mean the communion, betwixt our reconciled Father and his adopted children in Christ Jesus; who, as it were, feast at the same table, whilst He delights in the fruits of his Spirit, in their hearts, and they are feasted with his love. The frankincense placed upon each loaf for a memorial, and then burnt upon the altar, may denote either the advocacy of Christ, or the sweet influences of his Spirit, which are a memorial to the Lord, to ensure the acceptance of the believer's person and services. This would be a sweet savour unto God, whilst the bread would be serviceable to the priests; which applies both to the sacrifice of Christ, as honourable to God and beneficial to man, and to the good works of his people, Eph. v. 2; Phil. iv. 18.—The bread and the frankincense formed one offering;

5 That which [d]groweth of its own accord of thy harvest, thou shalt not reap, neither gather the grapes of †thy vine undressed: for it is a year of rest unto the land.

6 And the sabbath of the land shall be meat for you; [e]for thee, and for thy servant, and for thy maid, and for thy hired servant, and for thy stranger that sojourneth with thee,

7 And for thy cattle, and for the beast that are in thy land, shall all the increase thereof be meat.

8 ¶ And thou shalt number [f]seven sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years; and the space of the seven sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years.

9 Then shalt thou cause the trumpet ‡of the [g]jubilee to sound, on the tenth day of the seventh month; in [h]the day of atonement shall ye make the trumpet sound throughout all your land.

10 And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and [i]proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof: it shall be a jubilee[2] unto you: and ye shall return [k]every man unto his possession, and ye shall return every man unto his family.

11 A jubilee shall that fiftieth year be unto you; ye shall not sow, neither reap that which groweth of itself in it, nor gather the grapes in it of thy vine undressed.

12 For it is the jubilee; it shall be holy unto you: ye shall eat the increase thereof out of the field.

13 In the year of this jubilee ye shall return every man unto his possession.

14 ¶ And if thou sell ought unto thy neighbour, or buyest ought of thy neighbour's hand, ye shall not [l]oppress one another.

15 According [m]to the number of years after the jubilee thou shalt buy of thy neighbour, and according unto the number of years of the fruits he shall sell unto thee.

16 According to the multitude of years thou shalt increase the price thereof, and according to the fewness of years thou shalt diminish the price of it: for according to the number of the years of the fruits doth he sell unto thee.

17 Ye shall not therefore oppress one another; but thou [n]shalt fear thy God: for I am the LORD your God.

of which the frankincense, as the part required by the Lord, was burnt upon the altar, among the offerings made by fire to him.

BLASPHEMY.—No doubt, this man (ver. 10) was one of the mixed multitude who accompanied Israel out of Egypt; but it is uncertain whether he had ever professed the religion of Israel. It is supposed that, by reason of the dispute betwixt him and an Israelite, he was brought before the magistrates; and the cause being according to the law of God decided against him, he blasphemed, or cursed Him, before whose tremendous name all heaven adores, and all hell trembles! The words, of the LORD, are added in the translation; but with a sort of solemn reverence are omitted in the original, as if the sacred writer scrupled to mention whose name it was that the man blasphemed, ver. 15, 16. This blasphemer's name is not mentioned; for he, who thus treated the holy name of God, was not distinguished by having his name written in the sacred Scriptures.—Scott.

ITS PUNISHMENT.—Sentence was past upon this offender by the righteous Judge of heaven and earth himself, ver. 14, "Let all the congregation stone him." God could have cut him off by an immediate stroke from heaven, but he would put this honour upon the institution of magistracy, to make use of it for the supporting and vindicating of his own glory in the world. Observe, 1. The place of execution appointed, "Bring him forth without the camp;" to signify their detestation of the crime, they must thus cast out the criminal as an abominable branch, and separate him from them as an unclean thing, and unworthy a place in the camp of Israel. 2. The executioners; "Let all the congregation" do it, to show their zeal for the honour of God's name. Every man should have a stone to throw at him that blasphemes God, reckoning himself nearly concerned in the reproaches cast on God, Ps. lxix. 9. Thus also the greater terror would be cast upon the congregation; they that once helped to stone a blasphemer would ever after dread every thing that bordered upon blasphemy, that looked like it, or looked towards it. 3. The solemnity of the execution; before the congregation stoned him, the witnesses were to "lay their hands upon his head." The Jews say that this was used in the execution of no criminals but blasphemers only; and that it was done with words to this purport, "Thy blood be upon thy own head, for thou thyself hast occasioned it." Let no blame be laid on the law, judges, juries, or witnesses; "if thou scornest, thou alone shalt bear it."—Henry.

CHAP. XXV. SABBATICAL YEAR.—The law of Moses laid a great deal of stress upon the Sabbath, the sanctification of which was the earliest and most ancient of all divine institutions designed for the keeping up of the knowledge and worship of [illegible] among men; that law not only revived the observance of Sabbath-days every [illegible] for the further advancement of the honour of them, added the institution of a Sabbatical year, ver. 4. "In the seventh year shall be a Sabbath of rest unto the land." And hence the Jews collect that vulgar tradition, that after the world has stood six thousand years, (a thousand years being to God as one day,) it shall cease, and the eternal Sabbath shall succeed. A weak foundation on which to build the fixing of that day and hour which it is God's prerogative to know. This Sabbatical year began in September, at the end of harvest, the seventh month of their ecclesiastical year: and the law was 1. That at the seed-time, which immediately followed the end of their ingathering, they should sow no corn in their land, and that they should not in the spring dress their vineyard, and consequently that they should not expect either harvest or vintage the next year. 2. That what their ground did produce of itself, they should not claim any property or use in, otherwise than from hand to mouth, but leave it for the poor servants, strangers, and cattle, ver. 5—7. It must be a Sabbath of rest to the land; they must neither do any work about it, nor expect any fruit from it; all annual labours must be intermitted in the seventh year, as much as daily labours on the seventh day. The Jews say, "They began not to reckon for the Sabbatical year till they had completed the conquest of Canaan, which was in the eighth year of Joshua; the seventh year after that was the first Sabbatical year, and so the fiftieth year was the jubilee." This year there was to be a general release of debts, (Deut. xv. 1, 2,) and a public reading of the law in the feast, (Deut. xxxi. 10, 11,) to make it the more solemn. Now (1.) God would hereby show them that he was their landlord, and that they were tenants at will under him. Landlords are wont to stipulate with their tenants, when they shall break up their ground, how long they shall till it, and when they shall let it rest: God would thus give, grant, and convey, that good land to them, under such provisos and limitations, as should let them know that they were not proprietors, but dependants on their Lord. (2.) It was a kindness to their land to let it rest some times, and would keep it "in heart," (as our husbandmen express it,) for posterity, whose satisfaction God would have them to consult, and not to use the ground as if it were designed for one age only. (3.) When they were thus for a whole year taken off from all country-business, they would have the more leisure to attend the exercises of religion, and to get the knowledge of God and his law. (4.) They were hereby taught to be charitable and generous, and not to engross all to themselves, but to be willing that others should share with them in the [illegible] God's bounty, which the earth brought forth of itself. (5.) They were [illegible] in a constant dependance upon the Divine Providence [illegible] upon you in the sixth year, and it shall bring forth fruit for [t]three years.

22 And ye shall sow the [u]eighth year, and eat yet of [x]old fruit until the ninth year; until her fruits come in ye shall eat of the old store.

23 ¶ The land [y]shall not be sold [§]for ever: [z]for the land is mine; for [a]ye are strangers and sojourners with me.

24 And in all the land of your possession ye shall grant a [b]redemption for the land.

25 If thy brother be waxen poor, and hath sold away some of his possession, and [c]if any of his kin come to redeem it, then shall he redeem that which his brother sold.

26 And if the man have none to redeem it, and [‖]himself be able to redeem it;

27 Then [d]let him count the years of the sale thereof, and restore the overplus unto the man to whom he sold it, that he may return unto his possession.

28 But if he be not able to restore it to him, then that which is sold shall remain in the hand of him that hath bought it until the year of jubilee: and in the jubilee it shall go out, and [e]he shall return unto his possession.

29 And if a man sell a dwelling-house[3] in a walled city, then he may redeem it within a whole year after it is sold: within a full year may he redeem it.

30 And if it be not redeemed within the space of a full year, then the house that is in the walled city shall be established for ever to him that bought it, throughout his generations: it shall not go out in the jubilee.

31 But the houses of the villages, which have no wall round about them, shall be counted as the fields of the country; [*]they may be redeemed, and they shall go out in the jubilee.

32 Notwithstanding, [†]the cities of the Levites, and the houses of the cities of their possession, may the Levites redeem at any time.

33 And if [†]a man purchase of the Levites, then the house that was sold, and the city of his possession, shall go out in the year of jubilee: [g]for the houses of the cities of the Levites are their possession among the children of Israel.

34 But [h]the field of the suburbs of their cities may not be sold; for it is their perpetual possession.

35 ¶ And if [i]thy brother be waxen poor, and [‡]fallen in decay with thee, [k]then thou shalt [§]relieve him; yea, though he be [i]a stranger, or a sojourner: that he may live with thee.

36 Take thou no [m]usury of him,[4] or increase: but [n]fear thy God; that thy brother may live with thee.

37 Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury, nor lend him thy victuals for increase.

[3] One part of the regulation, respecting the release in the year of jubilee, deserves our notice: it did not extend to houses in cities; these, if not redeemed within one year after they were sold, were alienated for ever. This circumstance must have given property in the country a decided preference over property in cities, and induced every Jew to reside on and improve his land, and employ his time in the care of flocks and agriculture.—Graves.

(6.) They were reminded of the easy life man lived in paradise, when he ate of every good thing, not, as since, in the sweat of his face. Labour and toil came in with sin. (7.) They were taught to consider how the poor lived, that did neither sow nor reap, even by the blessing of God upon a little. Lastly, This year of rest typified the spiritual rest which all believers enter into through Christ, our true Noah, who giveth us comfort and rest "concerning our work, and the toil of our hands, because of the ground which the Lord hath cursed," Gen. v. 29. Through him we are eased of the burthen of worldly care and labour, both being sanctified and sweetened to us, and we are enabled and encouraged to live by faith. And as the fruits of this Sabbath of the land were enjoyed in common, so the salvation wrought out by Christ is a common salvation; and this Sabbatical year seemed to have been revived in the Christian church, when the believers had "all things common," Acts ii. 44.—Henry.

Year of Jubilee.—After seven returns of the Sabbatical year had been completed, notice was ordered to be given, throughout the land, for the observance of the year of jubilee, on the evening of the great day of atonement; and while the people were seeking forgiveness of their own sins from God, it might be hoped, that they would be more disposed to kindness to each other. Thus the proclamation of liberty and salvation by the gospel results from the atoning sacrifice of the Redeemer, and is intended to cheer the hearts of the humble and penitent.—This notice was given by a peculiarly sonorous and animated sound of trumpets; for this seems to be the meaning of the word rendered "jubilee."—The language, used by the sacred writer, absolutely decides that the year of jubilee was not the same with the seventh Sabbatical year, but the year afterwards, that is, the fiftieth, and not the forty-ninth year: and similar language concerning the day of Pentecost, which can be urged against this opinion, namely, the difficulty of the nation subsisting for two years without sowing their ground, is afterwards expressly obviated, Note, ver. 20—22.—This institution would form a suitable trial of the people's faith, and served to illustrate the power and faithfulness of God, whenever they observed it: but we read scarcely any thing of the year of jubilee after its institution.—The Sabbatical year commenced in the autumn of the sixth year: at the close of the eighth year, (or the year of jubilee,) according to the civil computation of time, when two full years had passed without sowing or reaping, the people were directed to make preparation for the harvest in the ninth year, and it was expressly promised, that the fruits of the sixth year should suffice, not only for the Sabbatical year, (which the supposed inquiry more directly mentions,) but also for the year of jubilee, and till the crop was ripe in the following year. As the sixth year brought forth fruits for three years, and not merely for two; it is evident that both the Sabbatical year, and the year of jubilee, were distinctly provided for. They would not sow, from the sixth to the eighth year, omitting two seed-times; nor reap from the sixth to the ninth year, omitting two harvests. Can any thing be more explicit?—No legislator, unless conscious of being divinely inspired, would have committed himself by enacting such a law as this: nor can any thing of the kind be found among the systems of jurisprudence of any other nations, ancient or modern.—It therefore stands as a proof that Moses acted, not according to the dictates of human policy, but by the express direction of the Almighty God.—"How incredible is it, that any legislator would have ventured to propose such a law as this: or any people have submitted to it, except in consequence of the fullest conviction on both sides, that a divine authority enacted this law, and that a peculiar providence would constantly facilitate its execution!—Nothing could have produced this conviction, but the experience, or belief, of such miraculous interpositions as the history of the Pentateuch details. The very existence of this law is a standing monument that when it was given, the Mosaic miracles were fully believed. Now, the law was coeval with the witnesses of the miracles themselves." (Graves.)

Mitigation of Servitude.—When an Israelite was reduced to poverty, and lived among his brethren as a stranger and sojourner, without any possession or inheritance, they must remember to treat him as a brother, both giving him liberally, and lending him what he wanted without usury. Indeed strangers also seem to be intended.—When a man was sold for some debt, or fraud, for which he could not make restitution, he was liberated at the end of seven years. But if he voluntarily, through poverty, sold himself without limitation of time; or from love to his master, and his wife and children, had refused liberty at the end of seven years; and perhaps if he had been sold for some larger debt, or greater crime, he continued a servant for life, unless the year of jubilee intervened: but then he was set at liberty, and returned with his family to his inheritance. In the mean time, his master must not treat him with rigour as a slave, but with kindness as a hired servant. The Israelites were permitted to keep slaves of other nations; perhaps in order to typify, that none but the true Israel of God participate of that liberty with which Christ hath made his people free. But it was also intended, in order that in this manner the Gentiles might become acquainted with true religion, Gen. xvii. 10—13, xviii. 19; and where the Israelites copied the example of their pious progenitors, there can be no reasonable doubt, but it was overruled to the eternal salvation of many souls. It does not, however, appear from the subsequent history, that the people availed themselves of this allowance to any great extent; for we read but little of slaves from among the Gentiles possessed by them.—In case any of the strangers, who were allowed to sojourn in the land,

Of idolatry, 1. A blessing promised, 3. A curse threatened, 14.

YE shall [a]make you no idols nor graven image, neither rear you up a [*]standing image, neither shall ye set up any [†]image of stone in your land, to bow down unto it: for I am the LORD your God.

2 Ye shall [b]keep my sabbaths, and reverence my sanctuary: I am the LORD.

3 ¶ [c]If ye walk in my statutes, and keep my commandments, and do them;

4 Then [d]I will give you rain in due season, and [e]the land shall yield her increase, and the trees of the field shall yield their fruit.

5 And your [f]threshing shall reach unto the vintage, and the vintage shall reach unto the sowing-time; and ye shall [g]eat your bread to the full, and [h]dwell in your land safely.

6 And [i]I will give peace in the land, and [k]ye shall lie down, and none shall make you afraid; and I will [‡]rid evil beasts out of the land, neither [l]shall the sword go through your land.

7 And ye shall chase your enemies, and they shall fall before you by the sword.

8 And [m]five of you shall chase an hundred, and an hundred of you shall put ten thousand to flight: and your enemies shall fall before you by the sword.

9 For [n]I will have respect unto you, and [o]make you fruitful, and multiply you, and [p]establish my covenant with you.

10 And ye shall [q]eat old store, and bring forth the old because of the new.

11 And I will [r]set my tabernacle among you, and my soul shall not [s]abhor you.

12 And [t]I will walk among you, and [u]will be your God, and ye shall be my people.

13 [x]I am the LORD your God, which brought you forth out of the land of Egypt, that ye should not be their bond-men; and [y]I have broken the bands of your yoke, and made you go upright.

14 ¶ But [z]if ye will not hearken unto me, and will not do all these commandments;

15 And if ye shall [a]despise my statutes, or if your [b]soul abhor my judgments, so that ye will not do all my commandments, but that ye [c]break my covenant:

16 I also will do this unto you; I will even [d]appoint [§]over you [*]terror, [f]consumption, and the burning ague, that shall [g]consume the eyes, and cause sorrow of heart: and [h]ye shall sow your seed in vain; for your enemies shall eat it.

17 And I will [i]set my face against you, and [k]ye shall be slain before your enemies: they that hate you shall reign over you; and ye shall [l]flee when none pursueth you.

18 And if ye will not yet for all this hearken unto me, then I will punish you [m]seven times more for your sins.

19 And [n]I will break the pride of your power; and [o]I will make your heaven as iron, and your earth as brass.

20 And [p]your strength shall be spent in vain: for [q]your land shall not yield her increase, neither shall the trees of the land yield their fruits.

21 And if ye [r]walk contrary unto me, and will not hearken unto me; I will bring seven times more plagues upon you, according to your sins.

22 I will also send [s]wild beasts among you, which shall [t]rob you of your children, and destroy your cattle, and make you few in number; and [u]your high-ways shall be desolate.

23 And if [x]ye will not be reformed by me by these things, but will walk contrary unto me;

24 Then [y]will I also walk contrary unto you, and will punish you yet seven times for your sins.

25 And [z]I will bring a sword upon you, that shall [a]avenge the quarrel of my covenant: and when ye are gathered together within your cities, [b]I will send the pestilence among you; and ye shall be delivered into the hand of the enemy.

26 And when [c]I have broken the staff of your bread, ten women shall bake your bread in one oven, and they shall deliver you your bread again by weight: and ye shall eat, and not be satisfied.

27 And if ye will not for all this hearken unto me, but walk contrary unto me;

28 Then I will walk contrary unto you also [d]in fury; and I, even I, will chastise you seven times for your sins.

29 And [e]ye shall eat the flesh of your sons, and the flesh of your daughters shall ye eat.

30 And [f]I will destroy your high places, and cut down your images, and cast your carcases upon the carcases of your idols, and [g]my soul shall abhor you.

31 And [h]I will make your cities waste,

(as at least refraining from all open acts of idolatry, or violation of the Sabbath, and submitting to the requirements of the "judicial law,") growing rich, should purchase a poor Israelite as a slave, the relations of the slave were allowed the privilege of redeeming him at any time: or if property came into his possession, he might redeem himself; deducting from the purchase-money according to the proportion of years which had passed since his sale, to those which remained till the year of jubilee. And if he were not redeemed before that time, he was then entitled to liberty.—It is not said that his relations were bound to redeem him, but it seems to have been left to their discretion.—The father is not mentioned; for it could hardly be conceived he would let his son sell himself, if he likewise had not been impoverished. The magistrates also were to take care, that strangers did not oppress such Israelites as they kept for servants.—This law exhibited a type of Christ, as our Brother, redeeming us from the bondage of sin and Satan, to be his servants.—Scott.

CHAP. XXVI. DIVINE PROMISES.—These promises to Israel, in case they were obedient, should be understood with a special reference to their national covenant. Whilst they maintained a national regard to the worship, Sabbaths, and sanctuary of God, and did not turn aside to idolatry, he engaged to continue to them various temporal mercies and distinguishing religious advantages. Yet even among the Israelites, individuals were not uniformly prosperous or afflicted, according to their obedience or disobedience; nay, the contrary was so commonly the case, that the prophets and the psalmist, in several places, speak of it as a peculiar temptation; and the royal preacher declares "that all things come alike to all," Eccl. ix. 1, 2. But national prosperity was uniformly, and without one exception, the effect of national obedience, and national judgments the result of national wickedness. Israel indeed was under a peculiar covenant, and no other people is governed exactly according to the same rule: yet still God deals with nations as collective bodies; nothing but regard to religion and righteousness can ensure national prosperity; and wickedness will end in the ruin of any people, especially where the word of God and the light of the gospel are afforded. Individuals will exist, and be judged and recompensed, in a future world; but bodies politic will have no future existence, and are therefore recompensed in this world. Concerning individual Christians, it is enough to say, that the Lord will afford them as much temporal prosperity as his infinite wisdom sees good for them; that in one way or other, their comforts are proportioned to the simplicity and exactness of their obedience; and that they frequently experience the Lord's kindness to them in his providence, and in answer to their prayers, neither according to the letter of these temporal promises or not. Their obedience [illegible] tendency to exempt them from a variety of miseries which others endure; and to secure them many comforts of body, mind, and circumstances, which others do not enjoy: all their crosses and afflictions are needful and useful, sanctified to them, and counterbalanced by inward peace: and upon the whole, even in this world, including their heavenly hope, they have by far the largest proportion of true felicity, notwithstanding all the tribulation and persecution which they endure, the self-denial which they exercise, and the correction of their Father's love. These promises may also be considered as typical of the spiritual prosperity, health, peace, and victory, with which the Lord favours his believing people when walking in his ways, and of the blessings which his church enjoys. From this and similar passages, some learned men have undertaken to show, that the church, before the coming of Christ, had only temporal promises, and that the law of Moses was sanctioned merely by temporal sanctions. This, at first glance, appears very paradoxical to those who consider the language of ancient believers, and the declarations of Christ and his apostles respecting them, Matt. viii. 11, xxii. 32; Heb. xi. 13—16, 26, 35, yet it has not a little perplexed many serious persons. But let it be well considered that "the covenant which was confirmed before," with Abraham and his seed, "of God in Christ, the law which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect." The church of Israel was not deprived of any part of the light previously communicated, when God entered into a national covenant with them; and a Saviour to come, and a future and eternal world, were, beyond all doubt, revealed to the patriarchs, from the very fall of Adam. The examples of Abel, and Enoch, and Noah, and Abraham, recorded by Moses himself, as introductory to the law, powerfully inculcated these grand truths, and many others connected with them. The belief of a Saviour to come, a future state of retribution, and the resurrection of the dead, was generally maintained in the church of Israel, during all succeeding ages, to the coming of our Lord. The law as it concerned individuals, in things pertaining to the conscience, was guarded by eternal sanctions: unbelievers, in the most flourishing times of religion, and most prosperous state of the nation, remained under the curse: believers always were interested in the promises made especially to Abraham; but the nation, as a corporate body, received the law with only temporal sanctions. Indeed, the nature of the case did not admit of any other: though, in every age, the careless and carnal thence deduced erroneous conclusions.—Scott.

DIVINE THREATENINGS.—God himself would be against them; and this is the root and cause of all their misery, 1. "I will set my face against you," ver. 17, that is, I will set my face against you, set myself to ruin you. These proud sinners [illegible] and take those down that [illegible]

[h]and bring your sanctuaries unto desolation, and [i]I will not smell the savour of your sweet odours.

32 And [k]I will bring the land into desolation; and [l]your enemies which dwell therein shall be astonished at it.

33 And [m]I will scatter you among the heathen, and will draw out a sword after you; and your land shall be desolate, and your cities waste.

34 Then [n]shall the land enjoy her sabbaths, as long as it lieth desolate, and ye be in your enemies' land; even then shall the land rest, and enjoy her sabbaths.

35 As long as it lieth desolate it shall rest; [o]because it did not rest in your sabbaths, when ye dwelt upon it.

36 And upon them that are left alive of you [p]I will send a faintness into their hearts in the lands of their enemies; and [q]the sound of a *shaken leaf shall chase them; and they shall flee, as fleeing from a sword; and they shall fall when none pursueth.

37 And [r]they shall fall one upon another, as it were before a sword, when none pursueth: and [s]ye shall have no power to stand before your enemies.

38 And [t]ye shall perish among the heathen, and the land of your enemies shall eat you up.

39 And they that are left of you [u]shall pine away in their iniquity in your enemies' lands; [x]and also in the iniquities of their fathers shall they pine away with them.

40 ¶ If [y]they shall confess their iniquity, and the iniquity of their fathers, with their trespass which they trespassed against me, [z]and that also they have walked contrary unto me;

41 And that I also have walked contrary unto them, and have brought them into the land of their enemies; if then [a]their uncircumcised hearts be [b]humbled, and [c]they then accept of the punishment of their iniquity:

42 Then [d]will I remember my covenant with Jacob, and also my covenant with Isaac, and also my covenant with Abraham will I remember; and [e]I will remember the land.

43 The land also shall be left of them, and [f]shall enjoy her sabbaths, while she lieth desolate without them: [g]and they shall accept of the punishment of their iniquity; because, even because they [h]despised my judgments, and because [i]their soul abhorred my statutes.

44 And yet for all that, when they be in the land of their enemies, [k]I will not cast them away, neither will [l]I abhor them, to destroy them utterly, and [m]to break my covenant with them: for I am the LORD their God.

45 But I will [n]for their sakes remember the covenant of their ancestors, [o]whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt [p]in the sight of the heathen, that I might be their God: I am the LORD.

46 These are [q]the statutes, and judgments, and laws, which the LORD made between him and the children of Israel [r]in mount Sinai, [s]by the hand of Moses.

Concerning vows, 2. No devoted thing may be redeemed, 28. The tithe may not be changed, 32.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, [a]When a man shall make a singular vow, the persons shall be for the LORD by thy estimation.[1]

3 And [b]thy estimation shall be of the male from twenty years old even unto sixty years old, even thy estimation shall be fifty shekels of silver, [c]after the shekel of the sanctuary.

4 And if it be a female, then thy estimation shall be [d]thirty shekels.

5 And if it be from five years old even unto twenty years old, then thy estimation shall be of the male twenty shekels, and for the female ten shekels.

6 And if it be [e]from a month old even unto five years old, then thy estimation shall be of the male five shekels of silver, and for the female thy estimation shall be three shekels of silver.

7 And if it be [f]from sixty years old and above,[2] if it be a male, then thy estimation shall be fifteen shekels, and for the female ten shekels.

8 But if he be [g]poorer than thy estimation,[3] then he shall present himself before the priest, and the priest shall value him; according to his ability that vowed shall the priest value him.

9 ¶ And if it be a beast, whereof men bring an offering unto the LORD, all that any man giveth of such unto the LORD shall be holy.

10 He [h]shall not alter it, nor change it, a good for a bad, or a bad for a good: and if he shall at all change beast for beast, then it and the exchange thereof shall be holy.

11 And if it be any [i]unclean beast,[4] of which they do not offer a sacrifice unto the LORD, then he shall present the beast before the priest;

12 And the priest shall value it, whether it be good or bad: *as thou valuest it, who art the priest, so shall it be.

13 But if he will at all redeem it, [k]then he shall add a fifth part thereof unto thy estimation.

14 ¶ And when a man shall [l]sanctify his house to be holy unto the LORD, then the priest shall estimate it, whether it be good or

1 "The persons" so devoted "shall be for the Lord according to thy estimation;" that is, a value in money shall be set upon them, and that money be applied to holy uses, instead of the persons themselves being actually taken.—PATRICK.

2 In these valuations the Lord divideth man's life into four parts, beginning with manhood, or strength of age, which is the best of our years; then descending to youth, and from youth to childhood; and ending with old age, the rate whereof is less than of youth, and more than of childhood.—AINSWORTH.

4 This may be taken generally for all unclean beasts which men did vow, except the dog, the price whereof might not be brought into the house of the Lord, for any vow (Deut. xxiii. 18). But the Hebrews understand it also of oxen, sheep, or goats, upon which are blemishes, whereby they are become unclean for the altar.—AINSWORTH.

* Heb. according to thy estimation, O priest, &c.

"I will show myself highly displeased at you." 2. "I will walk contrary to you," ver. 24, 28; "with the froward he will wrestle," Ps. xxviii. 26. When God in his providence thwarts the designs of a people, which they thought well-laid, crosses their purposes, breaks their measures, blasts their endeavours, and disappoints their expectations, then he walks contrary to them. Note, There is nothing got by striving with God Almighty, for he will break either the heart or the neck of those that contend with him; will bring them either to repentance or ruin. "I will walk at all adventures with you," so some read; "all covenant loving-kindness shall be forgotten, and I will leave you to common providence." Note, Those that cast God off deserve that he should cast them off. 3. As they continued obstinate, the judgments should increase yet more upon them. If the first sensible tokens of God's displeasure do not attain their end, to humble and reform them, then, ver. 18, "I will punish you seven times more," and again, ver. 21, "I will bring seven times more plagues," and, ver. 24, "I will punish you yet seven times," and, ver. 28, "I, even I, will chastise you seven times for your sins." Note, If lesser judgments do not do their work, God will send greater; for when he "judges he will overcome." If true repentance do not stay process, it will go on till execution be taken out. Those that are obstinate and incorrigible, when they have weathered one storm, must expect another more violent; and how severely soever they are punished, till they are in hell, they must still say, "There is worse behind," unless they repent. If the "founder have" hitherto "melted in vain," Jer. vi. 29, the furnace will be heated "seven times hotter," (a proverbial expression, used Dan. iii. 19,) and again and again "seven times hotter;" and who among us can dwell with such devouring fire? God does not begin with the sorest judgments, to show that he is patient, and delights not in the death of sinners; but, if they repent not, he will proceed to the sorest, to show that he is righteous, and that he will not be mocked or set at defiance. 4. Their misery is completed in that threatening, ver. 30, "My soul shall abhor you." That man is as miserable as he can be, whom God abhors; for his resentments are just and effective. Thus, "if any man draw back," as these are supposed to do, "God's soul shall have no pleasure in him," Heb. x. 38, and he will "spue them out of his mouth," Rev. iii. 16. It is spoken of as strange, and yet too true, "Hath thy soul loathed Zion?" Jer. xiv. 19.

MERCY TO THE PENITENT.—The mercy is described which they should obtain upon their repentance. 1. They should not be abandoned; "Though they have despised my [illegible] for all that I will not cast them away," ver. 43, 44. He speaks as a tender [illegible] God in his heart at the [illegible] a son that has been very provoking, [illegible] the first indices of a church for [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] bad: [m]as the priest shall estimate it, so shall it stand.

15 And if he that sanctified it will redeem his house, [n]then he shall add the fifth part of the money of thy estimation unto it, and it shall be his.

16 ¶ And if a man shall sanctify unto the LORD some part [o]of a field of his possession; then thy estimation shall be according to the seed thereof: [s] [t]an [p]homer of barley-seed shall be valued at fifty shekels of silver.

17 If he sanctify his field from the year of jubilee, according to thy estimation it shall stand.

18 But if he sanctify his field [q]after the jubilee; then the priest shall reckon unto him the money according to the years that remain, even unto the year of the jubilee, and it shall be abated from thy estimation.

19 And if he that sanctified the field will in any wise redeem it; [r]then he shall add the fifth part of the money of thy estimation unto it,[u] and it shall be assured to him.

20 And if he will not redeem the field, or if he have sold the field to another man, it shall not be redeemed any more.

21 But the field, [v]when it goeth out in the jubilee, shall be holy unto the LORD, as a field [w]devoted: the possession thereof shall be the [x]priest's.

22 And if a man sanctify unto the LORD a field which he hath bought, which is not of the fields of [y]his possession;

23 Then the priest shall reckon unto him the worth of [z]thy estimation, even unto the year of the jubilee,[7] and he shall give thine estimation in that day, as a holy thing unto the LORD.

24 In the year of the jubilee the field shall return unto him of whom it was bought, even [a]to him to whom the possession of the land did belong.[8]

25 And [a]all thy estimations shall be according to the shekel of the sanctuary: [b]twenty gerahs shall be the shekel.

26 ¶ Only the [‡]firstling of the beasts, [c]which should be the LORD'S firstling, no man shall sanctify it:[9] whether it be ox or sheep, it is the LORD'S.

27 And if it be of an unclean beast, then he shall redeem it according to thine estimation, and shall add a fifth part of it thereto: or if it be not redeemed, then it shall be sold according to thy estimation.

28 ¶ Notwithstanding, [d]no devoted thing that a man shall devote unto the LORD, of all that he hath, both of man and beast, and of the field of his possession, shall be sold or redeemed: every devoted thing is most holy unto the LORD.

29 None devoted which shall be devoted of men, shall be redeemed: but shall surely be put to death.

30 ¶ And [e]all the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the LORD'S: it is holy unto the LORD.

31 And if a man will [f]at all redeem ought of his tithes, he shall add thereto the fifth part thereof.

32 And concerning the tithe of the herd, or of the flock, even of whatsoever [g]passeth under the rod, the tenth shall be holy unto the LORD.

33 He shall not search whether it be good or bad, [h]neither shall he change it: and if he change it at all, then both it and the change thereof shall be holy: it shall not be redeemed.

34 These are [i]the commandments which the LORD commanded Moses, for the children of Israel [k]in mount Sinai.

THE FOURTH BOOK OF MOSES,

NUMBERS.

THIS book takes its name from the repeated numberings of the people and of the Levites which it records. It derives this name (as the preceding books do theirs) from the Septuagint; but the names of the others stand in the original Greek, while this is translated into English. It is called, in the original, Vayedabber, from the word with which it begins. It opens with an account of the arrangement of the twelve tribes into regular encampments, in four divisions, under their several leaders, around the tabernacle; the care of which, and of all its furniture, was committed to the Levites, in three divisions, according to their families. The history of Israel afterwards proceeds: and the sacred writer, having recorded that instance of rebellion which provoked God "to swear in his wrath that they should not enter into his rest," gives an account of the continuance of the Israelites in the wilderness for above thirty-eight years: and the whole is intermixed with many laws, moral and ceremonial. In confirmation of the united testimony of antiquity, that Moses wrote the books that bear his name, which is uniformly sanctioned by all the sacred writers, and in an especial manner by our Lord and his apostles, it may be useful to the studious reader to notice how constantly the laws and facts of this book are referred to in all the subsequent parts of Scripture, as things of established credit and notoriety; which never could have been the case had not the book been well known among the Israelites.

wards employed "as hewers of wood and drawers of water," and perhaps some others, who refused to redeem themselves, performed menial services to the priests and Levites. Probably these, as well as the Gibeonites, were called "Nethinim," or dedicated persons, of whom we shall read hereafter. Samuel, who was a Levite, was thus dedicated by his mother; and, not being redeemed, he was employed about the sanctuary from his childhood, long before the age when the Levites entered upon their office.—Perhaps some others, who dedicated themselves or their children, were thus employed: yet in general they were allowed, or even ordered, to be redeemed, at the valuation here prescribed; which was equitable and moderate, and was reduced still lower in case of poverty. Children might not thus devote themselves; but their parents might devote them. The women, if not redeemed, would find employment in spinning, weaving, and making the garments for the priests, or washing for them, and in various other ways: as we may suppose the Gibeonitish women, and the wives of the Nethinims did.

REGULATION OF VOWS.—A book of rates is provided here, by which the priests were to go in their estimation. Here is, 1. The rate of the middle-aged between twenty and threescore, these were valued highest, because most serviceable; a male fifty shekels, and the female thirty, ver. 3, 4. The females were then less esteemed, but not so in Christ; for in "Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female," Gal. iii. 28. Note, Those that are in the prime of their time must look upon themselves as obliged to do more in the service of God and their generation, than can be expected either from minors that are not yet arrived to their usefulness, or from the aged that have survived it. 2. The rate of the youth between five years old and twenty was less, because they were then less capable of doing service, ver. 5. 3. Infants under five years old were capable of being vowed to God by their parents, even before they were born, as Samuel was, but not to be presented and redeemed till a month old; that, as one Sabbath passed over them before they were circumcised, so one new moon might pass over them before they were estimated; and their valuation was but small, ver. 6. Samuel, who was thus vowed to God, was not redeemed because he was a Levite, and a particular favourite, and therefore was employed in his childhood in the service of the tabernacle. 4. The aged are valued less than youth, but more than children, ver. 7. And the Hebrews observe, that the rate of an aged woman is two parts to three to that of an aged man, so that in that age the female came nearest to the value of a male, which occasioned (as Bishop Patrick notes it here) this saying among them, "That an old woman in a [illegible] ver. 8. Paul puts a great value upon the aged women, which [illegible] 1 Tim. v. 3. The rate shall be valued [illegible] according [illegible] they must pay, that they might learn not to [illegible] to God, for "he hath no pleasure in fools," Eccl. v. 4. Yet not more than their ability, but, secundum tenementum — according to their possessions, that they might not ruin themselves and their families by their zeal. Note, God expects and requires from men according to what they have, and not according to what they have not, Luke xxi. 4.

CONCLUSION OF LEVITICUS.—The last verse seems to have reference to this whole book, which it is the conclusion of; "These are the commandments which the Lord commanded Moses, for the children of Israel." Many of these commandments are moral and of perpetual obligation; others of them ceremonial, and peculiar to the Jewish economy, which yet have a spiritual significancy, and are instructive to us who are furnished with a key to let us into the mysteries contained in them; for "unto us," by those institutions, "is the gospel preached as well as unto them," Heb. iv. 2. And, upon the whole matter, we may see cause to bless God that "we are not to come to mount Sinai," Heb. xii. 18. 1. That we are not under the "dark shadows" of the law, but enjoy the clear light of the gospel, which shows us "Christ the end of the law for righteousness," Rom. x. 4. The doctrine of our reconcilation to God by a Mediator is not clouded with the smoke of burning sacrifices, but clear by the knowledge of "Christ and him crucified." 2. That we are not under the "heavy yoke" of the law, and the carnal ordinances of it, (as the apostle calls them, Heb. ix. 10,) imposed till the time of reformation, a yoke which "neither they nor their fathers were able to bear," Acts xv. 10, but under the sweet and easy institutions of the gospel, which pronounces those the "true worshippers that worship the Father in spirit and truth," by Christ only, and in his name, who is our Priest, Temple, Altar, Sacrifice, Purification, and All. Let us not therefore think that, because we are not tied to the ceremonial gleanings, feasts, and oblations, a little care, time, and expense, will serve to honour God with. No, but rather have our hearts more enlarged with freewill-offerings to his praise, more inflamed with holy love and joy, and more engaged in seriousness of thought, and sincerity of intention; "having boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, let us draw near with a true heart, and in full assurance of faith," worshipping God with so much the more cheerfulness and humble confidence, still saying, "Blessed be God for Jesus Christ."—Henry.

CHAP. I. THE CENSUS.—A commission is issued out for the numbering of the people of Israel; and David, long after, paid dear for doing it without a commission. 1. The date of this commission, ver. 1. 2. The [illegible] of Israel," [illegible]

In general, the marginal references, if carefully consulted, will most fully establish this point. In particular, the ministrations severally allotted to the priests and Levites; the unbelief and rebellion which excluded this generation of Israel from Canaan; their subsequent wanderings for almost forty years in the wilderness; the conquest of the countries possessed by Sihon and Og; and the settlement of two tribes and a half, east of Jordan—are presupposed as notorious facts in every part of the Sacred Volume. But the prophecies delivered by Balaam, which have already received a most signal accomplishment, not only prove the narrative to be genuine, but the book to be Divinely inspired; for in this manner the Lord has seen good to set his seal to most, if not all, the several books of holy writ.

CHAP. I.

The men of war are numbered, 1, 17. The Levites are exempted, 47.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, [a]in the wilderness of Sinai,[1] [b]in the tabernacle of the congregation, [c]on the first day of the second month, in the second year after they were come out of the land of Egypt, saying,

2 Take ye [d]the sum[2] of all the congregation of [e]the children of Israel, [f]after their families, by the house of their fathers, with the number of their names, every male by their polls;

3 From [g]twenty years old and upward, all that are [h]able to go forth to war in Israel: thou and Aaron shall number them [i]by their armies.

4 And with you there shall be a man of every tribe, [k]every one head of the house of his fathers.

5 ¶ And these are the names of the men that shall stand with you: Of the tribe of Reuben; [l]Elizur, the son of Shedeur.

6 Of Simeon; [m]Shelumiel, the son of Zurishaddai.

7 Of Judah; [n]Nahshon, the son of Amminadab.

8 Of Issachar; [o]Nethaneel, the son of Zuar.

9 Of Zebulun; [p]Eliab, the son of Helon.

10 Of the children of Joseph: of Ephraim; [q]Elishama, the son of Ammihud: of Manasseh; [r]Gamaliel, the son of Pedahzur.

11 Of Benjamin; [s]Abidan, the son of Gideoni.

12 Of Dan; [t]Ahiezer, the son of Ammishaddai.

13 Of Asher; [u]Pagiel, the son of Ocran.

14 Of Gad; [x]Eliasaph, the son of *Deuel.

15 Of Naphtali; [y]Ahira, the son of Enan.

16 These were [z]the renowned of the congregation, princes of the tribes of their fathers, [a]heads of thousands in Israel.

17 ¶ And Moses and Aaron took these men which are expressed by their names:

18 And they assembled all the congregation together on the first day of the second month; and they declared [b]their pedigrees after their families, [c]by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, by their polls.

19 [d]As the LORD commanded Moses, so he numbered them in the wilderness of Sinai.

20 ¶ And the children of Reuben, [e]Israel's eldest son, by their generations,[3] after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, by their polls, every male from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

21 Those that were numbered[4] of them, even of the tribe of Reuben, [f]were forty and six thousand and five hundred.

22 ¶ Of the children of [g]Simeon, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, those that were numbered of them, according to the number of the names, by their polls, every male from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

23 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Simeon, [h]were fifty and nine thousand and three hundred.

24 ¶ Of the children of [i]Gad,[5] by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

25 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Gad, were [k]forty and five thousand six hundred and fifty.

26 ¶ Of the children of [l]Judah, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

27 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Judah, were [m]threescore and fourteen thousand and six hundred.

28 ¶ Of the children of [n]Issachar,[6] by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

29 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Issachar, were [o]fifty and four thousand and four hundred.

30 ¶ Of the children of [p]Zebulun, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

31 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Zebulun, were [q]fifty and seven thousand and four hundred.

32 ¶ Of the children of [r]Joseph, namely, of the children of Ephraim, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of their names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war; year; these orders were given in the beginning of the second month. 2. The directions given for the execution of it, ver. 2, 3. (1.) None were to be numbered but the males, and those only such as were fit for war. None "under twenty years old;" for though some such might have bulk and strength enough for military service, yet, in compassion to their tender years, God would not have them put upon it to bear arms. (2.) Nor were any to be numbered, who, through age or bodily infirmity, blindness, lameness, or chronical diseases, were unfit for war. The church being militant, those only are reputed the true members of it that have listed themselves soldiers of Jesus Christ: for our life, our Christian life, is a warfare. (3.) The account was to be taken "according to their families," that it might not only be known how many they were, and what were their names, but of what tribe, or family, or clan; nay, of what particular house every person was; or, reckoning it the muster of an army, to what regiment every man belonged, that he might know his place himself, and the government might know where to find him. They were numbered a little before this, when their poll-money was paid for the service of the tabernacle, Exod. xxxviii. 25, 26. But it should seem they were not then registered, "by the house of their fathers," as now they were. Their number was the same then that it was now, "Six hundred thousand and three thousand and five hundred and fifty men," for as many as had died since then, and were lost in the account, so many were arrived to be twenty years old, and were added to the account. Note, As "one generation passeth away, another generation cometh." As vacancies are daily made, so recruits are daily raised to fill up the vacancies, and Providence takes care that, one time or other, in one place or other, the births shall balance the burials, that the race of mankind and the holy seed may not be cut off and extinct. 3. Commissioners are named for the doing of this work, Moses and Aaron were to preside, ver. 3, and one man of every tribe, that was renowned in his tribe, and was presumed to know it well, was to assist in it: "the princes of the tribe," ver. 16. Note, Those that are honourable should study to be serviceable; he that is great, let him be your minister, and show, by his knowing the public, that he deserves to be publicly known. The charge of this muster was committed to him who was the lord-lieutenant of that tribe. Now, why was this account ordered to be taken and kept? For several reasons, (1.) To prove the accomplishment of the promise made to Abraham, that God would "multiply his seed exceedingly," which promise was renewed to Jacob, Gen. xxviii. 13, that "his seed should be as the dust of the earth;" now it appears that there did not fall one tittle of [illegible] which was an encouragement to them to hope that the other promise [illegible] in its season. When the [illegible] upon the view, it is easy for one, that is disposed to cavil, to surmise that the conjecture is mistaken, and that, if they were to be counted, they would not be found half so many; therefore God would have Israel numbered, that it might be upon record how vastly they were increased in a little time; that the power of God's providence, and the truth of his promise, may be seen and acknowledged by all. It could not have been expected, in any ordinary course of nature, that seventy-five souls (which was the number of Jacob's family when he went down into Egypt,) should in 215 years (and it was no longer) multiply into so many hundred thousands. It is therefore to be attributed to an extraordinary virtue in the divine promise and blessing. (2.) It was to intimate the particular care which God himself would take of his Israel, and expected that Moses, and the inferior rulers should take of them. God is called the "Shepherd of Israel," Ps. lxxx. 1; now the shepherds always kept count of their flocks, and delivered them by number to their under-shepherds, that they might know if any were missing: in like manner, God numbers his flock, that of all which he took into his fold he might lose none, but upon a valuable consideration, even those that were sacrificed to his justice. (3.) It was to put a difference between the true-born Israelites and the mixed multitude that were among them; none were numbered but Israelites; all the world is but lumber in comparison with those jewels. Little account is made of others, but the saints God has a particular property in, and concern for: "The Lord knows them that are his," 2 Tim. ii. 19; "knows them by name," Phil. iv. 3. The hairs of their head are numbered; but he will say to others, "'I never knew you,' never made any account of you." (4.) It was in order to their being marshalled into several districts, for the more easy administration of justice, and their more regular march through the wilderness. It is a rout and a rabble, not an army, that is not mustered and put in order.

THE RESULT.—We have here the sum total at the foot of the account; they were in all 600,000 fighting men, and 3,550 over. Some think that, when this was their number some months before, Exod. xxxviii. 26, the Levites were reckoned with them; but now that tribe was separated for the service of God, yet had so many more by this time attained to the age of twenty years, as that still they were the same number; to show that whatever we part with for the honour and service of God, it shall certainly be made up to us one way or other. Now, we see what a vast body of men they were. Let us consider, 1. How much went to maintain all these (beside twice as many more, no question, of women and children, sick and aged, of the mixed multitude) for forty years together in the wilderness; and they were all at God's finding every day, having their food from the dew of heaven, and not from the fatness of the earth. Oh, what a great and good Housekeeper is our God, that has such numbers depending on him, and receiv-

[4] It was by the special commandment of God, that Moses did not number the Levites at this time; because they were intended for another service, and were therefore to be numbered by themselves. In the same manner, all nations have exempted their ministers of religion from other services, particularly from war. Strabo notes this custom to have been as old as Homer's time; and Cesar observes that the ancient Druids were exempt from war and tribute.—PATRICK.

ing from him every day! 2. What work sin makes with a people; within forty years most of them would indeed have died of course for the common sin of mankind; for when sin entered into the world, death came with it, and how great are the desolations which it makes in the earth! But, for the particular sin of unbelief and murmuring, all those that were now numbered, except two, laid their bones under their iniquity, and perished in the wilderness. 3. What a great multitude God's spiritual Israel will amount to at last; though at one time, and in one place, they seem to be but a little flock, yet when they come all together, they shall be a great multitude, innumerable, Rev. vii. 9. And though the church's beginning be small, its latter end shall greatly increase. A little one shall become a thousand.

EXEMPTION OF THE LEVITES.—Care is here taken to distinguish, from the rest of the tribes, the tribe of Levi, which, in the matter of the golden calf, had distinguished itself, Exod. xxxii. 26. Note, Singular services shall be recompensed with singular honours. Now, 1. It was the honour of the Levites that they were made guardians of the spiritualities; to them was committed the care of the tabernacle and the treasures thereof, both in their camps and in their marches. (1.) When they moved, the Levites were to take down the tabernacle, to carry it and all that belonged to it, and then to set it up again in the place appointed, ver. 50, 51. It was for the honour of the holy things that none should be permitted to see them, or touch them, but those only who were called of God to the service. Thus we all are unfit and unworthy to have fellowship with God, till we are first called by his grace "into the fellowship of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord," and so being the spiritual seed of that great High Priest, are made "priests to our God;" and it is promised that God would take Levites to himself, even from the Gentiles, Isa. lxvi. 21. (2.) When they rested, the Levites were to "encamp round about the tabernacle," ver. 50, 53, that they might be near their work, and resident upon their charge, always ready to attend; and that they might be a guard upon the tabernacle, to preserve it from being either plundered or profaned. They must pitch round about the tabernacle, "That there be no wrath upon the congregation," as there would be, if the tabernacle and the charge of it were neglected, or those crowded upon it that were not allowed to come near. Note, Great care must be taken to prevent sin, because the preventing of sin is the preventing of wrath. 2. It was their further honour, that as Israel, being a holy people, was not "reckoned among the nations," so they, being a holy tribe, were not reckoned among other Israelites, but numbered afterward by themselves, ver. 49. The service which the Levites were to do about the sanctuary is called (as we render it in the margin) a warfare, chap. iv. 23. And being engaged in that warfare, they were discharged from military services, and therefore not numbered with those that were to "go out to war." Note, They that minister about holy things should neither entangle themselves, nor be entangled, in secular affairs. The ministry is itself work enough for a whole man, and all little enough to be employed in it. It is an admonition to ministers, to distinguish themselves by their exemplary conversation from common Israelites, not affecting to seem greater, but aiming to be really better, every way better than others.—Henry.

CHAP. II. MODE OF ENCAMPMENT.—The Israelites encamped in four grand divisions, with the tabernacle in the centre; yet at some distance, as a token of awe and reverence. The sanctuary and the ark, as pledges of JEHOVAH'S special favour, were in reality the glory and defence of the people; yet the people were posted, as if they had been the guardians of the sanctuary, and no enemy could approach it without forcing the way through their hosts. Religion is indeed our protection; yet it is our duty to support its cause and interest, with our whole power and ability.—This encampment is computed to have framed a moveable city of twelve miles square: and many think that the door of every tent faced the tabernacle, that thence the people might worship towards this token of God's presence upon a mercy-seat. We know nothing certain concerning the standards of the several tribes: but it is highly improbable that they should have been the figures of any animals, as the Jewish writers assert: for this might have proved an occasion to idolatry, and indeed it was deemed unlawful in after ages. The tribe of Judah, from which Christ sprang, was appointed to the highest station, and under it were ranked the tribes of Issachar and Zebulun, Judah's younger brethren by the same mother. The tribe of Reuben, Jacob's eldest son, though degraded, was appointed to lead the second squadron, under whom ranked the tribe of Simeon his younger brother, and that of Gad, the eldest son of Zilpah, Leah's handmaid. The three tribes descended from Rachel formed the third squadron: and the three other tribes, descended from the concubines, formed the fourth, under the command of a captain of the tribe of Dan; concerning which Jacob prophesied, "Dan shall judge his people, as one of the tribes of Israel." Thus the whole arrangement was formed in evident wisdom, as well as uncontrollable sovereignty, so as to conduce to peace, and perpetuate relative affection.—Scott.

GOD IN THE CENTRE OF THE CAMP.—The hosts were to pitch about the tabernacle, which was to be in the midst of them, as the tent or pavilion of a general in the centre of an army. They must encamp round the tabernacle, 1. That it might be equally a comfort and joy to them all, as it was a token of God's gracious presence with them, Ps. xlvi. 5, "God is in the midst of her, she shall not be moved." Their camp had reason to be 14 Then the tribe of Gad: and the captain of the sons of Gad shall be [r]Eliasaph the son of Reuel.

15 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were [s]forty and five thousand and six hundred and fifty.

16 All that were numbered in the camp of Reuben were [t]an hundred thousand, and fifty and one thousand, and four hundred and fifty, throughout their armies: and [u]they shall set forth in the second rank.

17 ¶ Then [x]the tabernacle of the congregation[2] shall set forward, with the camp of the Levites in the midst of the camp: as they encamp, so shall they set forward, every man in his place, by their standards.

18 ¶ On the west side shall be the standard of the camp of [y]Ephraim,[3] according to their armies: and the captain of the sons of Ephraim shall be [z]Elishama the son of Ammihud.

19 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were [a]forty thousand and five hundred.

20 And by him shall be the tribe of Manasseh:[4] and the captain of the children of Manasseh shall be [b]Gamaliel the son of Pedahzur.

21 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were [c]thirty and two thousand and two hundred.

22 Then the tribe of Benjamin: and the captain of the sons of Benjamin shall be [d]Abidan the son of Gideoni.

23 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were [e]thirty and five thousand and four hundred.

24 All that were numbered of the camp of Ephraim were [f]an hundred thousand, and eight thousand and an hundred, [5]throughout their armies: [g]and they shall go forward in the third rank.

25 ¶ The standard of the camp of Dan[6] shall be on the north side by their armies: and the captain of the children of Dan shall be [h]Ahiezer the son of Ammishaddai.

26 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were [i]threescore and two thousand and seven hundred.

27 And those that encamp by him shall be the tribe of Asher:[7] and the captain of the children of Asher shall be [k]Pagiel the son of Ocran.

28 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were [l]forty and one thousand and five hundred.

29 Then the tribe of Naphtali:[8] and the captain of the children of Naphtali shall be [m]Ahira the son of Enan.

30 And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were [n]fifty and three thousand and four hundred.

31 All they that were numbered in the camp of Dan were [o]an hundred thousand, and fifty and seven thousand, and six hundred: [p]they shall go hindmost with their standards.

32 ¶ These are those which were numbered of the children of Israel, by the house of their fathers: all those that were numbered of the camps, throughout their host, were [q]six hundred thousand, and three thousand, and five hundred and fifty.

33 But [r]the Levites were not numbered among the children of Israel; as the LORD commanded Moses.

34 And the children of Israel did [s]according to all that the LORD commanded Moses: [t]so they pitched by their standards, and so they set forward, every one after their families, according to the house of their fathers.

hearty, when thus they had God in the heart of them; to have bread from heaven every day round about their camp, and fire from heaven, with other tokens of God's favour, in the midst of their camp, was abundantly sufficient to answer that question, "Is the Lord among us, or is he not? Happy art thou, O Israel!" It is probable that the doors of all their tents were made to look toward the tabernacle from all sides; for every Israelite should have his eyes always toward the Lord; therefore they worshipped at the tent-door. The tabernacle was in the midst of the camp, that it might be near to them; for it is a very desirable thing to have the solemn administrations of holy ordinances near us and within our reach. "The kingdom of God is among you." 2. That they might be a guard and defence upon the tabernacle and the Levites on every side. No invader could come near God's tabernacle, without first penetrating the thickest of their squadrons. Note, If God undertake the protection of our comforts, we ought in our places to undertake the protection of his institutions, and stand up in defence of his honour, and interest, and ministers. Yet they were to pitch afar off, in reverence to the sanctuary, that it might not seem crowded and thrust up among them; and that the common business of the camp might be no annoyance to it. They were also taught to keep their distance, lest too much familiarity should breed contempt. It is supposed (from Joshua iii. 4) that the distance between the nearest part of the camp and the tabernacle (or perhaps between them and the camp of the Levites, who pitched near the tabernacle) was 2000 cubits, that is, 1000 yards, little more than half a measured mile with us; but the outer parts of the camp must needs be much further off. Some compute that the extent of their camp could be no less than 12 miles square; for it was like a moveable city, with streets and lanes, in which perhaps the manna fell, as well as on the outside of the camp, that they might have it at their doors. In the Christian church we read of a throne, (as in the tabernacle there was a mercy-seat,) which is called a "glorious high throne from the beginning," Jer. xvii. 12, and that throne surrounded by spiritual Israelites, twenty-four elders, double to the number of the tribes, "clothed in white raiment," Rev. iv. 4, and the banner over them is Love; but we are not ordered, as they were, to pitch afar off; no, we are invited to draw near, and come boldly. The saints of the Most High are said to be "round about him," Ps. lxxvi. 11. God by his grace keep us close to him!—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The Lord, in his overruling providence, as certainly, though with less observation, appoints the bounds of our habitation, and our rank in life, as he did the encampments of Israel in the wilderness. It is therefore our duty and interest to be contented with our place, and to endeavour to occupy it in a proper manner, without attempting to desert it, or wishing to change it; without murmuring, ambition, or covetousness. And if he, "who ordereth all things after the counsel of his own will," hath allotted our station near to his word and ordinances, and hath taught us to believe in the divine Redeemer, we have abundant reason to be thankful. Though in a wilderness, in a cottage, in poverty, we have no reason, and surely should have no disposition, to envy those who possess stately mansions, elegant gardens, or cultivated estates, but have no lot in Israel, no inheritance in Canaan. The Lord is a God of order and of peace; and he commands that all things in his church should be done "decently and in order;" and "that all things be done in peace." It would be well, if, in attempting to accomplish the former purpose, according to their own idea of decency and order, all denominations of Christians had not too much lost sight of the latter injunction. It is desirable that real Christians should be of one judgment; but if that cannot be obtained, it is of great importance that they be of one heart; and that, like these four squadrons of Israel, they should live in harmony with one another, and, in their different encampments, surround the ark, as all of one family, embarked in one common interest, and marching to the same heavenly Canaan.—Scott.

CHAP. III. THE HOUSE OF AARON.—A particular account is given of the family of Aaron; what we have met with before concerning them is here repeated. 1. The consecration of the sons of Aaron, ver. 3. They were all anointed to minister before the Lord, though it appeared afterward, and God knew it, that two of them were wise and two were foolish. 2. The fall of the two eldest; ver. 4, they "offered strange fire," and died for so doing, "before the Lord." This is mentioned here in the preamble to the law concerning the priesthood, for warning to all succeeding priests; let them know, by this example, that God is a jealous God, and will "not be mocked;" the holy anointing oil was an honour to the obedient, but not a shelter to the disobedient. It is here said, "They had no children," Providence so ordering it, for their greater punishment, that none of their descendants should remain to be priests, and to bear up their name who had profaned God's name. 3. The continuance of the two youngest; Eleazar and Ithamar ministered "in the sight of Aaron." It intimates, (1.) The care they took about their ministration, not to make any blunders; they kept under their father's eye, and took instruction from him in all they did, because, probably, Nadab and Abihu got out of their father's sight when they offered strange fire. Note, It is good for young people to act under the conduct and inspection of those that are aged and experienced. (2.) The comfort Aaron took in it; it pleased him to see his younger sons behave themselves prudently and gravely, when his two elder had miscarried. Note, it is a great satisfaction to parents to "see their children walk in the truth," 3 John ver. 4. A grant is made of

5 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

6 [h]Bring the tribe of Levi near, and present them before Aaron the priest, that they may minister[i] unto him.

7 And they shall [l]keep his charge, and the charge of the whole congregation, before the tabernacle of the congregation, to [k]do the service of the tabernacle.

8 And [l]they shall keep all the instruments of the tabernacle of the congregation, and the charge of the children of Israel, to do the service of the tabernacle.

9 And [m]thou shalt give the Levites unto Aaron, and to his sons: they are wholly given unto him out of the children of Israel.

10 And thou shalt appoint Aaron and his sons, and [n]they shall wait on their priest's office;[t] [o]and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.

11 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

12 And I, behold, [p]I have taken the Levites[s] from among the children of Israel instead of all the first-born that openeth the matrix among the children of Israel: therefore the Levites shall be mine;

13 Because [q]all the first-born are mine: for [r]on the day that I smote all the first-born in the land of Egypt, I hallowed unto me all the first-born in Israel, both man and beast; mine they shall be: I am the LORD.

14 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, saying,

15 Number the children of Levi, after the house of their fathers, by their families: [s]every male from a month old and upward shalt thou number them.

16 And Moses numbered them, according to the [t]word of the LORD, as he was commanded.

17 And [u]these were the sons of Levi, by their names; Gershon, and Kohath, and Merari.

18 And these are the names of the sons of Gershon, by their families; [v]Libni, and Shimei.

19 And the sons of Kohath, by their families; [x]Amram, and Izhar, Hebron, and Uzziel.

20 And the sons of Merari, by their families; [y]Mahli, and Mushi: these are the families of the Levites, according to the house of their fathers.

21 ¶ Of Gershon was the family [z]of the Libnites, and the family of the Shimites: these are the families of the Gershonites.

22 Those that were numbered of them, according to the number of all the males, from a month old and upward, even those that were numbered of them, were [a]seven thousand and five hundred.

23 The families of the Gershonites shall pitch [b]behind the tabernacle westward.

24 And the chief of the house of the father of the Gershonites shall be Eliasaph the son of Lael.

25 And [c]the charge of the sons of Gershon, in the tabernacle of the congregation, shall be [d]the tabernacle, and the tent, the covering thereof, and [e]the hanging for the door of the tabernacle of the congregation,

26 And [f]the hangings of the court, and the curtain for the door of the court, which is by the tabernacle, and by the altar round about, and [g]the cords of it, for all the service thereof.

27 ¶ And [h]of Kohath[i] was the family of the Amramites, and the family of the Izharites, and the family of the Hebronites, and the family of the Uzzielites: these are the families of the Kohathites.

28 In the number of all the males, from a month old and upward, were [l]eight thousand and six hundred, [k]keeping[l] the charge of the sanctuary.

29 The families of the sons of Kohath shall pitch [l]on the side of the tabernacle southward.

30 And the chief of the house of the father of the families of the Kohathites shall be Elizaphan the son of Uzziel.

31 And their charge shall be [m]the ark, and the table, and the candlestick, and [n]the altars, and the vessels of the sanctuary wherewith they minister, and [o]the hanging, and all the service thereof.

32 And [p]Eleazar the son of Aaron[s] the priest shall be chief over the chief of the Levites, and have the oversight of them that keep the charge of the sanctuary.

33 ¶ Of Merari was [q]the family of the Mahlites, and the family of the Mushites: these are the families of Merari.

34 And those that were numbered of them, according to the number of all the males, from a month old and upward, were [r]six thousand and two hundred.

35 And the chief of the house of the father of the families of Merari was Zuriel the son of Abihael: [s]these shall pitch on the side of the tabernacle northward.

36 And [t]under the custody and charge of the sons of Merari shall be [t]the boards of the tabernacle, and the bars thereof, and the pillars thereof, and the sockets thereof, and all the vessels thereof, and all that serveth thereto, 37 And the pillars of the court round about, and their sockets, and their pins, and their cords.

38 ¶ But those that encamp before the tabernacle [u]toward the east, even before the tabernacle of the congregation eastward, shall the Levites to be assistants to the priests in their work. "Give the Levites to Aaron," ver. 9. Aaron was to have a greater propriety in, and power over, the tribe of Levi, than any other of the princes had in and over their respective tribes. There was a great deal of work belonging to the priests' office, and there were now only three pair of hands to do it all, Aaron's and his two sons', for it does not appear that they had either of them any children at this time, at least, not any that were of age to minister, therefore God appoints the Levites to attend upon them. Note, Those whom God finds work for, he will find help for. Here is, (1.) The service for which the Levites were designed; they were to "minister to the priests" in their ministration to the Lord, ver. 6, and to "keep Aaron's charge," ver. 7, as the deacons to the bishops in the evangelical constitutions, serving at tables, while they waited on their ministry. The Levites killed the sacrifices, and then the priests needed only to sprinkle the blood and burn the fat: the Levites prepared the incense, the priests burnt it. They were to keep, not only Aaron's charge, but the "charge of the whole congregation." Note, It is a great trust that is reposed in ministers, not only for the glory of Christ, but for the good of his church; so that they must not only keep the charge of the great High Priest, but must also be faithful to the souls of men, in trust for whom a dispensation is committed to them. (2.) The consideration upon which the Levites were demanded; they were taken instead of the first-born. The preservation of the first-born of Israel, when all the first-born of the Egyptians (with whom they were many of them mingled) were destroyed, was looked upon by Him who never makes any unreasonable demands, as cause sufficient for the appropriating of all the first-born from thenceforward to himself, ver. 13, "All the first-born are mine." That is sufficient to make them his, though he had given no reason for it, for he is the sole Fountain and Lord of all beings and powers; but because all obedience must flow from love, and acts of duty must be acts of gratitude, before they were challenged into peculiar services, they were crowned with peculiar favours. Note, When he that made us saves us, we are thereby laid under further obligations to serve him and live to him. God's right to us by redemption, corroborates the right he has to us by creation.

OFFICES OF AARON'S SONS.—They were distributed into three classes, according to the number of the sons of Levi, Gershon, Kohath, and Merari, and these subdivided into several families, ver. 17—20. Concerning each of these three classes we have an account. 1. of their number. The Gershonites were 7,500. The Kohathites were 8,600. The Merarites were 6,200. The rest of the tribes had not their subordinate families numbered by themselves, as those of Levi; this honour God put upon his own tribe. 2. Of their post about the tabernacle, on which they were to attend. The Gershonites pitched behind the tabernacle, westward, ver. 23. The Kohathites on the right hand, southward, ver. 29. The Merarites on the left hand, northward, ver. 35. And, to complete the square, Moses and Aaron, with the priests, encamped in the front, eastward, ver. 36. Thus was the tabernacle surrounded with its guards; and thus does "the angel of the Lord encamp round about them that fear him," those living temples, Ps. xxxiv. 7. Every one knew his place, and must therein abide with God. 3. Of their chief or head. As each class had its own place, so each had its own prince. The commander of the Gershonites was Eliasaph, ver. 24. Of the Kohathites, Elizaphan, ver. 30, of whom we read, Lev. x. 4, that he was one of the bearers at the funeral of Nadab and Abihu. Of the Merarites, Zuriel, ver 35. 4. Of their charge when the camp moved. Each class knew their own business; it was requisite they should; for that which is every body's work, often proves nobody's work. The Gershonites were charged with the custody and carriage of all the curtains and hangings and coverings of the tabernacle and court, ver. 25, 26. The Kohathites of all the furniture of the tabernacle; the ark, altar, table, &c. ver. 31, 32. The Merarites of the heavy carriage; boards, bars, pillars, &c. ver. 36, 37.—Henry.

REDEMPTION OF THE FIRST-BORN.—The sum total of the Levites was 22,300; but the 300 are supposed to be the first-born of the several families, after their departure out of Egypt, who were already devoted to the Lord: and we must acknowledge a peculiar interposition of Providence in this near coincidence in the numbers of the Levites, and of the first-born. The first-born in any company must, in general at least, amount to one in eight or ten; whereas the number here mentioned was scarcely one in fifty of all the males, young and old; for there were above 600,000 adults, and, perhaps, almost as many under age. It is therefore evident, that none were numbered but those who had been born after the destruction of the first-born of Egypt. This, indeed, seems the meaning of the law, which referred to the future, and not to the past: Exod. xiii. 2: and it is evident that the firstlings of the cattle were thus reckoned. Indeed, 45,000 of both sexes, which is rather more than double the first-born males, seems a vast number of first-born children within the space of one year; but, upon reflection, we shall find it no ways improbable, that, among 1,200,000 persons of both sexes, who were above twenty years of age, (and many might marry much younger than that age,) there should be within that time 50,000 marriages; that is, about the twelfth part of the company of marriageable persons. Especially when we consider that multitudes might be inclined to marry, when they found they were about to enjoy liberty; and when they recollected that the promises made to Israel peculiarly respected a very rapid increase, and that there would doubtless be a very great blessing upon them in this respect. The first-born Israelites were therefore all unfit for service on this emergency; and, as they were the heirs of their several families, they probably would not have been very willing, when of age, to become 3 From [b]thirty years old[1] and upward, even until fifty years old, all that [c]enter into the host, to [d]do the work in the tabernacle of the congregation.

4 ¶ This shall be [e]the service of the sons of Kohath, in the tabernacle of the congregation, about the most holy things.

5 And [f]when the camp setteth forward, [g]Aaron shall come, and his sons, and they [h]shall take down the covering vail, [i]and cover the ark of testimony with it.

6 And shall put thereon the covering of badgers' skins, and shall spread over it [k]a cloth wholly of blue,[2] and shall put in [l]the staves thereof.

7 And upon [m]the table of shew-bread they shall spread a cloth of blue, and put thereon the dishes, and the spoons, and the bowls, and covers to [*]cover withal: and the [n]continual bread shall be thereon.

8 And they shall spread upon them [o]a cloth of scarlet, and cover the same with a covering of badgers' skins, and shall put in the staves thereof.

servants to the priests; and, consequently, the change would be as acceptable to the relations of those who were set aside, as to those who were substituted in their stead. It seems, however, that the Levites and their posterity were thus dedicated to God, only in lieu of the first-born "at that time:" for the law concerning the presentation and redemption of the first-born was in force through all succeeding generations, until the days of Christ, Luke ii. 23. Either it was determined by lot who should pay the redemption money, and for whom the Levites should be accepted, or it was paid by a common tax; or, as some think, they began with the eldest, and so the youngest, not being changed, were redeemed.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Whilst we consider Jesus, our great High Priest, appointed of the Father, and intrusted with the charge of the sanctuary, and of the whole congregation, and keeping that charge with unremitting attention, and entire faithfulness, love and power, we should recollect that his ministers, as presented unto him and ministering before him, have a solemn charge committed to them also. They are called upon to wait in their office; to serve the Lord with reverence; to offer no strange fire; to do nothing of their own mind, or in their own spirit; and with all diligence and fidelity to follow the instructions and copy the example of their Lord. But it is of the utmost importance that each should know his own post and duty, that no part of the work may be neglected, and that there may be no interference, and no occasion given for envy, ambition, or discontent. No service required by such a master can be either mean or hard; for he will put honour upon the faithful in the lowest situation, and will provide assistance where the work is too laborious. Christians also, though not engaged in the ministry, have a work to do and a charge to keep; and must remember, that, as all men are the Lord's by creation, believers are his by redemption; and that, as the ministry was appointed for their benefit, they are required to strengthen the hands and to encourage the hearts, of those who minister before the Lord in their behalf.—Scott.

CHAP. IV. CENSUS OF THE LEVITES.—We have here a second muster of the tribe of Levi. As that tribe was taken out of all Israel to be God's peculiar, so the middle-aged men of that tribe were taken from among the rest to be actually employed in the service of the tabernacle. Now observe, Who were to be taken into this number. All the males from thirty years old to fifty. Of the other tribes, those that were numbered to go forth to war, were from twenty years old and upward, but of the Levites, only from thirty to fifty, for the service of God requires the best of our strength, and the prime of our time, which cannot be better spent than to the honour of him who is the First and Best. And a man may make a good soldier much sooner than a good minister. Now,

1. They were not to be employed till they were thirty years old, because, till then, they were in danger of retaining something childish and youthful, and had not gravity enough to do the service, and wear the honour, of a Levite. They were entered as probationers at twenty-five years old, chap. viii. 24, and in David's time, when there was more work to be done, at twenty, 1 Chron. xxiii. 24, and so, Ezra iii. 8, but they must be five years learning, and waiting, and so fitting themselves for service; nay, in David's time they were ten years in preparation, from twenty to thirty. John Baptist began his public ministry, and Christ his, at thirty years old; it is not in the letter of it obligatory on gospel-ministers now, as if they must not either begin their work till thirty years old, or must leave it off at fifty; but it gives us two good rules, (1.) That ministers must not be novices, 1 Tim. iii. 6. It is a work that requires ripeness of judgment, and great steadiness, and therefore those are very unfit for it who are but babes in knowledge, and have not put away childish things. (2.) That they must learn before they teach, serve before they rule, and must "first be proved," 1 Tim. iii. 10. 2. They were discharged at fifty years old from the toilsome part of the service, particularly this of carrying the tabernacle; for that is the special service to which they are here ordained, and which there was most occasion for while they were in the wilderness. When they began to enter upon old age they were dismissed; (1.) In favour to them, that they might not be over-toiled, when their strength began to decay. Twenty years' good service was thought pretty well for one man. (2.) In honour to the work, that it might not be done by those who, through the infirmities of age, were slow and heavy. The service of God should be done when we are in the most lively, active frame. Those do not consider this, who put off their repentance to old age, and so leave the best work to be done in the worst time.

SERVICE OF PRIESTS AND LEVITES—KOHATHITES.—As to the sons of Kohath in particular, here is, 1. Their service appointed them in the removes of the tabernacle. Afterward, when the tabernacle was fixed, they had other work assigned them: but this was the work of the day, which was to be done in its day. Observe, Wherever the camp of Israel went, the tabernacle of the Lord went with them, and care must be taken for the carriage of it. Note, Wherever we go, we must see to it that we take our religion along with us, and not forget that, or any part of it. Now, the Kohathites were to carry all the holy things of the tabernacle. They were charged with those things before, chap. iii. 31, but here they have more particular instructions given them. (1.) Aaron, and his sons the priests, must pack up the things which the Kohathites were to carry, as here directed, ver. 5, &c. God had before appointed that none should come into the most holy place, but only Aaron once a-year with a cloud of incense, Lev. xvi. 2, and yet the not touch[s] any holy thing, lest they die. [a]These things are the burden of the sons of Kohath in the tabernacle of the congregation.

16 ¶ And to [b]the office of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, pertaineth [c]the oil for the light, and [d]the sweet incense, and [e]the daily meat-offering, and [f]the anointing oil, [g]and the oversight of all the tabernacle, and of all that therein is, in the sanctuary, and in the vessels thereof.

17 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

18 [h]Cut ye not off[6] the tribe of the families of the Kohathites from among the Levites:

19 But thus do unto them, that they may live, and not die, when they approach unto the most holy things: Aaron and his sons shall go in, and appoint them every one to his service, and to his burden.

20 But [i]they shall not go in to see when the holy things are covered, lest they die.

21 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

22 Take also [k]the sum of the sons of Gershon, throughout the houses of their fathers, by their families:

23 From [l]thirty years old and upward, until fifty years old, shalt thou number them; all that enter in to [7]perform the service, to do the work in the tabernacle of the congregation.

24 This is the service of the families of the Gershonites, to serve, and for [8]burdens.

25 And they shall bear [m]the curtains of the tabernacle, and the tabernacle of the congregation, his covering, and the covering of the badgers' skins that is above upon it, and the hanging for the door of the tabernacle of the congregation,

26 And the hangings of the court, and the hanging for the door of the gate of the court, which is by the tabernacle, and by the altar round about, and their cords, and all the instruments of their service,[7] and all that is made for them: so shall they serve.

27 At the [9]appointment of Aaron and his sons shall be all the service of the sons of the Gershonites, in all their burdens, and in all their service: and ye shall appoint unto them in charge all their burdens.

28 This is the service of the families of the sons of Gershon in the tabernacle of the congregation: and their charge shall be [n]under the hand[8] of Ithamar, the son of Aaron the priest.

29 ¶ As for [o]the sons of Merari, thou shalt number them after their families, by the house of their fathers:

30 From thirty years old and upward, even unto fifty years old, shalt thou number them, every one that entereth into the [*]service, to do the work of the tabernacle of the congregation.

31 And this is [p]the charge of their burden, according to all their service in the tabernacle of the congregation; the boards of the tabernacle, and the bars thereof, and the pillars thereof, and the sockets thereof,

32 And the pillars of the court round about, and their sockets, and their pins, and their cords, with all their instruments, and with all their service: and by name[9] ye shall reckon [q]the instruments of the charge of their burden.

33 This is the service of the families of the sons of Merari, according to all their service, in the tabernacle of the congregation, [r]under the hand of Ithamar the son of Aaron the priest.

34 ¶ And Moses and Aaron, and the chief of the congregation, numbered the sons of the Kohathites, after their families, and after the house of their fathers,

35 From [s]thirty years old and upward, even unto fifty years old, every one that entereth into the service, for the work in the tabernacle of the congregation:

36 And those that were numbered of them, by their families, were [t]two thousand seven hundred and fifty.

37 These were they that were numbered of the families of the Kohathites, all that might do service in the tabernacle of the congregation, which Moses and Aaron did number, according to the commandment of the LORD, by the hand of Moses.

38 ¶ And those that were numbered of the sons of Gershon,[10] throughout their families, and by the house of their fathers,

39 From thirty years old and upward, even unto fifty years old, every one that entereth into the service, for the work in the tabernacle of the congregation;

40 Even those that were numbered of them, throughout their families, by the house of their fathers, were [u]two thousand and six hundred and thirty.

41 These are they that were numbered of the families of the sons of Gershon, of all that might do service in the tabernacle of the congregation, whom Moses and Aaron did number, according to the commandment of the LORD.

42 ¶ And those that were numbered of the families of the sons of Merari, throughout their families, by the house of their fathers,

43 From thirty years old and upward, even unto fifty years old, every one that entereth into the service, for the work in the tabernacle of the congregation;

44 Even those that were numbered of them, after their families, were [x]three thousand and two hundred.[11] necessity of their unsettled state requiring it, that law is here dispensed with; for, every time they removed, Aaron and his sons went in to take down the ark, and make it up for carriage; for (as the learned Bishop Patrick suggests) the Shechinah, or display of the Divine Majesty, which was over the mercy-seat, removed for the present, in the pillar of cloud, which was taken up, and then the ark was not dangerous to be approached. (2.) All the holy things must be covered; the ark and table with three coverings, all the rest with two. Even the ashes of the altar, in which the holy fire was carefully preserved and raked up, must have a purple cloth spread over them, ver. 13; even the brazen altar, though in the court of the sanctuary it stood open to the view of all, yet was covered in the carriage of it. All these coverings are designed, First, For safety, that these holy things might not be ruffled with the wind, sullied with the rain, or tarnished with the sun, but that they might be preserved in their beauty; for "on all the glory shall be a defence." The covering of badgers' skins, being thick and strong, would keep out wet; and, while we are in our passage through the wilderness of this world, it concerns us to be fenced "for all weathers," Isa. iv. 5, 6. Secondly, For decency and ornament. Most of these things had a cloth of blue, or purple, or scarlet, spread outmost; and the ark was covered with a cloth "wholly of blue," ver. 6. An emblem, say some, of the azure skies, which are spread like a curtain between us and the Majesty on high, Job xxvi. 9. Those that are faithful to God should endeavour likewise to appear beautiful before men, that they may "adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour." Thirdly, For concealment. It signified the darkness of that dispensation. That which is now brought to light by the gospel, and revealed to babes, was then hid from the wise and prudent. They saw only the coverings, not the holy things themselves, Heb. x. 1, but now Christ has "destroyed the face of the covering," Isa. xxv. 7.

THE GERSHONITES.—We have here the charge of the other two families of the Levites, which, though not so honourable as the first, yet was necessary, and was to be done regularly. The Gershonites were charged with all the drapery of the tabernacle; the curtains and hangings, and the coverings of badgers' skins, ver. 22—26. Those they were to take down when the cloud removed, and the ark and the rest of the holy things were carried away, to pack up and bring with them, and then to set up again, where the cloud rested. Aaron and his sons allotted to them their respective charge, "You shall take care of such a curtain, and you of such a hanging, that every one may know his work, and there may be no confusion," ver. 27. Ithamar particularly was to take the oversight of them, ver. 28.

THE MERARITES.—The Merarites were charged with the heavy carriage, the boards and bars, the pillars and sockets, the pins and cords, and those were delivered them by name, ver. 31, 32. An inventory was given them of every particular, that it might be forthcoming, and nothing to seek, when the tabernacle was to be set up again. Though these seemed of less importance than the other things pertaining to the sanctuary, yet there was this care taken of them, to teach us with the greatest exactness to preserve pure and entire all the divine institutions, and to take care that nothing be lost. It also intimates the care God takes of his church, and every member of it; the Good Shepherd "calls his own sheep by name," John x. 3. Here were thousands of men employed about these services, though a much less number would have served for the bearing of those burthens; but it was requisite that the tabernacle should be taken down and set up with great expedition, and many hands would make quick work, especially when every one knew his work. They had tents of their own to take care of, and to take along with them, but the young men under thirty, and the old men above fifty, might serve for them; nor is there any mention of them, for God's house must always be preferred before our own. Their care was preposterous, who built and ceiled their own houses, while God's house lay waste, Hag. i. 4, 9.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Though the minister of Christ must not strive or war with carnal weapons, yet he must "enter into the house of the LORD;" and, both in his personal conflict against sin and Satan, and, in the duties of his important calling, he must boldly fight the good fight of faith, with the appointed weapons of his warfare—sound doctrine, fervent prayer, and a holy example. Peculiar gravity, prudence, humility, ripeness of judgment, and experience, meekness, and patience, are necessary, in order to a due performance of the work of the ministry to the glory of God, the edification of the church, and the silencing of gainsayers; and ministers are exposed to many temptations from the smiles and frowns of men, from popularity and opposition. It is therefore far more advisable for those who are intended for this sacred service, to spend much previous time in retirement, study, meditation, and communion with God; that they may come forth well prepared and furnished for usefulness when a proper occasion is afforded; than that they should, by an indiscreet and hurtful zeal, be allowed, or encouraged, to violate the apostle's rule, by prematurely entering on public services. 1 Tim. iii. 6. From the neglect of this caution, many mischiefs have arisen, both to individuals, and to the cause of God. When, however, men are engaged, and have health and strength, and work assigned them, they should lose no time, and miss no opportunities of usefulness; for these may be regretted, and cannot be recalled. As the faithful servants of God grow in years, and their natural vigour abates, they must not be censured if they, in some respects, moderate their labours, especially in those services which require great exertion. And if it please God to lay them quite aside by sickness

The unclean put out of the camp, 1. Restitution enjoined, 5. The trial of jealousy, 11.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Command the children of Israel, that they [a]put out of the camp every leper, [b]and every one that hath an [c]issue, and whosoever is defiled by the dead:

3 Both male and female shall ye put out, [d]without the camp shall ye put them; that they [e]defile not their camps, [f]in the midst whereof I dwell.

4 And the children of Israel did so, and put them out without the camp: as the LORD spake unto Moses, so did the children of Israel.

5 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

6 Speak unto the children of Israel, [g]When a man or woman shall commit any sin that men commit, to do a trespass against the LORD,[1] and that person be guilty;

7 Then they shall [h]confess their sin which they have done: and he shall recompense his trespass [i]with the principal thereof, and add unto it the fifth part thereof, and give it unto him against whom he hath trespassed.

8 But if the man [k]have no kinsman to recompense the trespass unto, let the trespass be recompensed unto the LORD, even to the priest, [l]beside the ram of the atonement, whereby an atonement shall be made for him.

9 ¶ And every *offering of all the holy things of the children of Israel, which they bring unto the priest, shall be his.

10 And every man's [m]hallowed things[2] shall be his: whatsoever any man giveth the priest, it shall be his.

11 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

12 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, [n]If any man's wife go aside, and commit a trespass against him,

13 And a man [o]lie with her carnally, and it be hid from the eyes of her husband, and be kept close, and she be defiled, and there be no witness against her, neither she be taken with the manner;

14 And [p]the spirit of jealousy come upon him,[3] and he be jealous of his wife, and she be defiled; or if the spirit of jealousy come upon him, and he be jealous of his wife, and she be not defiled:

15 Then shall the man bring his wife unto the priest, and he shall bring [q]her offering for her, the tenth part of an ephah of barley-meal; he shall pour no oil upon it, nor put frankincense thereon; for it is an offering of jealousy, an offering of memorial, [r]bringing iniquity to remembrance.

16 And the priest shall bring her near, and [s]set her before the LORD.

17 And the priest shall take [t]holy water in an earthen vessel; and [u]of the dust that is in the floor of the tabernacle the priest shall take, and put it into the water.

18 And the priest shall set the woman before the LORD, and [x]uncover the woman's head, [y]and put the offering of memorial in her hands, which is the jealousy-offering: and the priest shall have in his hand [z]the bitter water that causeth the curse.

19 And the priest shall [a]charge her by an oath, and say unto the woman, If no man have lain with thee, and if thou hast not gone aside to uncleanness [†]with another instead of thy husband, be thou free from this bitter water that causeth the curse:

20 But if thou hast gone aside to another instead of thy husband, and if thou be defiled, and some man have lain with thee besides thine husband:

22 And this water that causeth the curse shall [d]go into thy bowels, to make thy belly to swell, and thy thigh to rot. And [e]the woman shall say, [f]Amen, amen.[4]

23 And the priest shall [g]write these curses in a book, and he shall [h]blot them out with the bitter water:

and infirmity, they may still serve the church of God by their prayers, and an example of faith, patience, and obedience; and they are still entitled to respect and maintenance. They ought not, indeed, and will not desire, to cease from labour whilst capable of it, but they must not murmur if they are thus discharged, or if they see others "increase whilst they decrease." For the Lord will do his work by a succession of servants; and he will show them all that he can do without them; that the work is in his hand; that when he employs them, he does not need them; and that he can easily send out others in their stead, when they are no longer serviceable. Though we are not under the comparative obscurity and severity of the Mosaic dispensation, yet we should remember that heavenly things must be treated with reverence, and not curiously, contemptuously, or presumptuously inquired into. It is very dangerous to attempt being wise above what is written, in respect of those great mysteries which relate to the infinite God, and his works and ways; or to intrude into those things over which he hath purposely thrown a veil. And the ministers of God, and those who have attained to a superior degree of influence or authority, should caution and deter their juniors, and the people, from such intrusion.—Scott.

CHAP. V. LAW OF RESTITUTION.—We have in this section a law concerning restitution, in case of wrong done to a neighbour. It is called "a sin that men commit," ver. 6, because it is common among men; "a sin of man," that is, "a sin against man," so it is thought that it should be translated and understood. If a man overreach or defraud his brother in any matter, it is to be looked upon as a trespass against the Lord, who is the Protector of right, the Punisher of wrong, and who strictly charges and commands us to do justly. Now what is to be done when a man's awakened conscience charges him with guilt of this kind, and brings it to his remembrance, though done long ago? 1. He must "confess his sin," confess it to God, confess it to his neighbour, and so take shame to himself. If he have denied it before, though it go against the grain to own himself in a lie, yet he must do it; because his heart was hardened, he denied it, therefore he has no other way of making it appear that his heart is now softened, but by confessing it. 2. He must bring a sacrifice, a "ram of atonement," ver. 8. Satisfaction must be made for the offence done to God, whose law is broken, as well as for the loss sustained by our neighbour; restitution in that case is not sufficient without faith and repentance. 3. Yet the sacrifices would not be accepted till full amends was made to the party wronged, not only the principal, but a fifth part added to it, ver. 7. It is certain, that, while that which is got by injustice is knowingly retained in the hands, the guilt of the injustice remains upon the conscience, and is not purged by sacrifice or offering, prayers or tears, for it is one and the same continued act of sin persisted in. This law we had before, (Lev. vi. 4,) and it is here added, that, if the party wronged were dead, and he had no near kinsman who was entitled to the debt, or it were any way uncertain to whom the restitution should be made, that should not serve for an excuse to detain what was unjustly gotten; to whomsoever it pertained, it was certainly none of his that got it by sin, and therefore it must be given to the priest, ver. 8. If there were any that could make out a title to it, it must not be given to the priest; (God hates robbery for burnt-offerings;) but if there were not, then it lapsed to the great Lord, (ob defectum sanguinis—for want of issue,) and the priests were his receivers. Note, Some work of piety or charity is a piece of necessary justice to be done by those who are conscious to themselves that they have done wrong, but know not how otherwise to make restitution; what is not our property will never be our profit.—Henry.

LAW OF JEALOUSY.—As this process could not be carried on, except at the sanctuary, the trouble and expense attending it would render men cautious how they instituted it without some urgent reason. It is generally supposed that the water of the laver in the court of the tabernacle is meant; being called holy because of its separation from ordinary uses. This was put into a mean and brittle vessel, and dust from the floor of the tabernacle was cast into it for the woman to drink: all this implied the disgrace which she lay under, the shame to which she would be exposed if guilty, and the punishments that she would justly endure; in which every thing relating to the worship of a holy God would, as it were, combine together for her destruction. This water was called the bitter water, from the bitter effects which would follow, when drunk by a guilty person. "Instead of," &c. ver. 19, or, "being under the power of thy husband;" that is, a married woman, which was marked as the grand aggravation of the crime charged on her. "Amen, amen." This twofold solemn consent of the woman to the awful appeal to God, referring to both parts of it, implied a hearty desire to be dealt with according to her innocence or guilt; and an acknowledgment of the justice of God, in inflicting his dreadful vengeance upon such as were guilty. This appeal could not be made by a person who was consciously guilty without the most entire hardness of heart and presumptuous defiance of God, or even atheistical unbelief: and every circumstance was suited to warn and alarm the woman, that if guilty she might rather confess her crime, than venture the terrible consequences. The Jewish writers say, that if she refused this oath, and confessed her guilt, she was not put to death, but only divorced without a dowry. The words of the oath or curse were written on a piece of parchment, which was called a book at that time; and the writing was washed off into the water, as if the curse had the bitter water that causeth the curse: [l]and the water that causeth the curse shall enter into her, and become bitter.

25 Then the priest [k]shall take the jealousy-offering out of the woman's hand, and shall [l]wave the offering before the LORD, and offer it upon the altar.

26 And the priest shall take an handful of the offering, even [m]the memorial thereof, and burn it upon the altar, and afterward shall cause the woman to drink the water.

27 And when he hath made her to drink [s] the water, then it shall come to pass, that [n]if she be defiled, and have done trespass against her husband, that the water that causeth the curse shall enter into her, and become bitter, and her belly shall swell, and her thigh shall rot: and the woman [o]shall be a curse among her people.

28 And [p]if the woman be not defiled, but be clean; then she shall be free, and shall conceive seed.

29 This is [q]the law of jealousies, [r]when a wife goeth aside to another instead of her husband, and is defiled;[t]

30 Or when the spirit of jealousy cometh upon him, and he be jealous over his wife, and shall set the woman before the LORD, and the priest shall execute upon her all this law.

31 Then shall the man [u]be guiltless from iniquity,[v] and this woman shall [w]bear her iniquity.

The law of the Nazarite, 1. The form of blessing the people, 22.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, [a]When either man or woman shall [*]separate themselves [b]to vow a vow of a Nazarite,[1] to separate themselves unto the LORD;

3 He shall separate himself [c]from wine and strong drink, and shall drink no vinegar of wine, or vinegar of strong drink, neither shall he drink any liquor of grapes, nor eat moist grapes, or dried.

4 All the days of his [†]separation[2] shall he eat nothing that is made of the [‡]vine-tree, from the kernels even to the husk.

5 All the days of the vow of his separation there shall no [d]razor come upon his head; until the days be fulfilled, in the which he separateth himself unto the LORD, he shall be holy, and shall let the locks of the hair of his head grow.

6 All the days that he separateth himself unto the LORD [e]he shall come at no dead body.

7 He shall not make himself [f]unclean[3] for his father, or for his mother, for his brother, or for his sister, when they die; because the [§]consecration of his God is upon his head.

8 All the days of his separation he is holy unto the LORD.

9 And if any man die very suddenly by him, [g]and he hath defiled the head of his consecration; then he shall [h]shave his head in the day of his cleansing, on the seventh day shall he shave it.

10 And [i]on the eighth day he shall bring two turtles, or two young pigeons, to the priest, to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation;

11 And the priest shall [k]offer the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, and make an atonement for him, for that he sinned by the dead, [l]and shall hallow his head that same day.[4]

12 And he shall consecrate unto the LORD the days of his separation, and shall bring a lamb of the first year for [m]a trespass-offering: [n]but the days that were before shall [l]be lost, because his separation was defiled.

13 ¶ And this is the law of the Nazarite: When the days of his separation [o]are fulfilled, he shall be brought unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation;

14 And he shall offer his offering unto the LORD, [p]one he-lamb of the first year without blemish for a burnt-offering, and [q]one ewe-lamb of the first year without blemish for a sin-offering, and [r]one ram without blemish for peace-offerings,[5]

15 And [s]a basket of unleavened bread, cakes of fine flour mingled with oil, and wafers of unleavened bread [t]anointed with oil, and their meat-offering, and their [u]drink-offerings.

16 And the priest shall bring them before the LORD, and shall offer his sin-offering, and his burnt-offering.

17 And he shall offer the ram for a sacrifice of peace-offerings unto the LORD, with the basket of unleavened bread: the priest shall offer also his meat-offering, and his drink-offering.

18 And the Nazarite shall [x]shave the head of his separation at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; and shall take the hair of the head of his separation, [y]and put it in the fire which is under the sacrifice of the peace-offerings.

19 And the priest shall take the [z]sodden shoulder of the ram, and one unleavened cake out of the basket, and one unleavened wafer, and shall [a]put them upon the hands of the Nazarite, after the hair of his separation is shaven.

20 And [b]the priest shall wave them for a been infused in it, that the woman might drink it. The water, by its natural efficacy could not harm an innocent person. But if any woman added the awful guilt of such a deliberate perjury, to adultery, God would supernaturally thus punish her. The Jews have a tradition that the adulterer also would die of a similar disease at the same time; which probably was not altogether unlike that loathsome distemper, with which God has in these latter ages shown his abhorrence of lewdness; though it was far more immediate in its effects. Even when the husband's jealousy was groundless, he would not be accounted guilty, if he took this method of clearing up the matter: but otherwise it would lead him to do those things which would bring guilt upon him. This law is a singular proof of Moses' divine legation. No mere politician would have thought of such a law, which, at first sight, generally appears harsh and strange: yet the effect, when carried into execution, must have been in all respects most salutary, and worthy of the Divine wisdom. Again, it could not be carried into execution without a miracle: and no legislator, pretending to be sent by God, would have committed himself, by an institution which might at any time disprove his claim.—Scott.

CHAP. VI. THE NAZARITE.—The word rendered "Nazarite" signifies separated, or separation. The Lord himself set apart Samson and John the Baptist before their birth, to be Nazarites all their days: Samuel was devoted by his mother to be a perpetual Nazarite, when he was "asked of the LORD;" and the family of the Rechabites were a sort of Nazarites from one generation to another, by the injunction of Jonadab, their progenitor. But in general the Nazarites became such by a voluntary vow, which any person might make, of peculiar separation from the world, and devotedness to the exercises of religion, for a limited time, and under certain regulations. Among the distinguished favours which God conferred on Israel, it is stated that "he raised up of their young men for Nazarites;" whence we may infer, that their prayers, examples, and instructions, were considered as a public blessing. The word rendered "separate themselves," is the same that is used concerning a singular vow, and seems to convey the idea of a person's acting from an extraordinary zeal for God and religion. The Jews say, that this vow could not be made for less than thirty days; but St. Paul seems to have taken it for no more than seven days, Acts xxi. 24—27.—Scott.—The obligations that the Nazarites lay under were many and peculiar; that the families of superstitious men might not multiply their restraints endlessly, God himself lays down the law for them, and gives them the rule of their profession. 1. They must have nothing to do with "the fruit of the vine," ver. 3, 4. They must drink no wine nor strong drink, nor eat grapes, no not the kernel of the husk: they might not so much as eat a raisin. The learned Dr. Lightfoot has a conjecture, that as the ceremonial pollutions, by leprosy and otherwise, represented the sinful state of fallen man, so the institution of the order of Nazarites was designed to represent the pure and perfect state of man in innocency; and that the tree of knowledge, forbidden to Adam, was the vine, and for that reason it was forbidden to the Nazarites, and all the produce of it. They who gave the Nazarites wine to drink did the tempter's work, Amos ii. 12, persuading them to that forbidden fruit. That it was reckoned a perfection and praise not to drink wine, appears from the instance of the Rechabites, Jer. xxxv. 6. They were to "drink no wine;" that they might be examples of temperance and mortification. Those that separate themselves to God and to his honour, must not gratify the desires of the body, but keep that under and bring it into subjection. Drinking "a little wine for the stomach's sake" is allowed, to help that, 1 Tim. v. 23. But drinking much wine for the "palate's sake," to please that, does by no means become those who profess to walk not "after the flesh, but after the Spirit." 2. They must not "cut their hair," ver. 5. They must neither poll their heads, nor shave their beards; this was that mark of Samson's Nazariteship, which we often read of in his story. Now, (1.) This signified a noble neglect of the body and the ease and ornament of it, which became those who, being separated to God, ought to be wholly taken up with their souls, to secure their peace and beauty. It signified that they had, for the present, renounced all sorts of sensual pleasures and delights, and resolved to live a life of self-denial and mortification. Mephibosheth in sorrow "trimmed not his beard," 2 Sam. xix. 24. (2.) Some observe, that long hair is spoken of as a badge of subjection, 1 Cor. xi. 5, &c. So that the long hair of the Nazarites denoted their subjection to God, and their putting themselves under his dominion. (3.) By this they were known to all that met them to be Nazarites, and so it commanded respect. It made them look great without art; it was nature's crown to the head, and a testimony for them that they had preserved their purity. For, if they had been defiled, their hair must have been cut, ver. 9. See Jer. vii. 29. 3. They must not come near any dead body, ver. 6, 7. Others might touch dead bodies, and contracted only a ceremonial pollution by it for some time; some must do it, else the dead must be unburied; but the Nazarites must not do it, upon pain of forfeiting all the honour of their Nazariteship. They must not attend the funeral of any relation, no not father or mother, any more than the high priest himself, because "the consecration of his God is upon his head." 4. All "the days of their separation," they must be "holy to the Lord," ver. 8. This was the meaning of those external observances, and without this they were of no account. The Nazarites must be devoted to God, employed for him, and their minds intent upon him; they must keep themselves

The princes' offerings, 1-10. God speaketh to Moses from the mercy-seat, 89.

AND it came to pass on the day that Moses [a]had fully set up the tabernacle, and had [b]anointed it, and sanctified it, and all the instruments thereof, both the altar, and all the vessels thereof, and had anointed them, and [c]sanctified them,

2 That [d]the princes of Israel, heads of the house of their fathers, (who were the princes of the tribes, and *were over them that were numbered,) [e]offered.

3 And they brought their offering before the LORD, six covered waggons, and twelve oxen; a waggon for two of the princes, and for each one an ox: and they brought them before the tabernacle.

4 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

5 [f]Take it of them, that they may be to do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation; and thou shalt give them unto the Levites, to every man according to his service.

6 And Moses took the waggons and the oxen, and gave them unto the Levites.

7 [g]Two waggons and four oxen he gave unto the sons of Gershon, according to their service:

8 And [h]four waggons and eight oxen[1] he gave unto the sons of Merari, according unto their service, under the hand of Ithamar, the son of Aaron the priest.

9 But unto the sons of Kohath he gave none; [i]because the service of the sanctuary belonging unto them was, that they should bear upon their shoulders.

10 ¶ And the princes offered for [k]dedicating of the altar, in the day that it was anointed, even the princes offered their offering before the altar.[2]

11 And the LORD said unto Moses, [l]They shall offer their offering, each prince on his day, for the dedicating of the altar.

12 ¶ And he that offered his offering the first day was [m]Nahshon the son of Amminadab, of the tribe of Judah.

13 And his offering was one silver [n]charger, the weight whereof was an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after [o]the shekel of the sanctuary, both of them were full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a [p]meat-offering:

14 One [q]spoon of ten shekels of gold, full of [r]incense:

15 [s]One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering:

16 One kid of the goats for [t]a sin-offering:

17 And for a sacrifice of [u]peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Nahshon[3] the son of Amminadab.

18 ¶ On the second day [x]Nethaneel the son of Zuar, prince of Issachar, did offer.

19 He [y]offered for his offering one silver charger, the weight whereof was an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering:

20 One spoon of gold of ten shekels, full of incense:

21 One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for [z]a burnt-offering:

22 One kid of the goats for a sin-offering:

23 And for a sacrifice of [a]peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering[4] of Nethaneel the son af Zuar.

24 ¶ On the third day [b]Eliab the son of Helon, prince of the children of Zebulun, did offer.

25 His offering was one silver charger, the weight whereof was an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering:

26 One golden spoon of ten shekels, full of incense:

27 One [c]young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering:

28 One kid of the goats for a sin-offering:

29 And for a sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs pure in heart and life, and be in every thing conformable to the divine image and will; this is to be holy, this is to be a Nazarite indeed.—Henry.

THE BENEDICTION.—The word "JEHOVAH is three times solemnly repeated in this benediction, and the Jews themselves have supposed that there is some great mystery contained in that repetition. When we compare it with the form of Christian baptism; "Into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost;" with the blessing that St. Paul pronounced on the Corinthians, which is in common use in our places of worship; and with John's salutation of the churches, Rev. i. 4, 5, we can be at no loss to determine what that mystery is. Sinners are blessed with spiritual blessings by the triune God of salvation, the Father who chose, the Son who redeemed, and the Holy Spirit who sanctifies, and comforts, all the elect people of God.—To abide, in body and soul, under the almighty protection of God our Saviour, and to enjoy his favour, as the smile of a loving Father, or, as the enlightening, cheering beams of the sun, whilst he mercifully forgives our sins, pities our sorrows, supplies our wants, satisfies our desires, and communicates sweet peace to the conscience, and consolation to the heart; and whilst he graciously accepts our persons and services, and prepares us for eternal glory: these things form the substance of this blessing, and the sum total of all blessings: and in such a rich inventory, worldly joys are not deemed worthy to be mentioned. The texts, referred to in the margin, throw great light on the several words here used. It may also be observed, that the original is in the future tense, "JEHOVAH will bless thee," &c. The nation of Israel collectively seems to have been especially intended; and the Lord will assuredly bless his people Israel, and all who are Israelites indeed.—Can any man, after carefully considering the words of this blessing, help being astonished, to hear learned divines seriously maintain, that the Israelites were taught in the law to expect only temporal advantages, and that the precepts were guarded only by temporal sanctions?—Scott.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Whilst we rejoice in Christ Jesus, as persevering in the work, for which he had separated and sanctified himself, without contracting any defilement, or shrinking from self-denial or suffering, till he had completed it, and arrived with honour and glory unspeakable at the joy set before him; let us not forget, that he is our example, as well as our surety. For his sake we must renounce worldly pleasures, abstain from fleshly lusts, separate from sinners, touch no unclean thing, be indifferent about the indulgence or adorning of our bodies, be intent about the feeding and adorning of our souls, make an open profession of our faith, moderate natural affections, be abstracted from worldly cares, be spiritually minded and devoted to God's service, zealous for his glory, and desirous to be an example and a blessing to his people, and to all around us.—If, after profession of faith in Christ, any wilfully and finally apostatize and return to wickedness, "there remains no other sacrifice, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation," Heb. x. 26, 27.—Scott.

CHAP. VII. MUNIFICENT OFFERINGS AT THE DEDICATION OF THE TABERNACLE.—We have here an account of the great solemnity of dedicating the altars, both that of burnt-offerings, and that of incense: they had been sanctified before, when they were anointed, Lev. viii. 10, 11, but now they were handselled, as it were, by the princes, with their freewill-offerings. They began the use of them with rich presents, great expressions of joy and gladness, and extraordinary respect to those tokens of God's presence with them. Now observe here, I. That the princes and great men were first and forwardest in the service of God. Those that are entitled to precedency should go before in good works, and that is true honour. Here is an example to the nobility and gentry, those that are in authority, and of the first rank in their country; they ought to improve their honour and power, their estate and interest, for the promoting of religion, and the service of God, in the places where they live. It is justly expected, that they who have more than others should do more good than others with what they have, else they are unfaithful stewards, and will not make up their "account with joy." Nay, great men must not only with their wealth and power assist and protect those that serve God, but they must make conscience of being devout and religious themselves, and employing themselves in the exercises of piety, which will greatly redound to the honour of God, Ps. cxxxviii. 4, 5, and have a good influence upon others, who will be the more easily persuaded to the acts of devotion, when they see them thus brought into reputation. It is certain that the greatest of men is less than the least of the ordinances of God; nor are the meanest services of religion any disparagement to those that make the greatest figure in the world. II. The offerings they brought were very rich and valuable; so rich, that some think there was not so great a difference in estate between them and others, as that they were able to bear the expense of them themselves, but that the heads of each tribe contributed to the offering which their prince brought. 1. They brought some things to remain for standing service; twelve large silver dishes, each about sixty ounces weight; as many large silver cups, or bowls, of about thirty-five ounces; the former to be used for the meat-offerings, the latter for the drink-offerings; the former for the flesh of the sacrifices, the latter for the blood. The latter was God's table, (as it were,) and it was fit that so great a King should be served in plate. The golden spoons, being filled with incense, were intended, it is probable, for the service of the golden altar, for both the altars were anointed at the same time. Note, In works of 47 And for a sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Eliasaph the son of Deuel.

48 ¶ On the seventh day[6] [l]Elishama the son of Ammihud, prince of the children of Ephraim, offered.

49 His offering was one silver charger, the weight whereof was an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering:

50 One golden spoon of ten shekels, full of incense:

51 One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering:

52 One kid of the goats for a sin-offering:

53 And for a sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Elishama the son of Ammihud.

54 ¶ On the eighth day offered [m]Gamaliel the son of Pedahzur, prince of the children of Manasseh.

55 His offering was one silver charger,[7] of the weight of an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering:

56 One golden spoon of ten shekels, full of incense:

57 One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering:

58 One kid of the goats for a sin-offering:

59 And for a sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Gamaliel the son of Pedahzur.

60 ¶ On the ninth day [n]Abidan the son of Gideoni, prince of the children of Benjamin, offered.

61 His offering was one silver charger, the weight whereof was an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering:

62 One golden spoon of ten shekels, full of [o]incense:

63 One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering:

64 One kid of the goats for a sin-offering:

65 And for a sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Abidan the son of Gedeoni.

66 ¶ On the tenth day [p]Ahiezer the son of Ammishaddai, prince of the children of Dan, offered.[8]

67 His offering was one silver charger, the weight whereof was an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering:

[5] Here the captains of the tribes offer every one in his day, not according to their births, or as they are named in Num. i., but according to the order wherein God had set them round about his sanctuary, in Num. ii., beginning at the east quarter, proceeding to the south, then to the west, and ending at the north, according to the course of the sun, as may be viewed thus: of

Thus God would have that order kept in their oblations which he had appointed for their situations (Num. ii), and so likewise for their journeyings (Num. x. 14-27), to shew that he is not the author of confused tumult, but of peace (1 Cor. xiv. 33). And Judah, in Naasson his son, was first in these oblations, as in many other things, for to type out the honour of Christ, who was to be his son according to the flesh (Heb. vii. 14). —AINSWORTH.

[8] The occasion must have been one of great and striking solemnity, and, from the account here given, reminding us strongly of the annual festival of Nurooz in Persia, when the king sits in great state and glory, with the nobles of his court attending in their most gorgeous attire, and thus receives in succession a long series of costly offerings, which the princes who govern the provinces of his empire send at that time to the capital for his acceptance, and which are of such value as to form one of the principal portions of his yearly revenue.—PICTORIAL BIBLE.

piety, and charity, we ought to be generous according as our ability is. The Israelites indeed might well afford to part with their gold and silver in abundance to the service of the sanctuary, for they needed it not to buy meat, and victual their camp, who were daily fed with bread from heaven; nor did they need it to buy bread, or pay their army, who were shortly to be put in possession of Canaan. 2. They brought some things to be used immediately, offerings of each sort, burnt-offerings, sin-offerings, and a great many peace-offerings, (on part of which they were to feast with their friends,) and the meat-offerings that were to be annexed to them. Hereby they signified their thankful acceptance of, and cheerful submission to, all those laws concerning the sacrifices which God had lately by Moses delivered to them. And though it was a time of joy and rejoicing, yet it is observable that still in the midst of their sacrifices we find a sin-offering; since in our best services we are conscious to ourselves that there is a mixture of sin, it is fit that there should be even in our most joyful services a mixture of repentance. In all our approaches to God, we must by faith have an eye to Christ as the great Sin-offering, and make mention of him. 3. They brought their offerings each on a several day, in the order that they had been lately put into, so that the solemnity lasted twelve days. So God appointed, ver. 11, "They shall bring their offering, each prince on his day," and so they did. One Sabbath must needs fall within the twelve days, if not two, but it should seem they did not intermit on the Sabbath, for it was holy work, proper enough for a holy day. God appointed that it should thus be done on several days; (1.) That the solemnity might be prolonged, and so might be universally taken notice of by all Israel, and the remembrance of it more effectually preserved. (2.) That an equal honour might thereby be put upon each several tribe; in Aaron's breastplate each had his precious stone, so in this offering each had his day. (3.) Thus it would be done more decently and in order; God's work should not be done confusedly, and in a hurry; take time, and we shall have done the sooner; or, at least, we shall have done the better. (4.) God hereby signified how much pleased he is, and how much pleased we should be, with the exercises of piety and devotion. The repetition of them should be a continual pleasure to us, and we must not be weary of well-doing. If extraordinary services come to be done for twelve days together, we must not shrink from it, nor call it a task and a burden. (5.) The priests and Levites, having this occasion to offer the same sacrifices, and those some of every sort, every day, for so many days together, would have their hands well set in, and would be well versed in the laws concerning them. (6.) The peace-offerings were all to be eaten the same day they were offered, and two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, and five lambs, were enough for one day's festival; had there been more, especially if all had been brought on [illegible] might have been danger of excess. The virtue of temperance must not be left, under pretence of the religion of feasting. 4. All their offerings were exactly the same, without any variation, though it is probable that neither the princes nor the tribes were all alike rich; but thus it was intimated that all the tribes of Israel had an equal share in the altar, and an equal interest in the sacrifices that were offered upon it. Though one tribe was posted more honourably in the camp than another, yet they and their services were all alike acceptable to God. Nor must we have the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ "with respect to persons," Jam. ii. 1. 5. Nahshon, the prince of the tribe of Judah, offered first, because God had given that tribe the first post of honour in the camp; and the rest of the tribes acquiesced, and offered in the same order in which God had appointed them to encamp. Judah, of which tribe Christ came, first, and then the rest; thus, in the dedication of souls to God, every man is presented in his own order, "Christ the First-Fruits," 1 Cor. xv. 23. Some observe that Nahshon is the only one that is not expressly called a prince, ver. 12, which the Jews give this account of; he is not called a prince, that he might not be puffed up because he offered first; and all the others are called princes, because they (though some of them of the elder house) submitted, and offered after him. Or, because the title of "Prince of Judah" did more properly belong to Christ, for "unto him shall the gathering of the people be." 6. Though the offerings were all the same, yet the account of them is repeated at large for each tribe, in the same words. We are sure there are no vain repetitions in scripture; what then shall we make of these repetitions? Might it not have served, to say of this noble jury, that the same offering which their foreman brought, each on his day brought likewise? No, God would have it specified for each tribe; and why so? (1.) It was for the encouragement of these princes, and of their respective tribes, that, each of their offerings being recorded at large, no slight might seem to be put upon them; for rich and poor meet together before God. (2.) It was for the encouragement of all generous acts of piety and charity, by letting us know that what is given is lent to the Lord, and he carefully records it, with every one's name prefixed to his gift, because what is so given he will pay again, and even a "cup of cold water" shall have its "reward." He is not unrighteous, to forget either the cost or the "labour of love," Heb. vi. 10. We find Christ taking particular notice of what was cast into the treasury, Mark xii. 41. Though what is offered be but little, while it is according to our ability, though it be a contribution mixed with the charity of others, yet it shall be recorded, that it may be recompensed in the resurrection of the just. 7. The sum total is added at the foot of the account, ver. 84—88, to show how much God was [illegible] with the number of [illegible] with offerings, and what a great [illegible] in the whole, which

82 One kid of the goats for a sin-offering:

83 And for a sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Ahira the son of Enan.

84 This was [s]the dedication of the altar[10] (in the day when it was anointed) by the [t]princes of Israel: twelve chargers of silver, twelve silver bowls, twelve spoons of gold:

85 Each charger of silver weighing an hundred and thirty shekels, each bowl seventy: all the silver vessels weighed [u]two thousand and four hundred shekels, [x]after the shekel of the sanctuary.[11]

86 The golden spoons were twelve, full of incense, weighing ten shekels apiece, after the shekel of the sanctuary: all the gold of the spoons was an hundred and twenty shekels.

87 All the oxen for the burnt-offering were twelve bullocks, the rams twelve, the lambs of the first year twelve, with their meat-offering; and the kids of the goats for sin-offering twelve.

88 And all the oxen, for the sacrifice of the peace-offerings, were twenty and four bullocks, the rams sixty, the he-goats sixty, the lambs of the first year sixty.[12] This was the dedication of the altar, after [y]that it was anointed.

89 ¶ And when Moses was gone into the tabernacle of the congregation [z]to speak with [†]him, then [a]he heard the voice of one speaking unto him from off the mercy-seat that was upon the ark of testimony, from between the [b]two cherubims: and he spake unto him.

How the lamps are to be lighted, 1. The consecration of the Levites, 5. The age and time of their service, 23.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 Speak unto Aaron, and say unto him, When thou [a]lightest the lamps, the seven lamps shall give light over against the candlestick.

3 And Aaron did so: he lighted the lamps thereof over against the candlestick, as the LORD commanded Moses.

4 And [b]this work of the candlestick was of beaten gold; unto the shaft thereof, unto the flowers thereof, was [c]beaten work: according unto [d]the pattern which the LORD had shewed Moses, so he made the candlestick.

5 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

6 Take the Levites from among the children of Israel, and [e]cleanse them.

7 And thus shalt thou do unto them, to cleanse them: [f]Sprinkle [g]water of purifying upon them, and [*]let them shave all their flesh, and let them [h]wash their clothes, and so make themselves clean.

8 Then let them take [i]a young bullock with [k]his meat-offering, even fine flour mingled with oil, and [l]another young bullock shalt thou take for a sin-offering.

9 And [m]thou shalt bring the Levites before the tabernacle of the congregation; and thou [n]shalt gather the whole assembly of the children of Israel together.

10 And thou shalt bring the Levites before the LORD; and [o]the children of Israel shall put their hands upon the Levites:

11 And Aaron shall [†]offer the Levites before the LORD for an [‡]offering of the children of Israel, that [§]they may [p]execute the service of the LORD.

12 And the [q]Levites shall lay their hands upon the heads of the bullocks: and thou shalt offer [r]the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, unto the LORD, to make an [s]atonement for the Levites.

13 And thou shalt set the Levites before Aaron, and before his sons, [t]and offer them for an offering unto the LORD.

brought in his quota. How greatly would the sanctuary of God be enriched and beautified, if all would in their places do their part towards it, by exemplary purity and devotion, extensive charity, and universal usefulness! 1. God signified his gracious acceptance of these presents that were brought him, by speaking familiarly to Moses, as a man speaks to his friend, from off the mercy-seat: ver. 89, chap. xii. 8, and in speaking to him, he did in effect speak to all Israel, showing them this token for good, Ps. ciii. 7. Note, By this we may know that God hears and accepts our prayers, if he gives us grace to hear and receive his word, for thus our communion with him is maintained and kept up. I know not why we may not suppose, that, upon each of the days on which these offerings were brought, (probably, while the priests and offerers were feasting upon the peace-offerings,) Moses was in the tabernacle, receiving some of these laws and orders which we have already met with in this and the foregoing book. And here the excellent Bishop Patrick observes, that God's speaking to Moses thus by an audible articulate voice, as if he had been clothed with a body, might be looked upon as an earnest of the incarnation of the Son of God in the fulness of time, when the word should be made flesh, and speak in the language of the sons of men. For however "God at sundry times and in divers manners spake unto the fathers, he has, in these last days, spoken unto us by his Son." And that He who now spake to Moses, as the Shechinah or Divine Majesty, from between the cherubims, was the Eternal Word, the second Person in the Trinity, was the pious conjecture of many of the ancients; for all God's communion with man is by his Son, by whom he made the world, and rules the church, and who "is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever."—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—They whom Providence distinguishes as princes, nobles, or wealthy persons, should take the lead and set the example in every good work; with liberal hearts devising "liberal things;" for this is the proper improvement of their talents. But a liberal mind should be under the direction of prudence and discretion: and the circumstances of the times, the state of the church and its ministers, and the necessities of those around them, should be considered; that nothing may be wasted in useless [illegible] but all wisely directed to the substantial benefit of those who need it. The [illegible] God have no occasion to be discouraged, in the prospect either of heavy [illegible] of fiery trials; for he can send them seasonable and unexpected relief when- [illegible] will be sure to proportion his assistance to their necessities. Every [illegible] should be "done [illegible] as may best [illegible] honour. All our works of piety and charity must be accompanied with an humble acknowledgment of our sinfulness, and a believing dependence on the sacrifice of Christ; they must spring from love to God, gratitude to him for the blessings of redemption, an unreserved surrender of ourselves to his service, and a disposition to delight in doing his will and in rendering him all the praise. Such good works are "spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God through Jesus Christ." The Lord delights to honour those who thus honour him. He remembers and records their expressions of faith and love. In this world he communes with his disciples from his mercy-seat, by answering their prayers, and counselling and comforting their hearts: and he will at the day of judgment publish to the assembled universe, distinctly and particularly, the fruits of holiness, which by his grace they produced on earth; as evincing them the heirs of the "kingdom prepared for his people, from before the foundation of the world."—Scott.

CHAP. VIII. CONSECRATION OF THE LEVITES.—The Levites were not distinguished from the other Israelites, by any prescribed garments; nor were they washed or anointed, after the manner in which the priests had been: but though they were set apart with less solemnity, to mark the inferiority of their office, and because they were not so expressly typical of Christ as the priests were; yet there was equally a remembrance of sin, both in its guilt and defilement, and of the need of atonement and sanctification in the separation of them to their office. Their clothes were washed; they were sprinkled with the water of purifying; a sin-offering and a burnt-offering were sacrificed in their behalf; and they shaved all their flesh, according to the ceremony of the leper's purification. This might denote "the laying apart all filthiness, and superfluity of naughtiness;" the mortification of natural depravity, and the renouncing of unnecessary worldly avocations and employments, that they might more entirely devote their time and attention to the services assigned them.—Scott.

THEIR DUTIES.—They were given as a gift to Aaron and his sons, ver. 19, yet so that as the benefit accrued to the children of Israel. 1. The Levites must act under the priests, as attendants on them, and assistants to them, in the service of the sanctuary. Aaron offers them to God, ver. 11, and then God gives them back to Aaron, ver. 19. Note, Whatever we give up to God he will give back to us, unspeakably to our advantage. Our hearts, our children, our estates, are never more ours, more truly, more comfortably ours, than when we have offered them up to God. 2. They must act for the [illegible] They were [illegible] to the service of the children of Israel," that is, not only [illegible] must do, but to serve their interests, and [illegible] [illegible] safety, and prosperity of the whole [illegible]

14 Thus shalt thou [u]separate the Levites from among the children of Israel; [x]and the Levites shall be mine.

15 And after that shall the Levites [y]go in to do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation: and thou shalt cleanse them, [z]and offer them for an offering.

16 For they are wholly given unto me from among the children of Israel; [a]instead of such as open every womb, even instead of the first-born of all the children of Israel, have I taken them unto me.

17 For [b]all the first-born of the children of Israel are mine, both man and beast: [c]on the day that I smote every first-born in the land of Egypt [d]I sanctified them for myself.

18 And I have taken the Levites for all the first-born of the children of Israel.

19 And [e]I have given the Levites as [f]a gift to Aaron, and to his sons, from among the children of Israel, to do the service of the children of Israel in the tabernacle of the congregation, and to make an atonement for the children of Israel; [g]that there be no plague[1] among the children of Israel, when the children of Israel come nigh unto the sanctuary.

20 And Moses, and Aaron, and all the congregation of the children of Israel, did to the Levites according unto all that the LORD commanded Moses concerning the Levites, so did the children of Israel unto them.

21 And the Levites [h]were purified, and they washed their clothes; and Aaron [i]offered them as an offering before the LORD; [k]and Aaron made an atonement for them to cleanse them.

22 And [l]after that went the Levites in to do their service in the tabernacle of the congregation before Aaron, and before his sons: as the LORD had commanded Moses concerning the Levites, so did they unto them.

23 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

24 This is it that belongeth unto the Levites: [m]from twenty and five years old[2] and upward they shall go in to [n]wait upon the service of the tabernacle of the congregation:

25 And from the age of fifty years they shall [o]cease waiting upon the service thereof, and shall serve no more;

26 But shall minister with their brethren in the tabernacle of the congregation, [p]to keep the charge, and shall do no service. Thus shalt thou do unto the Levites touching their charge.

A.M. 2514.—B.C. 1490.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, [a]in the first month[1] of the second year after they were come out of the land of Egypt, saying,

2 Let the children of Israel also [b]keep the passover[2] at [c]his appointed season.

3 In the fourteenth day of this month, [*]at even, ye shall keep it in his appointed season: [d]according to all the rites of it, and according to all the ceremonies thereof, shall ye keep it.

4 And Moses spake unto the children of Israel, that they should keep the passover.

5 And they kept the passover on the fourteenth day of the first month at even in the wilderness of Sinai: [*]according to all that the LORD commanded Moses, so did the children of Israel.

6 ¶ And there were certain men, who were [f]defiled by the dead body of a man, that they could not keep the passover on that day: and [g]they came before Moses and before Aaron on that day.

7 And those men said unto him, We are defiled by the dead body of a man: wherefore are we kept back, that [h]we may not offer an offering of the LORD in his appointed season among the children of Israel?

8 And Moses said unto them, [i]Stand still, and [k]I will hear what the LORD will command concerning you.

9 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

10 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If any man of you, or of your posterity, shall [l]be unclean by reason of a dead body, or be in a journey afar off, [m]yet he shall keep the passover unto the LORD.

11 The [n]fourteenth day[3] of the second month at even they shall keep it, [o]and eat it with unleavened bread and bitter herbs.

12 They [p]shall leave none of it unto the morning, nor [q]break any bone of it: [r]according to all the ordinances of the passover they shall keep it.

13 But the man that is clean, and is not in a journey, and [s]forbeareth to keep the passover, even the same soul shall be cut off from his people: [t]because he brought not the offering of the LORD in his appointed season, that man shall [u]bear his sin.

14 And [x]if a stranger shall sojourn among you, and will keep the passover unto the LORD; according to the ordinance of the passover, and according to the manner thereof, so shall he do: ye shall have one ordinance, both for the stranger, and for him that was born in the land.

They that faithfully perform the service of God do one of the best services that can be done to the public; God's ministers, while they keep within the sphere of their office, and conscientiously discharge the duty of it, must be looked upon as some of the most useful servants of their country. The children of Israel can as ill spare the tribe of Levi as any of their tribes. But what is the service they do the children of Israel? It follows it is to "make an atonement for them, that there be no plague among them." It was the priests' work to make atonement by sacrifice; but the Levites made atonement by attendance, and preserved the peace with heaven, which was made by sacrifice. If the service of the priests in the tabernacle had been left to all the first-born of Israel promiscuously, it would have been either neglected, or done unskilfully and irreverently, being done by those that were neither so closely tied to it, nor so diligently trained up to it, nor so constantly used to it, as the Levites were; and this would bring "a plague among the children of Israel;" meaning, perhaps, the death of the first-born themselves, which was the last and greatest of the plagues of Egypt. To prevent this, and to preserve the atonement, the Levites were appointed to do this service, who should be bred up to it under their parents from their infancy, and therefore would be well versed in it; and so the children of Israel, that is the first-born, should not need to come nigh to the sanctuary; or, when any Israelites had occasion, the Levites would be ready to instruct them, and introduce them, and so prevent any fatal miscarriage or mistake. Note, It is a very great kindness to the church, that ministers are appointed to go before them in the things of God, as guides, overseers, and rulers, in religious worship, and to make that their business. When Christ ascended on high, he "gave these gifts," Eph. iv. 8, 11, 12.

PERIOD OF THEIR SERVICE.—The time of their ministration is fixed. 1. They were to enter upon the service at twenty-five years old, ver. 24. They were not charged with the carrying of the tabernacle, and the utensils of it, till they were thirty years old, chap. iv. 3. But they were entered to be otherwise serviceable at twenty-five years old; a very good age for ministers to begin their public work at. The work then required that strength of body, and the work now requires that maturity of judgment and steadiness of behaviour, which men rarely arrive at till about that age: and novices are in danger of being lifted up with pride. 2. They were to have a writ of ease at fifty years old; then they were to return from the warfare, as the phrase is, ver. 25, not cashiered with disgrace, but preferred rather to the rest which their age required, to be loaded with the honours of their office, as hitherto they had been with the burthens of it. They should continue with their brethren in the tabernacle, to direct the junior Levites, and see that they shall "keep the charge," as guards upon the avenues of the tabernacle, to [illegible] no stranger intruded, nor any person in his uncleanness, but they shall not be put upon any service which may be a fatigue to them. If God's grace provide that men shall have ability, according to their work, man's prudence should take care that men have work only according to their ability. The aged are most fit for trusts, and to keep the charge; the younger are most fit for work, and to do the service. Those that have "used the office of a servant well, purchase to themselves a good degree," 1 Tim. iii. 13. Yet indeed, gifts are not tied to ages, Job xxxii. 9, but "all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit." Thus was the affair of the Levites settled.—Henry.

CHAP. IX. SECONDARY PASSOVER.—Those that happened to be ceremonially unclean at the time when the passover should be eaten, were allowed to eat it that day month, when they were clean; so were those that happened to be "in a journey afar off," ver. 10, 11. See here, 1. That when we are to attend upon God in solemn ordinances, it is very necessary both that we be clean, and that we be composed. 2. That that may excuse the deferring of a duty for a time, which yet will not justify us in the total neglect and omission of it. He that is at variance with his brother may "leave his gift before the altar," while he goes to be "reconciled to his brother;" but when he has done his part towards it, whether it be effected or no, he must "come again and offer his gift," Matt. v. 23, 24. The secondary passover was to be kept on the same day of the month with the first, because the ordinance was a memorial of their deliverance on that day of the month. Once we find the whole congregation keeping the passover, on this fourteenth day of the second month, in Hezekiah's time, 2 Chron. xxx. 15, which perhaps might help to account for the admission of some that were not clean to the eating of it; had the general passover been kept in the first month, the unclean might have been put off till the second; but that being kept in the second month, they had no warrant to eat it in the third month; and therefore, rather than not eat of it at all, they were admitted, though not cleansed "according to the purification of the sanctuary," ver. 19, 20. When the passover was observed in the second month, all the rites and ceremonies of it must be strictly observed, ver. 12. They must not think, that, because the time was dispensed with, any part of the solemnity of it might be abated; no, when we cannot do as we would, we must do the utmost we can, in the service of God.—Henry.

mony: and at even there was upon the tabernacle as it were the appearance of fire, until the morning.

16 So it was [a]alway: the cloud covered it by day, and the appearance of fire by night.

17 And [b]when the cloud was taken up from the tabernacle, then after that the children of Israel journeyed: [c]and in the place where the cloud abode, there the children of Israel pitched their tents.

18 At the commandment of the LORD the children of Israel journeyed, [d]and at the commandment of the LORD they pitched: as long as the cloud abode upon the tabernacle they rested in their tents.

19 And when the cloud [†]tarried long upon the tabernacle many days, then the children of Israel [e]kept the charge of the LORD, and journeyed not.

20 And so it was, when the cloud was a few days upon the tabernacle; according to the commandment of the LORD they abode in their tents, and according to the commandment of the LORD they journeyed.

21 And so it was, when the cloud [‡]abode from even unto the morning, and that the cloud was taken up in the morning, then they journeyed: whether it was by day or by night[4] that the cloud was taken up, they journeyed.

22 Or whether it were two days, or a month, or a year, that the cloud tarried upon the tabernacle, remaining thereon, the children of Israel [f]abode in their tents, and journeyed not: but when it was taken up, they journeyed.[5]

23 At the commandment of the LORD they rested in their tents, and at the commandment of the LORD they journeyed: [g]they kept the charge of the LORD, at the commandment of the LORD by the hand of Moses.[6]

The use of the silver trumpets, 1. The Israelites remove from Sinai, 11.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Make thee [a]two trumpets of silver;[1] [b]of a whole piece shalt thou make them: that thou mayest use them for [c]the calling of the assembly, and for the journeying of the camps.

3 And when [d]they shall blow with them, all the assembly shall assemble themselves to thee at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

4 And if they blow but with one trumpet, then the princes, which are [e]heads of the thousands of Israel, shall gather themselves unto thee.

5 When ye [f]blow an alarm, then [g]the camps that lie on the east parts shall go forward.

6 When ye blow an alarm the second time, then [h]the camps that lie on the south side shall take their journey: they shall blow an alarm[2] for their journeys.

7 But when the congregation is to be gathered together, [i]ye shall blow, but ye shall not sound an alarm.

8 And [k]the sons of Aaron, the priests, shall blow with the trumpets: and they shall be to you for an ordinance for ever throughout your generations.

9 And if ye go to war in your land against the enemy that [l]oppresseth you, [m]then ye shall blow an alarm with the trumpets; and ye shall be [n]remembered before the LORD your God, and ye shall be saved from your enemies.

10 Also [o]in the day of your gladness, and in your solemn days, and in the beginnings of your months, ye shall blow with the trumpets over your burnt-offerings, and over the sacrifices of your peace-offerings; that they may be to you for [p]a memorial before your God: I am the LORD your God.

11 ¶ And it came to pass [q]on the twentieth day of the second month, in the second year, that [r]the cloud was taken up from off the tabernacle of the testimony.

12 And the children of Israel [s]took their journeys [t]out of the wilderness of Sinai; and the cloud rested in [u]the wilderness of Paran.

13 And they first [x]took their journey, according to the commandment of the LORD by the hand of Moses.

14 ¶ In [y]the first place went the standard of the camp of the children of Judah, according to their armies: and over his host was [z]Nahshon the son of Amminadab.

15 And over the host of the tribe of the children of [a]Issachar was Nethaneel the son of Zuar.

16 And over the host of the tribe of the children of [b]Zebulun was Eliab the son of Helon.

17 And [c]the tabernacle was taken down; and [d]the sons of Gershon and the sons of Merari set forward, bearing the tabernacle.[3]

18 ¶ And the standard of [e]the camp of Reuben set forward, according to their armies: and over his host was [f]Elizur the son of Shedeur.

19 And over the host of the tribe of the children of [g]Simeon was Shelumiel the son of Zurishaddai.

20 And over the host of the tribe of the children of Gad was [h]Eliasaph the son of Deuel.

[1] Trumpets were used in the Jewish worship in the wilderness. Two were made of silver, as appears from this place, which, Josephus says, were near a cubit in length, curved at the end like a bell, and at the mouth just of width sufficient to admit the breath. The purpose of these instruments was for conducting the journeyings and restings of the camp.—CALMET.

mentator, in many places paraphrases the words, rendered, "at the commandment of the LORD," at the mouth of the Word of the LORD. This shows that the ancient Jews had some knowledge of the doctrine, with which the apostle John sublimely opens his gospel. The case of two or three millions of people, shut up in a dreary wilderness, for almost forty years, without ever seeing house, or garden, or corn field; as completely as if the highest walls, garrisoned by the most valiant troops, had surrounded them; compared with their rebellions in other things, and their submission in this respect; most strikingly shows, that they were convinced beyond the possibility of doubt, that resistance must be unavailing; yet nothing short of having witnessed the miracles recorded in these books, could have induced this strong conviction.—Scott.

DIVINE GUIDANCE.—Nothing could be more expressive and significant of God's tenderness of Israel than the conduct of this cloud was; it led them by the "right way," Ps. cvii. 7, went on their pace; God did by it, as it were, cover them with his feathers. The people of Israel, having the cloud for their guide, were eased of the trouble of holding councils of war, to consider when and whither they should march, which might have occasioned strifes and debates among them: nor needed they to send spies before to inform them of the posture of the country, or pioneers to clear the way, or officers to mark out their camp; the pillar of cloud did all this for them: and those that by faith commit their works to the Lord, though they are bound to the prudent use of means, yet may in like manner be easy in the expectations of the event; "'Father, thy will be done;' dispose of me and mine as thou pleasest; here I am, desirous to be found 'waiting on my God continually,' to journey and rest at 'the commandment of the Lord.' What thou wilt, and where thou wilt, only let me be thine, and always in the way of my duty."—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—We are so immersed with the things of time and sense, that the most pure minds have need to be repeatedly "stirred up, by way of remembrance," to such duties as they have before been instructed in. Alas! in what a sad dilemma are multitudes of professed Christians! They are habitually unclean, through indulged lusts and unrepented sins, and cannot approach the Lord's table without a presumptuous profanation: yet in staying away they neglect "their bounden duty and service," and virtually confess that they have no part in Christ, but are liable to bear the load of their iniquity, and to be cut off by the righteous judgment of God; not regarding this outward sign, as representing the great salvation itself. [illegible] becomes their burden [illegible] every importunate [illegible] opened for sin and for uncleanness;" and, having been "washed, and sanctified, and justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God," they may approach with comfort to partake of that sacred feast. But men should reflect, that if they are not prepared for the Lord's table, they are not fit for death and judgment; and that it is very ungrateful for Christians to neglect the command of him who loved us and gave himself for our sins; and with his dying lips said to his disciples, "Do this in remembrance of me."—Scott.

CHAP. X. SILVER TRUMPETS.—That the trumpet might not "give an uncertain sound," they are directed, if only the princes and elders were to meet, to blow but one of the trumpets; less should serve to call them together, who ought to be examples of forwardness in any thing that is good; but, if the body of the people were to be called together, both the trumpets must be sounded, that they might be heard at the greater distance. In allusion to this, they are said to be blessed that "hear the joyful sound," Ps. lxxxix. 15, that is, that are invited and called upon to wait upon God in public ordinances, Ps. cxxii. 1. And the general assembly at the great day will be summoned by "the sound of the archangel's trumpet," Matt. xxiv. 31. 1. For the "journeying of the camps;" to give notice when each squadron must move, for no man's voice could reach to give the word of command: soldiers with us that are well disciplined, may be exercised by beat of drum. When the trumpets were blown for this purpose they must "sound an alarm," ver. 5, a broken, quivering, interrupted sound, which was proper to excite and encourage the minds of the people in their marches against their enemies; whereas a continued, equal sound was more proper for the calling of the assembly together; ver. 7, yet, when the people were called together to deprecate God's judgments, we find an alarm sounded, Joel ii. 1. At the first sounding Judah's squadron marched, at the second Reuben's, at the third Ephraim's, at the fourth Dan's, ver. 5, 6. And some think that this was intended to sanctify their marches; for thus were proclaimed by the priests, who were God's mouth to the people, not only the divine orders given them to move, but the divine blessing upon them in all their motions. He that hath ears, let him hear, that "God is with them of a truth." King Abijah valued himself and his army very much upon this, 2 Chron. xiii. 12, "God himself is with us for our Captain, and his priests with sounding trumpets." 2. For the animating and encouraging of their armies, when they went out to battle, ver. 9. "'If ye go to war, blow with the trumpets,' signifying thereby your appeal to Heaven for the decision of the controversy, and your prayer to God to give you victory, [illegible] will own this his own institution, and 'ye shall be remembered before your God.'" God will take notice of this sound of the
